Returns From the Front

Sergt. Stewart Stout was a caller at The Times office Thursday, Stewart is home from France and after doing his bit in the trenches. He has a scar four inches long on his left cheek and a bad wound in his head. He looks well, and despite what he has come through is anxious to go back to the fight, but apparently the authorities think he has done enough, and he gets his discharge on the 22nd of January. Stewart left Port Elgin to take a situation in the civil service, in the Dept. of Interior, Ottawa, several years ago. When the war broke out he enlisted with the Eighth Canadian Mounted Rifles. After over a year of training he finally landed in the front line trenches, serving for three months when he was wounded by a rifle grenade. Sergt. Stout will take up his former duties at Ottawa after he has had a rest. He says that the spirit of the allied soldiers is splendid. They live and fight as one man, are happy and anxious to be into the fight. While Stewart is glad he is home again he regrets that his wounds have rendered him unfit for farther service.

PTE. JAMES SALEMAN

The Times prints this week the first of its photographs of soldiers in this district who are in training in England or in France. The plan was outlined in last week's issue, and several families have taken advantage of it already.

Pte. James Saleman of Port Elgin enlisted with the 160th battalion. He is 19 years of age, and was employed with the Stevens-Hepner Co. He is the eldest son of Mrs. Amy Saleman, who with her two young sons and little daughter, live here.

News in General

Mr. J. W. Elliott of Toronto, was home with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Elliott, for a few days.

Mr. Otto Klein, Walkerton, is improving after a very serious attack of la grippe.

Mr. and Mrs. McVinnie of Aberdour, spent the Christmas holidays with the latter's sister Mrs. W. C. Thompson, of 12th con. Sullivan.—Chesley Enterprise.

Mr. J. Durward of the Kincardine Monumental works, was in town on Friday, after spending a holiday with friends at Aberdour.

W. Cumming a former Port Elgin young man, is visiting here just now. He has a half section at Demaine, Sask. where he is doing well and improving his holdings yearly.

Capt. Cliff Schell, now at the Canadian Military School in England, remembers The Times with New Year greetings. Cliff is connected with the 201st battalion.

Pte. Harry Gilbert of the 166th battalion, has been transferred to the 160th where he will have the association of the Port Elgin lads and his brother Maurice.

Manager Stafford, of Saugeen Electric Light Co., has men engaged installing a 150 horse power boiler at the plant. This will take care of any break-downs or floods at the dam

Mr. John Clark, of Havre, Montana; writing under date of Dec 27th. says. "Find enclosed order for $2 for Times for 1917. We are having very cold weather here. It was 40 below zero this morning. Best wishes to all old friends."

Good Roads Douglas was elected by acclamation as Reeve of Hepworth. If it were not for Dennis Izzard of Port Elgin this old Elderslie boy would likely land the Wardenship.—Chesley Enterprise.

At the school meeting of S. S. No. 1 Saugeen, Arran and Elderslie held last week Mr. John Grant retired after several years of valuable service. The new trustee is Mr. Robert Quigley. The board now consists of Messrs. John Scott, S. A. Fleming and R. Quigley.

Frequently canvassers visit this district in the interest of daily papers, and publications of all sorts. Remember this. The Times will send for any paper for you, and protect you from any loss. Besides you have someone to complain to and make things right if not satisfactory. We also save you the cost of money order and stamps.

Bruce Township gave $2232 for Patriotic purposes in 1916. This includes the bonuses given to the recruits amounting to $847. This left $1000 to British Red Cross and $385 to the local Red Cross. The township taxes $35,659.00 were all received by Collector Kippen before the end of the year.

This is renewal time, and The Times appreciates the loyalty which is being shown to the home paper. There are many people who have subscribed for The Times since it was first published. Mr W. J. Lancaster, of Saugeen, is another who has been on the lists for 48 years.

Administration Notice

Pursuant to Statute all creditors and others having claims against the estate of Catherine Hopper late of the Village of Port Elgin in the County of Bruce, Widow, deceased, who died on the 2nd of February 1913 are hereby notified to send by post prepaid and registered or to deliver a duly verified statement of their claims to W. Burgess Port Elgin, Solicitor for Mrs. Margaret Jane Forrester and Mrs. Rose Ann Barber, the administratrices of the property of the said late Catherine Hopper, on or before the 27th day of January 1917. After the said date the said administratrices will proceed to distribute the assets of the said deceased having regard only to claims of which they shall then have received notice and will not be liable for the said assets or any part thereof to any person of whose claim they have not then received notice.

Dated at Port Elgin this 8th day of January 1917.

W. Burgess,
Solicitor for the Administratrices.

Bobby Tells of Somme Fight

Gunner Bobby Stephenson who was shell-shocked in the great Somme battle in September, and who is recuperating, in England, in writing home to his parents here says he is gaining rapidly and now weighs 210 pounds. Bobby is a six-footer and with his increased weight must be a big chap now. He says:

"I was in the Somme battle for two months, and let me say it was real war. You didn't know what minute your turn was coming. I was lucky to get out as well as I did. Talk about artillery. The morning we went after Thiepval there were seven thousand guns opened up. Talk about a noise and a hell-hole and our guns, being field artillery they were in front of all the others. We fired our gun 4,000 times during the attack. Although it only took the infantry an hour to take the place we had to make the preparation. We were firing at 1,800 yards and within an hour after we lengthened to 3,500 yards. There were two tanks up in front of our guns all night. They went over next day.

There were guns of all sizes from the small whizz-bang up to the fifteen inch, and perhaps they didn't pound the Germans. I saw some awful sights. The infantry fellows were coming back wounded, and we asked them how things were going. They said they went through everything. They got the Huns on the run and chased them right into our curtain fire. Owing to the eagerness of our boys many of them were killed and wounded because they chased the Germans so far and thus got into range of our curtain fire which was meant to catch the Huns as they retreated. Believe me, the Canadian lads can show them all how to fight. I saw one shell kill 22 horses, one mule and a couple of soldiers. You can't imagine the force of one of these big shells. Well I must ring off now. Remember me to all the boys."

Anything to Get a Dollar

Subscribers informed us last week that canvassers for London daily papers had assured them that The Times was raising its price to three dollars. The facts are as every one of our readers know, that The Times has advanced only fifty cents in 48 years. The limit of any small-town Weekly in Ontario is the $1.50 rate. If its business cannot be properly conducted on that rate, then it will be a case of close up shop. We have never had large competitors take so much notice of us before, and we believe it is a deliberate plan on the part of the canvassers to harm The Times in order to sell their dailies. If the management of these concerns will countenance such deception, is not any home better off without such papers? We thank our friends for reporting the deception to us so promptly.

What It Feels Like to be In the Front Line Trenches

The Times next week will publish a letter from Frank Geddes on the "Work of the Front Line Fighter." Our readers will remember the vivid description of a big fight by Pte. Ralph Geddes when he was wounded. Next week's letter is equally well written. Watch for it.

AUCTION SALE

TOWN TOPICS

County Council meets on Tuesday 23rd

Division Court is being held here today.

Judge Klein was a visitor in town on Thursday.

Mr. Robert Irving, of Galt, was visiting with Mr. W. Baker last week.

Mr. J. Ross McGillivray of Welby, Sask., is visiting friends here.

Dr. Scanlan is laid up with a lame foot, having stepped on a rusty nail.

Pte. Van, of Southampton, is reported as seriously ill in France.

Mr. W. Goodall, of Shaunavon, is visiting friends here.

Miss Dorothy Wells has returned to her studies at Faculty, at Toronto, after a holiday at home.

Miss Elsie R. Smythe, R. N. has returned to Cleveland, after spending the holidays with her parents here.

Miss Hilda Thede is home from Central Business College at Stratford for a couple of weeks.

The first hockey match of this season takes place to night, the old rivals, Southampton coming down to Port.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Winch, of Galicia, Alberta, are visiting Mr. Johnston Winch.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Crowe have returned after a visit with their daughters in Guelph and Glencoe.

Postmaster Nicol and his family left Regina last week to spend the winter at Signal Mountain, Tennessee.

Owing to the very busy week of Secretary Wismer The Times is not able to give report of the meetings of the Board of Agriculture held last week.

Hundreds of people were in town Saturday, the meetings of the Women's Institute and Board of Agriculture being the special attraction.

Charlie Dennis and "Wibby" Wankel are great lads to find things, and return to The Times office. Last week the mittens and handkerchiefs found got to their rightful owners.

Mr. J. A. Chapman noted to the editor last week that he had been a resident of Port Elgin for 45 years, and that in his renewal for The Times it was his 44th payment.

Many friends were glad to see Mr. Jacob Stauch in town last week. "Jake" has been laid up with a broken hip for the past three months. He can walk fairly well and is improving.

The exchange sale held at Auctioneer Cavin's office was quite well attended. There were quite a number of articles offered, and everything sold out. The scheme is proving a good one for the people to buy and sell.

The tugs which laid up for the season here reported by Lightkeeper Lowry are the John Logie, R. H. Dobson, Douglas M. and Charlie Jones. Lights closed on the 16th of December, when navigation also closed.

The attendances during the week of prayer were very encouraging. Good meetings were held in the Mennonite, Baptist. Evangelical and Methodist churches. Prayer was also observed in the Presbyterian church each night except Friday.

The following officers of A. O. U. W. for 1917 were elected at regular meeting December 22nd. M. W., T. B. McBride; Foreman, Ed. Fisher; Financier, Jos. A. Thomson; Treasurer, J. J. George; Recorder, T. B. McBride; Overseer, Blair Robertson; Auditors, E. Roy Bayles and A. F. George.

A report was current in Port Elgin on Saturday that the Grand Trunk would cut off the noon train giving only one out in the morning and one in at night, owing to lack of engines and train crews. The Times called up Mr. Cameron, G. T. R. agent, who said he had heard nothing official, and believed that the cutting off of trains only applied where towns were served by two roads.

The Saugeen Electric Light Co. through their manager, Mr. Stafford, very kindly installed and will furnish light free of charge for the Red Cross tea rooms. Mr. Kennedy contributed the bulbs. Manager Stafford says: "Burn all the light needed for Patriotic purposes. After that burn them out." Then don't forget the tea rooms are open every Saturday afternoon from 3 to 7 p. m.

Fire Chief Chapman Gets Fine Pair of Gloves

On Friday night the firemen met for roll-call and general business Chief Chapman presided, and after providing for W. Sparks to take the vacancy caused by removal of J. W. Dougherty he pointed out that the year had passed without a fire or a dollar lost. He warned the men to ever remember that they were firemen and to respond promptly.

Chief Chapman said prevention was the great thing these days. Every citizen should see that he left no refuse or trifled with fire.

Following are the firemen: Hook and Ladder—Capt. J. W. Pattison, Lt. Wm. Falconer, Geo. McMurray, W. J. Campbell, W. Sparks, O. Currier, J. W. Falconer, O. Gilbert. Hose Reel 1—N. Eidt, Capt and deputy chief: J. J. George, S. Langford, Geo. Goar, R. Smith, Ed. Fisher, Sol Schrank, Wm. Hartley. Hose Reel 2—G. McLaren, Captain, J. J. Busby, A. McCullough, J. H. Kennedy, H. Strathy, W. McFadden, A. Eaton, F. R. Barber.

Secretary Falconer then read an address setting forth the good services of chief Chapman, and the fact that of the loss of $22,000,000 worth of property and 260 lives in Canada, Port Elgin had been fortunate in having shared in no way in the above, and was thankful.

N. Eidt made the presentation of the gloves and Mr. Chapman briefly thanked the men.

In the past twelve years this is the third pair of gloves Chief Chapman has been presented with.

Chesley defeated the plan to have a light and power commission.

Morris Kalbfleisch, of Detroit has been spending a few days here.

Geo. Goar went to Galt to engage in munition works for the winter.

Mrs. R. C. Crawford and Jack, are visiting in Hamilton.

Misses Lena, Gladys and Della McFadden were home from Toronto for New Year's.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Jamieson and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McKinney were holidaying at Galt a few days last week.

THE NIGHT THAT WILSON WON

(By Mary Mortimer Maxwell.)

London Daily Express Special Correspondent, under Chicago date writes as follows to the Express:

"Vote for Schmitz!" This is the legend which has adorned a motor car in which I have been touring the various polling places to-day. Also, I ate oyster stew for luncheon in a restaurant called "The Berlin," in the windows of which I was informed that within I should find the best German cooking.

No! I haven't been working for Schmitz, who is running for some city office in Chicago and whose name is found on the same ballot paper as that of Charles E. Hughes, the Republican candidate for President of the United States. I have merely been out in the enemy country—among the Germans, and the way to get into that country, I found, was to go with the Republicans on their rounds, for in the enemy country they were voting the Republican ticket.

WITH THE ENEMY.

In the State of Illinois the women have voted to-day for the President of their choice. This is one of the reasons I came to Chicago for this important day, the other reason being that I wanted to get into the enemy country and obtain some idea of the German vote, and why it was going, as prophesied, for Charles Evans Hughes, a Welsh Baptist American. During the past week I have been in several hyphenated cities of the Middle West. In one of these cities I had a queer experience. My hostess told me that she had telephoned to the various newspapers in the town to say I was her guest, and that these newspapers were to send reporters to interview me, one of them, she added, laughing, being "an out-and-out pro-German paper." That morning a delightful young woman called and handed me the card of her paper.

"Are you the pro-German who was to be set on to me?" I asked.

"Yes," answered the young woman. "My paper's supporting Hughes."

In the midst of our interview another young woman was shown in, and the first reporter, who seemed to be a friend of the second one, said by way of introduction:

"You'll like her, I know. Her paper is pro-Ally."

"Yes," said the second young woman, "my prayer is supporting Wilson!"

HUGHES—AND WHY.

The little incident led me to investigate, and during subsequent days of search and inquiry I have found little reason to doubt the assertions of these two charming American girls who earn their living by interviewing the various "celebrities" who visit their town.

Down in one of the voting precincts, I have just been talking with a man who would, I suppose, be called a Republican "Ward Boss." He seemed a kindly, decent sort of man of the common people. I asked him why he was so strong for Hughes and so bitter against Wilson. Said he: "Wilson didn't take care of the Catholics down in Mexico, and he insulted one of their leading prelates. I'm a Catholic, and I feel it."

"Are you Irish?" I asked. "No. My father and mother were born in Germany, but I was born in Virginia."

"Tell me," I said confidentially, "how you, an American of German descent, felt when the Lusitania was sunk?"

"Glad of it! The Germans are fools that they don't sink more ships like it. Very kind of Bernstorff, I say, to warn the Americans off; and if they went, it was their own lookout."

"Do you want Germany to win?" I asked. "I want to see a draw and nobody win," was his answer.

I went on to another precinct and asked another leader why he was working for Hughes.

"Because," said he, "Wilson has sold us to Great Britain. He's the tool of the British."

"What about his notes to Germany and doing nothing else in that line?" I asked. "I wasn't talking about Germany!" was the answer.

In Chicago, as I have said, the women are voting to-day, and I wish that every English anti-Suffragist could see them vote. Husbands and wives are going to the poll together, the husbands standing aside, hat in hand, while their wives go into the little polling booths to mark their ballots.

"MOTHER" AT THE POLL.

Charming-looking women have come to the poll accompanied by their little sons or daughters, and the children have stood at the door or been taken in charge by one of the city officials, while "mummy" voted. Women have brought their babies in perambulators, and husbands have minded the perambulators while wives polled. I held a baby in my arms for one poor woman who went in and voted. "How did you vote?" I asked her when she returned and relieved me of the fascinating baby.

"For Wilson," she said. "Why?" I asked. "He kept us out of war! It's terrible over there where the war is!"

"Yes," I answered, sadly. "It's terrible over there. I come from there." Then we talked, and she explained that though she did not want her own country to join in the war, she was for the Allies, because Germany had sunk merchant ships with innocent babes in them. She voted for Wilson, she said, not only because he kept her country out of war, but because Hughes was supported by the Germans, and the Kaiser wanted Hughes to win.

A CANADIAN SOLDIER SAYS

"Tell my friends, if they want to help me, to send some Zam-Buk. The boys here say it is very good, and it is much in demand." This is an extract from a letter received from Pte. J. R. Smith of "The Princess Pats" in France.

There is certainly nothing so good as Zam-Buk for the accidents and ailments incidental to a soldier's life. It is splendid for all kinds of sores, blisters, burns and cuts, and it is equally good for frost bites, chilblains, cold cracks and chapped hands. Nothing ends pain and heals so quickly, and being antiseptic, an application of Zam-Buk to a wound as soon as sustained, will prevent all danger of blood-poisoning.

If you want to send your soldier friend something he is sure to appreciate—put a box or two of Zam-Buk in your next parcel.

All druggists, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. 50c. box, 3 for $1.25.

ZAM-BUK

The Shorter Term.

The burglar had just begun his term and was assigned to work in the broom factory. Near him was an oldish man who studied him intently and seemed to be awaiting an opportunity to say something. It came while the overseer was at the ice-water tank.

"How long are you in for?" he whispered.

"Twelve years," replied the newcomer.

The veteran looked around nervously and thrust a letter into the burglar's hand.

"I'm in for life," he said. "Mail this when you get out."—Johnson's Smoke Rings.

INVISIBLE WRITING.

A Novel Experiment On Ordinary Paper.

Invisible writing smacks of hidden treasure and exciting adventures; it has a fascination that appeals to almost every one. Even if you see no way in which to make use of it you enjoy experimenting with it.

Here is a way that is not commonly known: Soak a sheet of ordinary writing paper in a basin of clean water until it is thoroughly wet. Then get a piece of glass and, after washing it clean, place the wet sheet of writing paper on it, smoothing out all wrinkles and being careful to see that the paper firmly adheres to the glass. Get a sheet of dry writing paper and place it on the wet sheet. If you have followed directions carefully you have a piece of clean glass with a sheet of wet writing paper firmly adhering to it, over which you have spread a dry sheet of writing paper.

Write on the dry paper with a well sharpened lead pencil, using considerable pressure. After you have finished remove the top sheet of paper and you will find an exact copy of your writing on the wet paper. Place this wet sheet in a cool place to dry. You will be surprised to find that the writing has entirely disappeared after the sheet has been exposed to the air a few minutes. You can be sure that no one, unless he knows the secret, can read what you have written. To make the writing visible soak the paper for a few moments in a basin of clean water.—Youth's Companion.

Two Visiting Cards

In 1844 when M. de Lagrene was sent under Louis Philippe as Minister extraordinary to China the courtesy of the ambassador greatly impressed the Chinese statesmen, particularly their "doyen." After the negotiations had been completed and M. de Lagrene was ready to embark a delegation brought him a great roll of paper. The ambassador seeing this parcel at once thought this was a present, knowing Chinese methods, but to his surprise they started to unroll the cylinder, which extended to about 50 meters of paper, over 162 feet. Then he learned that it was the visiting card of the "doyen." In returning his modest little bristol board the humiliated ambassador added a few words, which read, "The ambassador of France regrets that he is able to offer only these simple words to your excellence."—Exchange.

DOING THEIR BIT.

Loyal Women's Record Knitting for Soldiers.

Mrs. J. D. McCulah, con. 16, Bosanquet, has been keeping track of the knitting done by some of our older women, for the boys at the front, and the following is a record of the names of some of them with the work they have accomplished:

Up to the end of August, 1916, Mrs. Nerton Bardiner, Brockville, over 79 years of age has knit 56 pairs socks, 29 helmets, 15 pairs wristlets, 3 long mufflers and 1 cholera band.

Mrs. Mary Ward, 1 Chester St., London, 87 years of age, has knit nearly 100 pairs of socks up to the present.

Mrs. M. C. Reynolds, of Goderich, though totally blind and in her eightieth year has knit more than 125 pairs of socks in the last 12 months, averaging 3 pairs a week.

Mrs. E. Larkin, 158 Clarence Street, London, has knitted more than 24 pairs of socks since a year ago last October. Along with the socks Mrs. Larkin sends messages of good cheer to "Our Boys in Khaki."

Mrs. Tomlinson, Brantford, has finished her 90th pair and is now finishing the century number.

Mrs. James Aiken, Sarnia, 84 years of age, has just finished 34 pairs and expects to keep on at the good work till the end of the war.

Mrs. Elizabeth Fraser, Middlesex Co., has knitted 80 pairs, and is still at it.

Mrs. Mary O'Neil, Kerwood, another lady over eighty, is practising her skilful hand of fingers at flying the needles.

Another lady Mrs. J. T. Emigh, Blyth, now deceased, had knit 125 pairs.

An Ingersoll lady, Miss Baikie, an invalid, confined to the house for twelve years, and to her own room for five years, has knit more than 300 pairs in the last year and eight months. Who can beat her?

Miss Ellen Dier, a former resident of Forest, now of Springdale, Conn., has knit over 66 pairs besides mittens and wristlets.

WINTER WEATHER HARD ON LITTLE ONES

Our Canadian winters are extremely hard on the health of little ones. The weather is often so severe that the mother cannot take her little one out for an airing. The consequence is that baby is confined to overheated, badly ventilated rooms; takes colds and becomes cross and peevish. Baby's Own Tablets should be given to keep the little one healthy. They regulate the stomach and bowels and prevent or cure colds. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

UNIVERSAL TONGUE.

American Indians Had a Language All Could Know.

"The problem of a universal language, the need of which has been realized in this war," says a Cambridge professor, "was really solved centuries ago by the savage inhabitants of the Western world.

Should an Indian from northern Alaska go to Patagonia, he could by means of this universal language converse with his southern brethren almost as easily as he could with his neighbors at home, that would also be the case if he visited Central America or met the tribesmen of Western prairies and mountains.

When this language was invented no one knows, but every Indian learns it in addition to his own. Recently two chiefs of different tribes met in the Geographical Society rooms in Washington and held a conversation that lasted nearly three hours, and yet neither one knew a word of the other's language.

This universal language is, of course, made up of signs. For example, if an Indian is passing through a strange country and sees other Indians at a distance, he makes the "peace sign"; that is, he holds up his blanket by two corners so that it covers his whole figure. The same thought is expressed by extending the hands, palms outward, slightly inclined from the face.

Then there are the abstract signs by which these "savages" can express their thoughts with regard to the Great Spirit, heaven, good, evil, life and death, sickness, health, riches and poverty. Life is expressed by drawing an imaginary thread from the mouth, and death by chopping this thread off.

Another sign for death is to hold the tips of the fingers of one hand against the palm of the other, and let them gradually slip downward, and at last drop beneath the palm.

Most white people think that the Indian word of greeting, "How," is merely the abbrevation of the question, "How are you?" But that is not so. The word is really "aou," which means "brother" or "friend." So when he comes up and growls out his seemingly inquisitive "How," he is not asking after your health, but telling you that he is a friend.

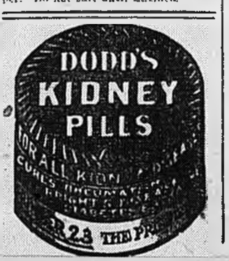
Secret of "Chips."

The secret of delicious crisp Saratoga chips is first to slice them as thin as paper, letting them drop into a pan of cold water. Take them from the water and lay them on a cloth to drain; then drop them into boiling fat. When they are a golden brown, skim them from the fat and drain them on a piece of brown paper. Do not salt until finished.



Knee Joint Stiff Three Years

CURED BY NERVILINE

"Anyone would marvel at my recovery, writes Mr. Leonard Lotham, a young man well known about Chatham." I had inherited a rheumatic tendency through my mother's family, and in my early days suffered frightfully. About three days ago the pain and stiffness settled in my left knee joint. I was lame and walked with a very distinct limp. Nerviline was brought to my notice and I rubbed it into the stiff joint four or five times a day. It dispelled every vestige of pain, reduced the swelling, took out the stiffness and gave me the full use of my limb again. I don't believe there is a pain-relieving remedy, not a single liniment that can compare with Nerviline. I hope every person with pains, with sore back, with lameness, with lumbago, with neuralgia—I do hope they will try out Nerviline, which I am convinced will quickly and permanently cure them."

If Nerviline wasn't a wonderful painless remedy, if Nerviline didn't quickly relieve, if Nerviline wasn't known to be a grand cure for all rheumatic conditions, it wouldn't have been so largely used as a family remedy for the past forty years. No better, stronger, or more soothing liniment made. 25c. per bottle; sold by any dealer, anywhere.

New Style Life Belt.

A new style of life preserver, recently patented, and described in the December Popular Mechanics Magazine, is designed to keep the wearer in an upright position in the water under all circumstances. It consists of an ordinary cork lifebelt to which is attached a combination breast piece and chin rest. These, like the belt, are made of cork, in sections, covered and hinged together by canvas. The chin piece is so attached to the upper part of the breast that it serves as a headrest and at the same time allows the wearer to bend forward or backward.

In order to make his meaning clear, the judge said:

"Listen, witness! Assume this inkstand to be three feet across the top this way and three feet that way and three feet in height, what should you call it?"

"Well, your honor," said the witness, without hesitation, "I should say it was some inkstand."—Public Health Journal.

The Cat and the Owl.

"Metaphysics," said a clergyman, "is a subject that always make one think of the cat and the owl.

"A cat, you know, once set forth in quest of happiness. She wandered up, she wandered down. She questioned this animal and she questioned that. Finally, wrapped in meditation in a tree, she perceived an owl.

"'Owl,' said the cat, 'tell me, most wise bird, where happiness is to be found.'

"'In meditation,' the owl replied. 'Meditation alone is the true secret of happiness.'

"'But,' said the cat, 'on what subject am I to meditate?'

"'On the subject,' the owl answered, 'which has occupied the race of owls since the beginning of time, namely, which came first, the owl or the egg, for, while the owl comes from the egg, so also does the egg come from the owl.'"

A SUGGESTIVE COINCIDENCE

An interesting fact has developed in connection with the Patriotic Fund. It has been found that, broadly speaking, the sums granted from the Fund, as supplementary to the separation allowance and assigned pay, bring the total income of families on the Fund, in each province, to a parity with the cost of living as estimated by the Dominion Government's Labor Bureau. This result goes to confirm the substantial accuracy of the Labor Bureau's estimates, and also indicates that the administrators of the Patriotic Fund in each province are keeping their grants reasonably close to the actual wants of the people dependent on it.

Naturally, the cost of living increases as we move westward, and therefore the grants from the Fund increase also. For illustration, the average grant in Prince Edward Island is about $10 per month, while in British Columbia it is nearly $20. The average over the Dominion is about $16. It is estimated that the degree of comfort ensured by the Patriotic Fund is practically the same in each Province, notwithstanding the difference in the average grants.

An Efficient Restorer.

It could hardly have been caused by age—the man had been bald-headed, very bald-headed, for years. There had been a time when some of the innumerable preparations calculated to prevent the falling out of hair had been tried, but his hair had ceased to fall only when not even a fringe remained.

But the man was contented. He wore a wig—not a small, tight-fitting one, but a large, bushy one. But one day on the street, as a wind caught away the man's hat, his wig was snatched, too. Bareheaded, indeed the owner made a futile grab, then waited while a small boy gave chase.

"Sonny," said the man, as he gratefully rewarded the boy, "you're the quickest hair restorer I have ever found."—The Christian Herald.

Are You Intoxicated?

The question is not as impertinent as it sounds. You may be a real teetotaler and yet be "intoxicated"—that is, poisoned by the gases that come from imperfect digestion. The products of food putrefaction are taken up by the blood and often poison the entire system. Cut out meats and starchy foods for a while. Eat Shredded Wheat with milk or cream for breakfast; eat it with stewed fruits and green vegetables for dinner or supper. It will cure auto-intoxication and make a new man of you. RUSSIAN AND TEUTON BOTH MADE GAINS

Ally Forces Took Several Villages in Wallachia, Roumania.

LOST IN LOBRUDIA

That Province Now Practically Cleared by Mackensen.

London Cable.—The Teutonic allies have gained another considerable success in the capture, in Northern Dobrudja of the towns of Matchin and Jijila, on the eastern bank of the Danube, opposite the important town of Braila, and forcing the Russians to a point just south of the Danube where the river bends and separates Dobrudja from Bessarabia. Dobrudja is now practically clear of the Russo-Roumanians.

In Moldavia and Northern Wallachia the invaders are keeping up their gains both northward and eastward from the Transylvanian Alps region. At several points in the centre of the lines in Northern Wallachia, however, the Russians and Roumanians are tenaciously fighting to hold them back, and according to Petrograd, in the region southwest of Focsani and near the River Rimnik the Teutonic allies were defeated, the defenders taking several villages and capturing six officers, 206 men, five cannon and eight machine guns.

RUSSIANS TAKE BACK TRENCHES

"On the Moldavian frontier the enemy twice assumed the offensive on the sector extending from the village of Kotumba to as far as the valley of the River Suloba, and south beyond that point, but everywhere was repulsed. In this region we regained a portion of the trenches lost by us yesterday on one of the heights.

"On the Roumanian front the Roumanians are conducting attacks north of the Kazino River, eight versts east of the Hungarian frontier. The enemy in the morning attacked the Roumanians east of Sopchan, on the upper reaches of the River Suchitza, but was beaten back and pursued by cavalry.

"The enemy withdrew in a westerly direction. During the day he resumed his attacks with superior forces and pressed back the Roumanians to the former position.

"Under cover of a drum-fire bombardment with shells containing asphyxiating gas, the enemy in close formation attacked along the railway southwest of Focsani, a portion of one of our regiments. Being met with our well directed fire the enemy hastily retired to his trenches and did not attempt a further attack.

"One of our rifle regiments took by assault the village of Gollanka, southwest of the River Rimnik, and captured six officers, two surgeons, 206 men, five cannon and eight machine guns. The villages of Klovenu and Makaleni, southeast of the village of Gollanka were also captured. The enemy detachments which were occupying these villages were thrust back southward.

"In the Dobrudja the enemy throughout the day made a number of attacks in the region of Matchin. He was repulsed and hastily retired."

GERMAN VIEW OF THE REPLY

Enemy Papers Furious Over Ally Rejection.

Nothing to Expiate—Fight to a Finish.

Berlin Wireless—The German impression of the Entente's reply to the peace proposals of the Central powers was reflected to-day in a statement made to the semi-official Overseas News Agency by Dr. Hammann, who until the turn of the year was Director of the Intelligence Department of the Foreign Office. This comment was not based on the official text of the Entente's note, as thus far only the version supplied by the Havas News Agency from Paris has been received here.

Dr. Hammann, who collaborated in the important work of the Foreign Office last month, said that consideration by Germany and her allies of a peace offer dated back as far as October. At that time the intention was entertained of making an honest and sincere attempt to prevent further useless bloodshed.

Being asked as to the general impression created by the Entente reply, he said:

"If I am to express the opinion in a few words, it is this: 'Instead of taking place around a peace table, the Entente's deliberations took place in a judge's chair. Apparently the Entente forgot nothing that could possibly influence neutrals against us.'"

To-day's newspaper editorials on the Allies' reply to Germany reflected the bitterness of the writers.

"None ought to be surprised at the action of the Entente nations in rejecting peace proposals," said The Lokal Anzeiger, "but it is surprising that ten men should have signed such a document, without any foundation, a frivolous, lying document constituting the last kernel of untruth.

"It may be the people of Germany will find hope of peace between the lines. However, we consider it the sharpest refusal. It is impossible for the Entente to say plainer that peace is not wanted and negotiations are not desired—and this without laying any weight upon or knowing our conditions. We now can see that the world is full of devils. Let everyone in Germany do his utmost so that they will not succeed."

NOTHING TO EXPIATE.

London Cable — A despatch to Reuter's from Amsterdam says the Vienna newspaper comment on the Entente Allies' reply to Germany's peace proposal describes it as arrogant, and declares that the presumptuous demands for expiation, reparation and guarantees must be rejected, because the Central powers have nothing to expiate and nothing to guarantee. They add that "the blood which is still to flow will be on the head of the Entente."

"The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger considers that nobody will be shocked, because the Entente's refusal was anticipated.

"But," he adds, "every one will be surprised and shocked at the shallowness, levity for the refusal, and it is difficult to explain how ten serious men were able to affix their signatures to the document without blushing. Our answer can only be given on the battlefield."

The Vossische Zeitung says:

"All possibility of further negotiations has disappeared under this scornful reply. There is only one rejoinder, namely, warfare, until the cold steel of our arms has brought the fever temperature of our enemies down to somewhat near normal."

The Cologne Gazette's Berlin correspondent considers that no way is left open for further negotiations, and adds:

"It is not yet decided what the Government will do, but it is not improbable that Germany will again precisely define the German view direct to the neutrals."

FIGHT UNTIL ENTENTE SUES

German Press On Allies' Reply to Peace Offer.

Say Only Answer is With the Sword.

Berlin Wireless, via London.—The reply of the Entente to the peace proposals of the central powers is discussed at great length this morning by the newspapers, which base their remarks on the unofficial press version of the note, as received here from French sources. The newspapers are unanimous in saying the answer of the Entente is only what was to be expected, in view of the utterances of statesmen of the hostile nations.

The opinion is expressed that the note was addressed less to the central powers than to the people of the Entente countries and to neutrals; hence the strong declamatory language, calculated, according to the German opinion, further to inflame previous against the Teutonic allies. In particular, it is declared the section devoted to Belgium is intended expressly for the American people.

In general, the answer is regarded as the stiffest and most brusque possible, and couched in insulting and calumniating terms never before seen in any international document. All the newspapers agree that the only answer the central powers can give is with the sword, that the war must be continued until the Allies themselves ask for peace.

Only a few newspapers see even a faint hope that peace still may be attainable within a reasonable time. Curiously enough, the super-nationalist pan-German Taegliche Rundschau maintains a feeble show of optimism, saying: "The thought of peace is not quenched by this rejection." But even this utterance is qualified by the explanation that peace can come only through failure of the Entente plans of conquest and the crushing of Germany.

The Tageblatt also believes the idea of peace retains its vitality, saying: "Even though the attempt be made to bury it under a thousand arguments, peace will continue to rise up mightier than ever after every failure to achieve expected victory."

The Socialist newspaper Vorwaerts, which has been the leading peace organ of Germany for many months, still holds that the policy of attempting to find new means of terminating the war must continue, but that the defence of the country must go on without flagging. It contends that the responsibility for continuance of the war rests with the Entente.

DEMANDS ON GREECE.

Government Claims to Be Trying to Settle.

London Cable—Reuter's Athens correspondent cables the following semi-official note referring to the recent demands of the Entente Allies on the Greek Government for reparation for the losses suffered as a result of the recent clash between the Greek and Entente troops at Athens.

"The Government is considering the latest note presented by the Allied powers. Despite its desire to give another proof of its sincerity towards the Entente, certain currents of public opinion make its task difficult. The Government appears to wish to proceed rapidly with its decisions regarding the note, and to endeavor to combine the safeguarding of the vital interests of the country with maintenance of the traditional friendship between Greece and the Entente, and hopes the latter will assist its efforts."

THE MOHMANDS MAKE TROUBLE

Indian Frontier Tribe Has Been Acting Ugly,

But Are Punished, and Death Fence Placed.

Peshawar, Northwest Frontier Province, India Cable— (Correspondence of the Associated Press)—The Mohmands, a nominally independent and ever-turbulent tribe, whose country borders on administered British territory in this region, having made themselves generally objectionable during the past few months, have come in for considerable attention at the hands of the British recently. The latest phase of the punishment being meted out to-day, when thousands of troops engaged in a drive, which resulted in the rounding up for internment of 400 Mohmands, who were scattered about in villages just inside the provincial domains.

The Mohmands have always been among the most troublesome of the tribesmen living in the independent territory between the northwest frontier province and Afghanistan. A year ago they made raids and committed murders in the Peshawar district. As a penalty they were forbidden to enter the province to trade. Angered by this they began to threaten war, and several fights actually did take place.

At this time there was a large number of Mohmands living in British territory. After the declaration of hostilities by their brothers at home, most of those Government guests were sent across the border. Sir George Roos-Keppel, chief commissioner for the northwest frontier provinces, then put up along the Mohmand border a line of barbed wire entanglements, intersected with strongly guarded blockhouses. The Government of India at the same time imported a number of airplanes, the first ever seen in this part of the world, and manned them with experienced aviators, fresh from the western theatre of war.

For a time these new methods of warfare puzzled and worried the Mohmands, and they kept to their hills, but recently they became more bold, and, under cover of night, succeeded in cutting the barbed wire at one or two places, and committing some small thefts. Then it was that Sir George Roos-Keppel played his trump card, by ordering the installation of a live wire, which has been strung along the whole Mohmand frontier, a distance of about seventeen miles. The fact that this wire carried 4,500 volts, and meant instant death to anyone touching it, has become known to the tribesmen, and at present they are contenting themselves with holding pow-wows in the mountains and making threats.

TOOK 582,723 FOES IN YEAR

Total Captures by Allies During 1916.

Italy Doing Her Share of the Struggle.

On the French Front in France, Cable— During the course of last year, according to authoritative figures, 78,500 Germans were captured on the French front by the French and 40,800 by the British, while in Serbia and Macedonia the Entente allies took 11,173 Bulgarians and Turks prisoner.

During the same period the Italians made prisoners of 32,250 Austrians, while the Russians captured more than 400,000 Germans and Austrians. The total number of prisoners taken by the allies in 1916 was 582,723.

2,179 ITALIAN SHELL FACTORIES.

Rome Cable—From thirty to forty-three Austrian divisions are kept engaged along the Italian front, says an official communication issued to-day. The statement adds that since Italy entered the war she has conquered 1,200 square miles of territory, shortening her war front from 500 to 375 miles, with an aggregate of 1,875 miles of entrenched lines.

War material is being manufactured by 2,170 factories, employing 469,000 workers, including nearly 72,000 women.

The Austrian prisoners now number 85,000, the statement asserts.

NORSE COAL EMBARGO.

Papers Claim Country is Acting Correctly.

London Cable—A Copenhagen despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company says that most of the Norwegian papers have attacked the British Minister at Christiania in connection with the embargo on coal proclaimed by Great Britain.

The Norske Intelligenssedler reports that the Norwegian reply has been handed the British representative, and leaves no doubt that Norway is loyally maintaining the export prohibitions regarding fish and other goods. The Gazette says there is a great quantity of coal in Norway and no prospect of a shortage.

Berlin, Jan. 4, via Sayville.— The Overseas News Agency says that in future delivery of coal to Norway will be permitted by the British only in case Norwegian ships carry coal to Italy and France at fixed freight rates.

ALLIES FOIL TEUTON PLANS

Dutch Papers On Effect of Entente Note.

Scheme to Divide Them Falls Flat.

London Cable—Commenting on the Entente's reply to the German peace proposal, the Telegraaf, according to a Reuter Amsterdam despatch, says:

"Germany's manoeuvre to divide her enemies has completely failed. The Entente's note bears witness to unanimity and solidarity only possible on the basis of the holiest belief in the justice of their cause. The entire neutral world, with President Wilson at its head, must now admit that it is impossible for the Entente to enter into negotiations with Germany while she refuses to unconditionally repair the injustice of her invasion of Belgium."

The Tijd says. "The German calculation that public opinion in the neutral states would turn in favor of the central powers as a result of the German overtures appears likely to prove false owing to the clever tactics of the allies. The contention of the German press, however, that the Entente does not want peace is incorrect. It is impossible to express an opinion of German peace conditions which nobody knows. The burden of responsibility has shifted; it is now Germany's duty to disclose her conditions."

QUIT SALONIKI.

London Daily Mail Says Force There Useless.

London Cable—The London Daily Mail, in a long editorial this morning condemning the Saloniki expedition, and, in effect demanding its recall, declares that the expedition was notoriously planned by civilians in defiance of military traditions.

"It was too late and too weak to save Serbia," the editorial says. "It has been unable to assist Roumania, and cannot harm the invaders there, because no modern army can traverse the roadless mountains between Saloniki and Roumania."

The Daily Mail contends that if the troops diverted to Saloniki had been on the western front in 1916 they might well have turned the scale there, and that Roumania then would never have been invaded.

"The expedition," continued the newspaper, "is a continual strain on resources—men, shipping and munitions. By keeping the Balkan force too large for defence and too weak for attack we seem to be playing the enemy's game. A much smaller force would suffice to hold Saloniki, if that is desirable . . . German reserves are not infinite, but they are large enough to render it dangerous for us to waste a single man. Throughout 1916 Saloniki has been such a burden as Gallipoli in 1915. Our soldiers and the Allied soldiers did not commit this folly, and they would be delighted if it were undone, as far as any mistake can be undone."

SHIPS SUNK BY U-BOATS.

London Cable—Lloyd's announces that the Norwegian steamer Britannic, 2,289 tons, has been torpedoed. Her crew was landed. The shipping agency also announces that the following have been sunk: The British steamers Bay Craig and Holly Branch; the Norwegian steamers, Ellik and Erica; the French sailing ship Aconcagua, and the Swedish steamer Crossbridge.

TO VIOLATE SWITZERLAND

France Fears Germany Plans a New Raid

In Effort to Turn Italian and French Lines.

(By Fred B. Pitney)

Paris Cable— France fears a dash by the German armies across neutral Switzerland, in a desperate attempt to turn the French and Italian lines, and relieve the pressure of the allied forces on the two fronts.

For months the possibility of an invasion of Swiss territory has been talked of in Paris as a possibility. To-day, in the opinion of an influential section of the French press, it has become a probability.

Germany has called to the colors another class of recruits which will reinforce her active armies by more than half a million men. With her military forces now at their maximum she is preparing for her supreme effort of the war.

Of one thing France is certain: that under Field Marshal von Hindenburg Germany is mustering all her resources for the decisive stroke and, if the past is to be a guide for the future, she will deal this blow with the same lightning-like speed with which she launched her legions across neutral Belgium in the opening campaign of 1914.

This view is expressed in La Victoire this morning by Gustave Herve, the famous French publicist, who devotes his leading article to the subject.

Britain must take over a still greater portion of the line now held by the French. M. Herve declares in order to free a sufficient body of French troops to permit the formation of an "army of manoeuvre"—a mobile force which will be ready to reinforce any part of the west front line menaced by the German attack.

M. Herve also points out that Germany has mobilized the classes of 1919, giving her six hundred thousand additional men, while her civil mobilization will liberate a force variously estimated at from 500,000 to 2,000,000. This force, while it will be used chiefly for service at the rear, will free a corresponding number of younger troops for the purpose of the first line.

"At what point will they strike?" M. Herve asks. "Hindenburg's pet objective in Russia," the article continues, "but a grand offensive on that front is out of the question until April owing to weather conditions."

STILL FOR PEACE.

Vorwaerts Wants Wilson to Work On Entente.

Berlin Cable—The Vorwaerts, returning to the discussion of the situation created by the rejection of the peace offer, argues that so long as neither side is able to gain a decisive victory the only way out is through peace by compromise and understanding, and it remains the task of the neutrals to find a suitable moment for this.

The Vorwaerts further says:

"Now that President Wilson has enlisted his own and his country's authority in behalf of peace he cannot abandon his efforts as hopeless, and he has the best prospects for realizing his purpose within a reasonable time if he knows how to avail himself of the growing peace sentiments of the European peoples. If he is willing to exert pressure, this he must direct against the allies, not the Central powers, and it would be a meritorious act if he could convince the Entente that even the most peaceful part of the German people cannot accept them as judges.

"Hatred, revenge and greed of conquest are not fitted to establish a new international legal status upon which the temple of peace may rest securely, and the entire German people reject the Entente powers in the office of judge arrogated by them."

A hypocrite is a man who remembers the Sabbath day and lets the other six take care of themselves.

GERMANS WILL STATE TERMS FOR A PEACE

Will Make Conditions Definitely Known to U. S. President.

RAPS BERNSTORFF

Senator Lodge Attacks Hun Ambassador for His Course.

Amsterdam Cable.—The Frankfurter Zeitung publishes the report of a speech delivered by former Hungarian Premier, Count Julius Andrassy, on New Year's day. The Count says: "If the Allies reject our offer of peace only because, as they assert, our offer is not honorably meant, and is only a manoeuvre of war, and if they say they cannot enter negotiations before they know the conditions, they can learn them from President Wilson, to whom they will be communicated. Peace does not appear immediately near; therefore, we must battle further for peace with all our strength and make it impossible for our enemies to prevent steps in the direction of peace." From Andrassy's speech it appears as if some sort of communication of the alleged terms will now be made to Wilson. The Frankfurter Zeitung says the Allies' refusal arises apparently from the fatal error of supposing the present position is only temporary and does not correspond with the actual relative strength of the belligerents. It concludes by saying: "Nothing remains for Germany but to break open the door of peace with the sword end."

TIMED TO AID GERMANY.

Washington Cable.—After another debate on Senator Hitchcock's resolution to have the Senate endorse President Wilson's peace note, during which Senator Lodge attacked the German Ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, for having made a public statement approving, the Senate to-day again deferred action and will take up the question again to-morrow.

Senator Lodge's open mention of the German envoy's name, which the Senator said he knew was contrary to unwritten rules of Senate proceedings, was the sensation of a speech in which the Senator declared that although he accepted in full faith President Wilson's statement that the note was in no way suggested by our associated with the peace proposals of the German Allies, nevertheless, he believed such statements as the German Ambassador's had added to the opinion that the note was timed and designed to aid Germany in making the peace terms she desires.

On the ground that the Senate as the only legislative body in the world having a voice in international relations should move slowly and not take any action which might afterwards become of aid to one set of belligerents, Senator Lodge led the opposition to the resolution in which he was supported by other Republicans, among them Senator Gallinger, the Republican leader, and Senator Borah.

Senator Hitchcock led the fight for his resolution in which he was supported by Senator Smith, of Georgia, in the contention that an endorsement of the President was no more than an act in the interest of humanity.

While the Senate resumes the debate to-morrow it will also have before it a substitute resolution by Senator Gallinger, which merely would say: That the Senate of the United States, in the interests of humanity and civilization, expresses the sincere hope that peace between the warring nations of Europe may be consummated at an early date."

The Hitchcock resolution would say: "That the Senate approves and strongly endorses the action taken by the President in sending the diplomatic notes of Dec. 18, to the nations now engaged in war suggesting and recommending that these nations state the terms upon which peace might be discussed."

Senator Lodge will continue his arguments to-morrow.

MAKES APOLOGY.

Col. Bruce Explains His Course to Col. Armour.

London Cable—We learn that Col. Herbert A. Bruce, author of the Baptie report has sent to Surgeon-Colonel Donald Armour a letter of explanation, apparently intended as an apology, concerning his (Bruce's) criticism of Armour's work. Colonel Bruce reported that an operation had been wrongly performed by Armour, whereas the operation indicated had never been performed. The Baptie Commission investigated the matter fully, and found Col. Bruce's allegations entirely wrong.

Col. Bruce's letter to Armour states that he, Bruce, was misled by a subordinate officer, who did not follow orders.

Colonel Armour, speaking to the Canadian Associated Press to-night, said: "As a Canadian practising in London and in close touch with the medical services since the beginning of the war, I am prepared to say that the Baptie report is just what one with such experience as mine would have expected. General Jones' work has been past all praise, considering the circumstances, and for Dr. Bruce, without any military experience, or knowledge of military organization or military surgery, to issue a partisan report is disgraceful."

Don't burn the candle at both ends. You'll find the game isn't worth the candle.

Port Elgin should consider itself very fortunate. There were no fires in the town during 1916 and as a result no losses. The cost to the town for the volunteer firemen was but $62 50. The services of the men who respond at any hour to the hurry call are greatly appreciated by the citizens generally and The Times joins with every citizen in extending its thanks.

Occasionally one hears a sermon or a remark that the war has brought and is bringing spiritual blessings and also material blessings, but when one ponders over the losses brought about by the war doubt ensues. Think for a moment of more than five million dead, more than thirteen million maimed! Place this illimitable sea of human sorrow over against all the gains that can be enumerated, and these gains look very small.

A million women are doing men's tasks in England. They are doing the heavy work such as blacksmiths strikers, tool fettling and operating power hammers, loading trucks, working in timber yards, in motor garages, and heavy iron factories. What will be the effect of the women's work on the employment of men after the war? One thing certain, women will compete, and will win, against men in many lines of work.

The Owen Sound Sun in referring to the fact that ministers' salaries have not kept pace with the high cost of everything says ministers' salaries, like nearly everthing else, must be raised; but admits that the official raising at a church meeting, is likely to be easier than the subsequent and more substantial raising, by individual canvass. To the average man, ten cents to the church looks bigger than a dollar spent on his own pleasure. And yet many people thought the British Empire's piety would save it from war.

Mr. Ferguson the Minister of Lands and Mines, announces that the Ontario government has laid aside a million dollars to assist returned soldiers to go on the land. A scheme is to be laid out whereby they will be trained in a government school and then assisted in stocking their farms, the money to be paid back by the soldiers. It will be interesting to know just how much will be left of the million to go into stock after a training school and a staff has been in operation. The best experience a returned soldier can get, if he wants to go on land, is for the government to provide him a place for awhile with some of Ontario's successful farmers. He'll get in six months there more practical and useful experience than he can get in a training school, and best of all, he'll more likely want to stay on the land.

Oleomargarine

Last week the Board of Agriculture for Waterloo county sent a resolution to the Dominion government asking that Oleomargarine be prohibited from Canada as in the past few years. The resolution claims that the farmer is not responsible for the exorbitant price of butter, but the creameries are. Here of course, the argument enters.

The past six months there has developed a desire that oleomargarine should be allowed into Canada, the high price of butter being out of the reach of the working man and his family.

When oleomargarine was banished from sale in Canada it was caused through the fact that dishonest dealers were deceiving the people by selling it for butter and taking the butter price.

Since the war there has been a gradual demand for its return here, and now that butter is so expensive it looks as if the plea of the common people would likely be heard by the government despite the opposition of the dairy organizations. If oleomargarine is allowed sale here, the government should also fix the price and regulate the sale of it.

An interesting article concerning oleomargarine, written by John C. Kirkwood, who, by the way, was a prominent official of The London (England) Daily Mail, and as a resident of the old city, knows something of how oleo is manufactured, has been read by the Editor. He says that for more than thirty years Oleo has been used in America, and for a much longer period in England. In the United States the people use a half a billion pounds a year, while in Canada it is prohibited because of certain dairy organizations.

In itself margarine or oleomargarine is a harmless thing. It is not a fraud, nor bad, but on the other hand is a perfectly legitimate, wholesome, palatable, cleanly and nutritious article of food; and even its honest enemies are compelled to admit that in itself it is the practical equal of butter fat food, equally palatable, and that it can be made and sold for about half the price of butter.

Statements have often been made that oleomargarine is less digestible and less nutritious than butter, but such assertions do not rest upon any solid scientific knowledge. Oleomargarine digests a little more slowly than does butter, but this is of little significance, and its nutritious value in comparison with that of butter is 100 to 103—practically identical. Any prejudice concerning the use of margarine as a butter equivalent is due to sentiment, or to suspicion due to lack of knowledge; it is not due to the taste, appearance or smell of margarine, since, in regard to these things margarine and butter are practically identical and cannot readily be distinguished one from the other.

Oleomargarine is a fat food whose ingredients in other forms every family consumes more or less abundantly—in the form of roast beef, or pork, or bacon, or pastry, in which shortening enters; and in the form of milk, butter, cream or cheese; also it is the practical equivalent of butter, closely resembling it in all particulars.

In Great Britain margarine is made of nuts and milk and sells for 15 and 20 cents a pound. From the above it will be seen that oleo is a clean, wholesome, healthful food, and it can be bought for from 20 to 27 cents a pound, and unless the situation, from a living standpoint, gets easier for the working man the government will be compelled, despite the [illegible] of some of the big interests, to take down the barriers against margarine.

Women on School Boards

Two women were elected at the head of the polls at Sault Ste. Marie last week. There are many places in Ontario where women are serving to good advantage on school boards. And why shouldn't they? Our public and high schools would be cleaner, there would be more of the beautiful in flowers and garden, and what's more important, there would, if women had a hand in running things, be better educational facilities provided. Are there not more women with higher educational training in our province than there are men?

We believe that no woman would aspire to a place on a school board, without she felt she had a fair education herself On the other hand men will sometimes takes place on a school board whether they are proficient in the three R's or not.

OBITUARY

On December 20, 1916, a well known residents of Port Elgin passed away in the person of Jesse Shier. He was born in Brock Township Ont., October 30, 1838, being one of a family of fourteen, of whom two brothers and two sisters still survive Nicholas of Kirkton and Wm. of Sunderland, and Mrs. Johnston of Thessalon and Mrs. Barber of Uxbridge.

In 1863 he came to Arran Township. For a number of years, he engaged in farming in the village of Arkwright, where he was Councillor and School Trustee. Later he moved to Port Elgin and engaged in the grain business for over seventeen years. In recent years on account of ill-health he lived a more retired life. Mr. Shier was a member of the Port Elgin School Board for several years. Being of a reserved disposition he did not take an active part in public affairs. He was a staunch Conservative and a prominent member of the Methodist church. He was also a charter member of Court of Eden No. 60 C. O. F. and at the time of his death the second oldest Orangeman in Port Elgin.

He leaves to mourn his loss a widow a son and one daughter, S. A. Shier, of Clark Bros and Hughes Undertakers, Winnipeg, and Miss Mantie Victoria Shier, of the Toronto Public School Staff. His youngest son Lorne predeceased him about four years.

To Mrs. Shier and family the sympathy of many friends throughout this section of the province will be extended in their hour of bereavement.

After the Town Went Dry

Some of the chaps in the big works of the Stevens-Hepner Co. do more than make brushes and brooms. The following is a little song written by one of the boys as to how his friend felt after the 16th of September. This bit of verse goes well to the tune "When You Wore a Tulip":

I met Bill on the main street of dear old Port Elgin town,
The sun had just gone down, I saw Bill wore a frown.
I said, "what is the matter Bill, come in and I will buy".
He said, "Oh don't you know the town's gone dry."
The shock it almost killed me the town was always wet,
Those drinks we had together, Bill and I, we can't forget.

Chorus:—
When Bill would buy a bottle, a great big black bottle, of Seagram's "83",
I'd take a swallow, then you'd hear Bill holler, "Just pass that along to me".
Then Bill would whistle the Bonnie Hieland Thistle as homeward bound we went,
We'll get no more whiskey, to make us feel frisky, we'll have to drink two per cent.

Good-bye, Mother, Don't Worry!

Good-bye—trusting in God to bring him home to her safely—if that be His will.

Good-bye—trusting in you and me to see his Mother through while he, her natural support and defender, is somewhere in France, facing shot and shell for God, for right, and for native land.

In the name of Christendom, men and women, what sacrifice is this! What consecration to duty! What response to the call of the Motherland! What clarion challenge to the world to "Watch Canada!"

He goes—joy of his Mother's heart—idol of all her dreams from the day she bore him—hope, and bulwark of her declining years.

He goes—and, Heaven bless his belief in us, his people, he goes, leaving his most beloved possession to our care and protection.

He trusts us. Who will fail him? What man or woman, rich with the possession of the memory of a Mother, will fail his Mother as a reward for her sacrifice?

This trust of our soldiers is a holy legacy.

Give to the Mothers of our soldiers in the name of your mother—as your testimonial to Canadian Motherhood. Give to the Canadian Patriotic Fund. $6,000,000 must be raised in Ontario for this Fund for 1917.

Mothers, wives, and children of Canadian soldiers shall never say that their own people neglected them after their men went forward to suffer and to die.

Every case helped by the Patriotic Fund is carefully investigated. Only where assistance is really needed is assistance given. Everything humanly possible is done to avoid waste and prevent imposition.

Give as Your Own Heart Prompts You to the Patriotic Fund

Ontario is being asked to assure the Canadian Patriotic Fund that it can depend on having six million dollars in 1917 for the families of Ontario's soldiers.

Four million of these dollars must be secured from individual subscriptions. If there is no Branch of the Fund in your town or county send your subscription direct to the Head Office, Canadian Patriotic Fund, Victoria street, Ottawa.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON II January 14, 1917

John the Baptist and Jesus.—John 1: 19-34.

COMMENTARY.—I. John the Baptist's testimony concerning himself (vs. 19-28). 19. The record—The witness or testimony. John—He is called John the Baptist because of his mission as the forerunner of Jesus. An important part of his work was to preach repentance and to baptize. His title, the Baptist, distinguishes him from the apostle John. He was the son of Zacharias and Elizabeth, and a relative of Jesus (Luke 1: 35, 36). Sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem—The report of the preaching of John the Baptist had become widespread, and when it reached Jerusalem, the Jews, who constituted the religious authority in Palestine, were aroused and curious to know whether the Messiah had come. Priests, who performed the religious rites about the temple, and Levites, whose duties there were secular, were sent out to make inquiry of John the Baptist and report the findings of the Jewish leaders. Who art thou—The records do not show whether this delegation was hostile to Jesus or was seeking honestly for the truth. The preaching of John the Baptist was in severe denunciation of the sins of the leaders of the Jews, and it is not unlikely that those who asked him, "Who art thou?" were prepared to bring him to account before the Sanhedrin if they could make out a case against him. His answer, however, gave them no basis for an accusation. 20-22. He told them frankly and positively that he was not the Messiah. He had no disposition to pass himself off for what he was not in reality. Pursuing their investigation further they asked him if he was Elijah or "that prophet" who was foretold in Deut. 18;15, and he answered in the negative. Having ascertained nothing from their questioning thus far, they asked him plainly who he was. They must have been struck with his rugged, manly and fearless bearing. He was a child of the wilderness, clad in coarse garments and feeding upon the simple food that the desert afforded. He was bold from a consciousness that he was fulfilling the mission to which God had called him.

23. I am the voice...... in the wilderness—John the Baptist was not in doubt as to his mission. His conviction was clear, and he had the necessary faith and courage to do the work assigned him and to give a clear and definite answer to his questioners. He called himself the "voice" because he was bearing a divinely-inspired message to the world. He was fulfilling the prophecy uttered hundreds of years before (Isa. 40: 3-5). Make straight the way of the Lord—John the Baptist was the forerunner, or herald, of the coming Christ. He was six months older than Jesus, and commenced his mission of preaching and baptizing six months before Jesus began his public ministry. In ancient times it was the custom to prepare the road in advance of the approach of a king or other high official. Mountains were graded down and valleys were filled up, that a good road might accommodate and please the approaching dignitary. John was preaching righteousness, and the truths he uttered cut straight across many of the practices of the Jewish leaders, and uncovered their hypocrisy. Esaias—The Greek form of the Hebrew Isaiah. 24. Pharisees—The Pharisees were the most powerful sect of the Jews. They arose originally as a reform movement in the nation, and were known as separatists. They were orthodox, holding tenaciously to the teachings of Moses. However, they had become corrupt and were no longer true to their name. They were almost the embodiment of pride and arrogancy. They were professedly religious, but at heart they were wicked.

25 Why baptizest thou then—Baptism was practised among the Jews in the case of proselytes who were received into the pale of Judaism, but John was baptizing Jews as if they were not already people of God. Since John the Baptist had declared that he was neither the Christ nor a prophet, those who were sent to question him wondered upon what authority he was administering this rite. "As he had just before applied to himself a prediction that they all considered as belonging to the forerunner of Christ, they might have understood why he did it; but they were blind, and manifested, as all sinners do, a remarkable slowness in understanding the plainest cases in religion."—Barnes. 26. I baptize with water—The Baptist does not answer the question of the Pharisees directly. He had given them an answer to their inquiry by declaring that he was the forerunner of Christ; but he tells them that baptism with water was a symbol of the true baptism that was later to be administered (Matt. 3, 11). There standeth one among you—Jesus Himself was somewhere in the assembly that had gathered to hear the wilderness preacher, but He did not manifest Himself until the next day. He was undistinguished in the crowd. 27. Coming after me—John's ministry began half a year before that of Jesus, is preferred before me—Although John was the greatest prophet up to this time, yet he took no honor to himself. His was a great ministry, but he realized his littleness compared with him whose herald he was. Whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose — This is a most striking comparison. It was the duty of the lowest servant to remove the sandals from his master's feet; but John the Baptist felt that Jesus was so exalted in his nature that he was not worthy to perform even this lowest service. 28. Bethabara—The exact location of this place is not known. This much is certain, that it was on the east bank of the Jordan, somewhere between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea. It was probably within ten or twelve miles from where the river flows into the latter sea.

II. His introduction of Christ (vs. 29-31.) 29. the next day—The day after the deputation of Jews from Jerusalem visited John the Baptist. seeth Jesus coming unto him—John knew who Jesus was, for his baptism had already taken place. behold the Lamb of God—John did not introduce Jesus as a king to rule Israel in splendor, but as a sacrifice to die for the sins of the world. To the Jewish mind, the idea of a lamb was familiar. They knew the prophecy of Isaiah, which shows the Messiah as a lamb brought to the slaughter They knew of the Passover feast, at which a lamb was slain and eaten commemorating the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage, and they were familiar with the daily sacrifices at the temple. which taketh away the sin of the world—Provision is thus made for the removal of sin from the heart and life of every believer in Jesus. These words of John the Baptist are a declaration of the fact and efficacy of the atonement that was to be made. The atonement makes possible the destruction of sin (1 John 3:8). 30. this is he—This was the Christ of whom John had spoken the day before. he was before me—John the Baptist had lived only about thirty years, but Jesus had always existed. 31. I knew him not—Although John was related to Jesus, he may not have been personally acquainted with him. Whether he was or not, it is certain that he did not know him in his exalted nature, office and mission until his appearing at Jordan for baptism. should be made manifest—The twofold mission of John the Baptist was to preach repentance, and to point out the Messiah. to Israel—To the Jews.

III. His testimony concerning the descent of the Spirit (vs. 32-34). 32. bore record—Was a witness. I saw the Spirit descending—This took place at the baptism of Jesus some time before this (Matt. 3:13-17; Mark 1: 9-11; Luke 3:21, 22). 33. the same unto me—There was no uncertainty in John's testimony. He knew that God had sent him to baptize with water, and he knew that he was divinely instructed how to recognize Jesus when he came. baptizeth with the Holy Ghost—John's baptism was outward; the baptism of the Holy Spirit is inward, and is purifying in its effect. It gives victory over sin, and imparts spiritual power. 34. this is the Son of God—At Christ's baptism this declaration was made from heaven (Matt. 3:17). John here bears testimony to this great fact.

Questions.—By whom and for what purpose were priests and Levites sent to John the Baptist? What answers did John give to the questions? What was the two-fold mission of John the Baptist? What was John's estimate of himself in comparison with Jesus? Give reasons why Jesus is called the Lamb of God. How did John recognize the Christ? What is it to be baptized with the Holy Ghost? What great witness was given that Jesus was the Son of God?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Witness-bearing.

I. Concerning John's office and work.

II. Concerning Christ and his power.

I. Concerning John's office and work. Witness-bearing is a fundamental idea in Christianity. It marks a distinct place for human instrumentality in the promotion of Christ's kingdom. The claim by John the Baptist was very remarkable. He affirmed himself to be the fulfilment of prophecy. To him was given to utter by human lips, the thoughts of the divine mind. He was therefore a divinely appointed herald. His only ambition was to occupy his own place and to work out his own mission in life. He did not aspire to a place for which God had not designed him. He felt that the work he had to perform entirely concealed the importance of his own personality. He lost himself in his office and in his message. He knew who he was as well as who he was not. It was not for him to be thinking of himself and what he might possibly be, but of his work, to fulfil his mission, to bear his testimony. He was willing to say something about himself only that he might introduce the great subject of his mission, the coming Messiah. He could not have given a better account of himself. He was a herald with a divine message, and he had a voice to publish it. His position was unique. He had strong individuality and transparent honesty. His ministry was such as to deserve and demand inquiry. He partook so much of the majesty of the coming King, that it was natural to suspect that he might be the King himself. His work and its results would naturally come formally before the Sanhedrin. Their deputation was the result of their professional dealing with the matter. In John they recognized a natural leader, a man who met the traditional conception of what the Messiah was to be. From varying motives the Jews turned anxiously toward every person of distinction and influence who arose among the people. The query put to John by the leaders of the Jewish church at Jerusalem was natural and proper. It gave evidence of the interest which John's mission was exciting in the land. It gave him an opportunity of both declaring himself and of witnessing to his Master. His first duty was to give an unequivocal answer to their inquiry, which, according to the letter of the law, they were justified in making.

II. Concerning Christ and His power. John refused the honor the Jews were ready to give him. His honor consisted in the proclamation of his Master's glory. He not only declared the Messiahship, but he declared distinctly who was the Christ. He stood as a great, powerful, popular man, swaying a nation, and yet at the very crisis of victory he obliterated himself in favor of another. He exemplified the grandeur of self mastery. He possessed the best qualifications for a witness to Christ, humility and courage. In the voice of John could be heard the need of the world and the will of God. Its first notes were stern and terrible as he came in contact with hypocrisy, infidelity and the vices of the age. Toward the closing of his ministry his voice grew more tender and mellow as he uttered the words, the climax of his ministry, "Behold the Lamb of God." John pointed to Jesus as a person standing among them whom they knew not, though they professed to be waiting for his manifestation. In taking on man's nature Christ so covered his glory with the veil of His flesh that He could not be known from other men without divine revelation and evidences from God. John referred to divine inspiration as the source of his knowledge. John's sermon was effectual for soul winning. He was summoning men in God's name to a higher life of righteousness and faith. He bade men get ready for Christ's coming and for the work of grace which He was to accomplish. To behold the Lamb of God, embraced the transference of the trust and affections of the whole heart to the object on which it looked, a look which drew after it the entire desire of the soul. The herald and forerunner of Christ perfectly comprehended his own relation to his Master and felt it a dignity to occupy a position of inferiority in respect to Him. Christ was to be offered as the world's sacrifice that all might be saved.—T.R.A.

SUNDAY AT HOME

THE SHADOWS.

In the shadows,
Deep and darkening,
God's eye watcheth
O'er his own;

Through the shadows,
To us hearkening,
God's voice speaketh
From his throne;

Speaketh, saying,
"I will never
Leave my loved ones Alone."

Trust in Him, when Storm-clouds lower,
When the noonday
Sun is bright;

Hear Him Saying,
"I am leading,
Ever leading
To the light."

YOUR FATHER KNOWETH.

Consider the ravens, for they neither sow nor reap. Consider the lilies, how they grow; they toil not, they spin not. Seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind. Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things.

Having food and raiment let us be therewith content. They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some covet after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

The cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

THE GOSPEL SHIP.

A ship is a wonderful thing; she is compactly built; economy of space has been wonderfully studied out. The captain and crew are close together. The quarter deck join the main deck. On board ship is order—every man to his station, every rope in its place.

On board ship is control; vigilance is there; there is no drift, no confusion; if you see a ship acting strangely, you say the crew are drunk or dead. On board ship there must be obedience, prompt, efficient, intelligent. On board ship the men look into a large heaven; they are not bounded by factory walls or even mountains; the whole expanse of heaven is theirs. They sail on a wide sea, they look till they touch heaven. That is called the horizon. They are often buried in a large grave, and the stormy petrel sings the solitary requiem. How small is the God of the landsman; how large is the God of the seaman. On board ship we learn self-surrender, self-command, self-discipline. The eye of the sailor is trained to long-distance exercise. Apply these things to the gospel ship, and what have we? We have the commander near. He wants no sleep; He is never weary. His smile is life. His kiss is in the light, His gladness in the wind, His voice is in the storm. He blends the rainbow, blanches the foam, makes the sea to reflect His glory. He moulds the stars, forms their curves, controls their course. May I speak to Him and He to me? May I study, acquire, appropriate? May I commune as friend with friend? Yes. "He declareth unto men his thought." On board ship there are novel scenes every day. Every day is fresh and new; so in the presence of the Master every smile is fresh, full of beauty and power. The reason is He is ever full, He makes no discoveries, is never surprised, never at a loss. The hour, and the man, and the place, and the wind and weather are set with wonderful precision.

The gospel ship is not a stranger to ports of call. What strange ship is this in the bay? The royal standard flies at the main, the dove of peace is blazoned on the burgee at the fore. What salutation is that I hear? What invitation? What welcome! O joy! The gospel ship has long been sailing.

Bound for Canaan's peaceful shore;
All who wish to sail to glory.
Come and welcome, rich and poor.

His Own Dog.

Wilkinson was near the exploding point when his neighbor met him in the street.

"That man Potter," he burst out, "has more cheek than anybody I ever met."

"Why, what has he done?" asked the neighbor.

"He came over to my house last night and borrowed a gun to kill a dog that kept him awake at night."

"Well, what of that?"

"What of that!" shouted Wilkinson, "It was my dog."—New York Times.

FARM AND GARDEN

BERRY PATCH IN FALL AND WINTER.

In regard to adaptation to soils, blackberries and raspberries are nearly as cosmopolitan as strawberries. But the best results with raspberries are obtained in deep, moderately sandy loams, or clay loams containing an abundance of humus; blackberries are often at their best when the soil is slightly heavier. The soil should not be too wet, as this condition is apt to increase the amount of winter injury.

There is no particular brand of fertilizer best adapted to either raspberries or blackberries, under all conditions. The kind of plant food needed must be governed by the kind already in the soil, and also on the physical condition of the soil. In some soils there is a lack of nitrogen; in others a lack of potash, or phosphoric acid; and in many there is a deficiency in humus, which not only supplies plant food, but is a great help in holding moisture. For supplying humus, stable manure and cover crops are available. In making applications of nitrogenous fertilizers care must be used, or the resulting growth will not mature, and cause severe winter injury. It would appear desirable in some cases to avoid the use of stable manure, and use instead commercial fertilizers. Where needed, wood ashes, muriate of potash, acid phosphate, etc., are valuable. The best way to ascertain what is needed, and the amount, is to leave check rows for comparison.

PREPARATION OF LAND.

Unlike strawberries, raspberries and blackberries occupy the soil for a number of years. It is therefore important that the preparation be very thorough. Where the land is too wet, it should be underdrained. If for one or two years preceding hoed crops have been used, there will be fewer weeds to fight. The land should be well plowed and thoroughly fitted to receive the plants.

Plant mainly only those kinds that appear to succeed in the immediate locality, testing newer ones in a small way. The varieties best suited for one set of conditions may be failures elsewhere.

Red raspberries are usually propagated by transplanting the numerous suckers which come up freely around the original hills. Black raspberries are increased by rooting the tips of the nearly mature canes in late August or early Septembre. The ends of the canes are covered lightly with earth, and by late fall a large mass of of fibrous roots will be formed with a well developed crown. Varieties of purple raspberries are hybrids, produced by crossing red and black raspberries, and some of them may be propagated either by using suckers or by rooting the tips of the canes. Blackberries do not sucker as freely as the red raspberries. These suckers have but few fibrous roots, and as a rule do not make such good plants as those started from cuttings of the blackberry roots.

The roots may be dug in the fall, cut into two or three-inch lengths, stratified over winter and sown in nursery rows in the spring, and most excellent plants are usually secured after a season's growth. Only strong, healthy plants should be selected, and it is frequently an advantage to select these from a young plantation rather than from an old bed of plants, which may have deteriorated in vigor and may be infested with various insects and diseases.

Blackberries and red raspberries may be set either in the fall or in the early spring. When set in late October or early November, the rows should be plowed up, too, making a back furrow along each row of plants, which will afford a great protection against winter injury. The earth should be removed from the hills as soon as the ground is in working order in early spring. Such plants, as a rule, begin growth earlier than those set in the spring. They should be set as deep, or slightly deeper, than they where in the original beds. Black raspberry plants, and the purple kind roots from the cane tips, should be set in the spring instead of the fall, not covering the crown too deeply, and spreading the roots in a circle about the centre of the crown. It is an advantage to set the plants in the bottom of a shallow furrow, filling in as the plants develop. Under these conditions they withstand drought better, and the cane are not so easily blown over by the wind.

The distance apart of rows and of plants depends on the system of cultivation, the varieties, the natural richness of the ground and the location. In general, the plants should not be crowded. Red raspberries may be set closer than black raspberries, and blackberries should be set the farthest apart. These distances may vary from 3 by 6 feet to 4 by 8 feet, depending on conditions.

SUBSEQUENT PATCH TREATMENT

The ground should be kept well cultivated and the plants hoed as occasion requires. In young plantations, if the plants have been set properly, cultivation may be given both ways, thus reducing the expense of keeping down the weeds. The cultivation should be shallow, as the roots lie near the surface. On heavy clay soils it may sometimes be desirable in some seasons to plow early in the spring, following with the cultivator till fruiting time. During the picking of the fruit there is little opportunity to cultivate, but the ground should be thoroughly stirred as soon as the harvest is over. If desirable a cover crop may be sown in late August or early September.

During the first two years it is not always necessary to give the land solely to the berry plants. Potatoes, cabbages, strawberries, etc., are often grown with advantage between the rows so that a considerable income from this source may be obtained before the berry plants fully occupy the ground.

Summer pruning is not generally practiced with red raspberries, but may often be done with advantage to black raspberries and blackberries. It consists in pinching or cutting off the tender ends or tips of the new shoots at a height that may vary from 18 inches to 24 or even 30, the blackberries usually being pinched somewhat lower than the black raspberries. The result of this pruning is the formation of rather low, stocky plants, with numerous lateral branches which will not require a trellis. As the young plants do not all develop at the same time it is necessary to go over the plantation several times in order to pinch the growth at the proper height.

The canes growing one summer, bear fruit the next season and then die, while new canes develop each year for the succeeding year's crop. Frequently the canes which have fruited are allowed to remain until the following spring before removal, but better results are usually secured by cutting them out and burning as soon as the berry crop is harvested. By this method the insects and fungus diseases frequently infesting these canes may be destroyed and the young canes have more room to develop. Each spring the plants should be gone over, cutting off the weak ends of the canes and thinning out some of the smaller ones where the growth is too dense. From three to five canes per hill are usually preferable to a larger number.

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

Brood sows as often suffer from over-feeding as from under-feeding. An abundance of fat is the worst enemy of the litter. Sows that are to raise pigs should be taken away from the rest of the hogs and be fed a different ration. These excellent rations are: (1). One part high-grade tankage, 12 parts corn; (2). skim milk or buttermilk and corn; using three parts of the milk to one part corn. (3). wheat and shorts. Whichever one of these rations is used, a rack containing alfalfa should be so placed that the sows have free access to hay at all times. In addition, the sow should be supplied with minerals. It is a good plan to dump the wood and coal ashes in the lot where the sows run. A mixture composed of a basket of charcoal or fine coal, 5 pounds of salt, 3 pounds of air-slaked lime, and 2 pounds of sulphur will give good returns, if kept easily available.

Some dairies of 20 cows will often produce as much milk as others of 40 cows. There is something wrong with the 40 cow dairy.

ARMY SUPERSTITIONS.

Tommy Atkins Has Many, and Sticks to Them.

Of all the superstitions in the British army—and they are many—the most popular has to do with the jar that contains the ration of rum. German bullets, the men have it, swerve instinctively towards the nearest rum jar. A few stray shots have helped to strengthen the superstition, and the conviction holds firm that the man who carries the rum jar runs a double risk of being hit.

Mascots and talismans hold an important place in the soldier's life. One man used to carry in his pack a rosary that he had picked up in one of the streets of Ypres. One day his leg was fractured in two places by a large piece of a trench mortar bomb, but in spite of his suffering he refused to be taken down to the dressing station until his rosary had been produced. "If I don't take it with me," he said, "I'd get hit again on the way down." Nearly every man at the front has a mascot of some sort—a rosary, a black cat, a German button, a lucky elephant, or a weird sign—which is supposed to keep him safe.

Their superstitions, too, are many in number. One man is convinced that he will be killed on a Friday; another man would rather waste a dry—and therefore valuable—match than light three cigarettes; another will think himself lucky if he can see a cow as he marches up to the trenches; a fourth will face any danger, volunteer for any patrol, go through the worst attack without a qualm, simply because he has "got a feeling that he will come through it all unhurt." And he generally does. —Tit-Bits.

Not Her Fault.

Doris was rather backward in her studies. One day when her father was inquiring into her standing at school she admitted that she was lowest in her class.

"Why, Doris, I'm ashamed of you!" her mother exclaimed. "Why don't you study harder and try to get away from the foot of the class?"

"It isn't my fault," Doris replied in tones of injured innocence. "The little girl who has always been at the foot has left school."—Exchange.

His Part.

Nearly every member of a Tulsa man's family performs on some kind of an instrument.

An old Iowa neighbor, who was visiting at his home, remarked that it must be a source of great pleasure to him. The father made no reply.

"Really," continued the Iowa man, "it is remarkable. Your youngest son is a cornetist, both your daughters are pianists and your wife is a violinist. Now, what are you?"

"I," replied the old man, "I am a pessimist!"—Life.

AN EVIL HERITAGE

During all the peregrinations to all sorts of parts of London, which were a necessary part of the winding up of affairs, he had carefully avoided Laurel Road. He felt strong enough to make a new start in life, neither did he bear his Uncle James any grudge for the good fortune that had fallen in his lap, but he did not feel quite strong enough for a personal interview. It was two days before the one fixed for his departure, that, while returning in a hansom from the office of an attorney in the Northwest, he grazed another hansom in whose occupant he recognized Capt. Herrincourt. Instinctively he leaped back in order not to be seen, but scarcely had the other hansom passed, than he bent forward again and looked about him. So deep had he been in his thoughts that he only now became aware of being in Laurel Road. At sight of the familiar surroundings and of the well-known Number Thirty-one close ahead, a sudden impulse moved him. Was it not both cowardly and despicable of him to leave England without acknowledging his debt to Marian? Was it not his clear duty to express his gratitude as best he could? At that moment it seemed to him so, and, besides, his uncle had just left the house, which made the occasion favorable; so, without taking more time for reflection, Bernard called to his driver to stop.

In the drawing room, where, as Jemima informed him, the ladies were sitting, he found the Misses Honoria and Valeria busily engaged with estimates; or, to speak more correctly, it was Miss Valeria who was busy at the table with paper and pencil, while Miss Honoria's share of activity was confined to listening and acquiescing, but he did not find the person he was looking for. Miss Valeria believed Marian was in the garden, she explained, while somewhat guiltily pushing aside a litter of papers. To the garden, therefore, Bernard betook himself, very much to the relief of both ladies, who were painfully puzzled as to how to receive him, and had been vainly endeavoring to let their greetings be blended with a delicate shade of half-suppressed condolence. It had not been a success, as they both knew for neither of them was a good hand at acting. Of course they were sorry for him, but of course also it was quite impossible not to rejoice at the good fortune which had befallen their brother-in-law, and of which several good-sized crumbs could not fail to come their way.

It was not difficult to find Marian in the garden, considering that the bushes to hide behind were not many, and the paths to wander on fewer still. She was sitting on the bench under the laburnum-tree with a strip of embroidery beside her, and her hands lying idle in her lap. Neither in her attitude nor mien was there anything which betrayed the exultation of the new-made heiress. The fact was that she had taken refuge here from the conversation of her aunts, and from those eternal estimates of the new life that was to be entered upon so soon.

Bernard, after stepping out of the house, stood still for a minute, looking at her unobserved. So this was the new Marian, the woman whom he had failed to recognize until his eyes had been torn open, whom he longed and yet dreaded to see. And, truly, this was a different Marian from the one he had known, or at so at least it seemed to Bernard in the excitement of the moment. Her brown head was uncovered, and one of the last sun rays darting over the brick wall, had powdered the soft hair with gold. The curve of what he could see of the cheek, the delicate line of neck and shoulders struck him as they had never struck him before. Had he been blind till now? By the side of the Dry River, when he had seen her kneeling between the two mules with hands clasped in prayer, it had for the first time occurred to him that his cousin was more than merely pretty; to-day he knew that when he said this to himself he had not been mistaken.

He was still standing thus, when Marian half turning her head, caught sight of him. Her first impulse was to rise quickly.

"Bernard," she said, and a happy smile lit up her face and made it beautiful.

She came forward a few steps, forgetful of everything except the joy of seeing him. But in the same minute the memory of all that had been come over her with a rush, and she stood still with burning cheeks, looking at him doubtfully, and asking herself how much he knew.

Bernard was too intently busy gazing into the serious face before him to think of speaking immediately. When a few more moments had passed in silence, Marian, disturbed by his eyes, turned and sat down again on the bench beside her, and even made a feint of taking up her embroidery. The movement roused Bernard.

"Marian," he said, coming up to her, "you are wondering at me, and it is only natural you should. I know I must look like a fool. I know feel it, I don't know what to say. I came in here with the intention of thanking you, but now that I am here it has come over me that anything I could try to say would really be ridiculous. After all I can't say anything except 'Thank you,' can I? And 'Thank you' is a thing one says when a person hands you a plate or passes you the sugar."

"But I haven't even handed you a plate," said Marian, with a rather uncertain attempt at jocularity, and smiling as well as she could. "So you needn't trouble about the 'Thank you.'"

"Let us have no fencing, Marian," and her eyes dropped before his serious gaze; "we both know what we are talking about. I am leaving England the day after to-morrow, and the chances are that we shall never meet again. Let us lose no time. You have run a great risk for the sake of preserving to me my fortune and my name, and I am here to thank you to-day, if I can. That you should have failed in your object cannot lighten my debt towards you by one grain."

"Then you know," said Marian, almost crying with vexation. "I never meant you to know. Who told you? Not Miss McCrie?"

"Yes, it was Miss McCrie."

Marian started to her feet with blue eyes that flashed fire.

"I shall never forgive her that, I who trusted her so! It is the most horrid thing she could have done—to betray one in that way; surely she has not——"

Here Marian broke off abruptly with a frightened glance at Bernard and stood crumpling up her embroidery between her fingers. Some of the particulars of that last interview under the nutmeg trees were stirring again in her memory, and she felt the blood tingling in her cheeks. Surely it was not possible that that false friend had been as false as that? No, no, she would not, could not believe it; and yet there was about Bernard's look something that she did not know how to account for.

"I hate Miss McCrie," she said between her teeth.

"And I esteem her highly," said Bernard, smiling a little. "She is the first person who has ever spoken the plain truth to me—while I was Bernard Herrincott, that is to say; now that I am Bernard Ingram, I shall be treated to plenty of the unvarnished article, no doubt."

Marian's anger had vanished already, chased away by another feeling.

"Oh, Bernard," she said, on impulse, "if only it had been possible! I was so happy when I thought I had done it. And it was so easy to do," she added, confusedly, in hopes of yet saving the situation. "You must not talk as if I had done anything great; and really and truly, there was nothing at all particular about it; I would have done it for anybody. I really would—I mean, of course, for anybody. I really would—I mean, of course, for anybody whom I cared for in the very least—for Miss McCrie for instance or—for father."

Bernard made no reply, and Marian continued to crumple up her embroidery into a ball, in order not to have to meet his eyes. He was thinking of the cowslip meadow, and of the girl who preferred not to disturb her mind unnecessarily by dwelling on the question as to whether she had ever cared for him or not. There could be no doubt, certainly, that there were several very different sorts of women.

"Answer me one question," he said after a moment—"when you were doing this thing, which you tell me was so easy to do, did it by any chance occur to you that you were giving me your father's fortune, and therefore your own?"

"Yes, it occurred to me, but ——"

"And did that make no difference?"

"Difference? Yes, of course it made a difference—in fact it made just the difference that was needed. If it had been anybody else's money that was in question, I might perhaps not have had the courage to do anything; but this way I felt as though I had a sort of right. Don't you see," she went on eagerly, "the whole thing was really quite simple—you needed the money because you were used to it, and father and I could do very well without it. I am sure that he won't even know what to do with it now. It would have been far better for him if he had never got it. It was partly that I was thinking of when I—I did the thing."

Again Bernard made no answer, and in face of his silence her courage failed her for any more of these pitiful attempts at disguising the truth.

"Are you really going away the day after to-morrow?" she asked in a low voice.

"Yes, I am really going away."

Marian appeared to be struggling with herself.

"And is she not going with you?" she asked hurriedly. "Can she let you go alone?"

"Apparently she can. I am going, and, please God, I shall not see English shores again until I am a good dozen years older than I am. Don't you remember how I used to listen to Uncle James' stories about his campaigns, and how I used to long to wear a uniform? Well, I am going to have my wish after all—I am going to be a soldier. Good-bye, Marian; think of me as kindly as you can. Or, perhaps, I ought to say Miss Herrincott," he added, trying to speak lightly, in hopes of making this difficult moment more easy, for the whiteness of her face alarmed him. "Now that you are a full-blown heiress, I suppose you expect to be treated with respect."

"Good-bye, Bernard," she said in a whisper, for fear of the tears that were very near.

"I hope you will be as lucky as I am unlucky; it's the best thing I can wish you, and the most likely thing, too, as matters stand. You will have the cream of everything to pick and choose from; the cream of eligible husbands, too, amongst other things. Wait till you are installed at Thornton and you will see. Let me hear soon that you have made a proper choice."

It was a laudable attempt at taking the sharpest edge off the situation, but it failed lamentably. She only grew paler by another shade, and Bernard saw that her lips were working. Snatching up her hands he pressed them between his own until they ached.

"It is no use," he said in another voice. "This cannot be our parting. I know everything, Marian—everything; do you understand? It is madness of me to say it, but I cannot bear that there should be the shadow of a veil between us. You must forget me, Marian. I was not joking now when I spoke of eligible husbands. In a few weeks' time there will be dozens of men at your feet; make the best and truest of them your husband, and forget that you ever had an unlucky cousin called Bernard. I am not worthy of such love as yours."

He spoke in breathless haste, and, having said the last word, flung away her hands, and, turning abruptly, left her standing alone upon the gravel path.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

It had been one of the first days of June that Bernard parted from Marian, in the back garden of 31 Laurel Road. When another June came round again with its roses and its thunderstorms, its pleasant evenings and its unpleasant caterpillars, the view which spread itself daily before Marian's eyes was vastly improved; stretches of smooth lawn instead of smoky chimneys, and giant beeches in place of the one poor, meagre laburnum, which had formed the pride of the enclosure. After waiting what he considered to be a decent interval, the captain had taken formal possession of Thornton. But he did so neither joyously nor light-heartedly. This strange fortune which had met him on the threshold of his old age, perplexed and embarrassed almost more than it rejoiced him. If it had been anybody's money except Bernard's he would not have minded it, but the thought that his nephew, for whom he had always had a true fondness, was a loser by his gain, made him feel uncomfortable, do what he would. There was one obvious solution to the difficulty which of course would have made everything straight again, but this was unfeasible, as he soon convinced himself.

"It would be far the simplest if you two could get up a liking for each other," he had observed to Marian one day when the idea first occurred to him. "Don't you think you could manage it? He has always been more of a brother to you, I know, but perhaps if you get used to the thing you might get to like him in a different way. Hey, Marian?"

"No," said Marian, smiling a little wearily, "I don't think I shall ever like him in a different way."

"Of course he is what people call 'a wretched match,' but that doesn't matter, considering that you're a first-class one. Upon my word there's a great deal in the idea; it's only the newness that startles you. At any rate, there can be no harm in my writing Bernard and throwing out a suggestion."

"You shall not do that!" Marian had answered so vehemently that the captain stood still in his pacing of the room and stared in amazement at his daughter. "Do you hear, father?" she had added, coming close up to him, "whatever you do, you must not write that letter to Bernard. I shall never be his wife."

The poor captain left the room crestfallen, without another word. It was the first time in her life that Marian had openly rebelled, and, to his astonishment, he felt that he had no choice but to strike his colors on the spot.

"He is too small a catch for her, that is evident," he reflected within himself; "she has got her head full of all those titled fellows. And yet I never took Marian to be that kind of girl. Dear, dear, to be sure, I suppose there must be something, after all, in what they call the corruption of wealth. I'm blest if I don't feel some of it myself." By which the captain meant that, despite the feeling of mental discomfort that there was such a thing as physical comfort, to the charms of which he by no means felt superior. After all, it was quite a different thing to be able to indulge in your second and even third glass of port wine without feeling shy at the thought of your wine merchant's bill, and a valet could not help being a much superior article even to Jemima. With every day did the captain become more distinctly aware of his deep appreciation of the comfort of life. That he also had a certain leaning towards its Epicurean side, was to be surmised from his increasing corpulence, his reddening complexion and duller eye—changes in his appearance which the first half year had brought about, and which Marian watched with growing apprehension. Neither did she like his new habit of falling asleep after dinner—a weakness he never used to indulge in in former days.

In the appearance of the Misses Honoria and Valeria this same half year had likewise brought alterations, to the delight of the one, but to the gentle grief of the other, for Thornton was evidently not the place for doing a banting cure, as Miss Valeria gleefully observed. She had not been three months under her brother-in-law's roof—which, of course, she never meant to quit again if she could help it—before, in the postscript of a letter addressed to an intimate friend, she bashfully but joyfully confided to her the fact that the waistbands of all her gowns had been let out by half an inch. "But there is no hope for poor Honoria," she added. "This first-rate cream and these new-laid eggs are so delightfully nourishing and at the same time so irresistible. The dear creature is growing stouter every day. By this time she has given up struggling and has resigned herself to her fate. The only one among us who has not even grown plump is Marian. I have been looking out for the country roses [illegible] her cheeks, but she is paler and [illegible] even that she was in London."

A SICKLY WIFE NO FIT MATE FOR ANY MAN

GIRLS AND WOMEN SHOULD LOOK WELL TO THEIR HEALTH AND STRENGTH.

Never before was physical health and vigor so highly esteemed and so eagerly sought for as to-day.

No man finds happiness in a sickly wife, and the woman who wishes to enjoy the pleasures of life should spare no effort to maintain perfect health.

Is your daughter growing up strong and ruddy? Has she strength to drink in greedily all the pleasures that youth so zealously seeks—or is she compelled to use the street car instead of enjoying the delightful exercise of walking—does she after the ball arise refreshed and vigorous, or is she exhausted, indifferent, and perhaps irritable?

When strength and vigor can be so easily maintained by Ferrozone, when the glow of health is so quickly brought to the cheeks and elasticity to the step, it is plainly a mother's duty to see that Ferrozone is on hand to assist her daughter back to health.

Upon the wake of Ferrozone quickly follows a stream of rich, nourishing blood which imparts that power and surplus energy so earnestly desired by those in ill-health.

Stop and think what this means for your daughter—certainly a great deal, and it can be accomplished by Ferrozone.

Every growing girl and young woman derives enormous benefit in many ways from this nutritive, vitalizing [illegible]

It is [illegible] suited for young women and is an guarantee of health and regularity as long as it is used.

Ferrozone is free from alcohol and perfectly safe to use. Prepared in the form of a chocolate-coated tablet and sold in 50c boxes, or six for $2.50, at all dealers, or direct from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

Using Up Magazines.

Have an old magazine handy on the kitchen serving table upon which to place hot or soiled dishes from the stove. As the top leaf becomes soiled it is torn off and burned. Because of the weight of the magazine it is often possible to tear off a leaf with one hand while the other hand is engaged. This is easier than scraping black and grease rings from the table or having the white oilcloth scarred by stains and burns. When the youngsters want to paste pictures into their scrap books give them an old magazine to work on. As fast as a leaf becomes gummy it may be torn off and thrown away, and a clean one is always waiting. This saves the table from becoming sticky and smeared with paste.

Caramel Rice Pudding.

Two egg yolks, salt, [illegible] cupfuls milk, two cupfuls cooked rice, one cupful dark brown sugar, one teaspoonful vanilla. Beat the egg yolks, add salt, milk, rice, brown sugar and vanilla. Mix well, turn into a buttered pudding dish and bake about 20 minutes in a moderate oven. Serve cold with whipped cream or fruit sauce.

Patrolling in No Man's Land

Patrolling plays a prominent part in trench warfare. The sporting instinct peculiar to nearly every Briton causes him to undertake this dangerous work with unbounded enthusiasm. Indeed so seriously do some divisions apply themselves to it that they would be grievously offended if one spoke of the ground separating their own trenches and the hostile ones as No Man's Land. They regard it as their own particular territory.

Owing to the proximity of the opposing trenches patrolling can only be carried out at night and when very dark great difficulty is experienced in preserving a right sense of direction. The trenches twist and turn so deceptively that when certain landmarks are invisible it is very easy to lose one's bearings. On such occasions it is well-nigh impossible to distinguish the enemy's lines from their own.

Information of a certain nature being required about the enemy's trench an officer volunteers to scout the position.

It is pitch dark and drizzling when he sets out on his dangerous mission. Unable to see a foot in front of him he moves forward with caution, but even so he has not progressed twenty yards before he comes a cropper in a deep shell hole. Aware that such a disaster in hearing of the enemy trenches will bring about his undoing, he determines to crawl the intervening space.

Going down on all fours he creeps cautiously along, frequently skirting shell holes which he is now able to locate with his hands. Though he has endeavored to keep in the right direction, after a time he begins to wonder whether he has not lost his bearings and decides to consult his compass. He is saved the trouble, however, by a Verey light, rocketing some distance down the line, which shows the faint outline of a trench about fifty yards ahead.

Again he crawls forward, every sense on the alert, till he reaches the wire entanglement protecting the line. Then taking cover in a large shell hole he determines to familiarize himself with his surroundings as well as he can in the dark.

Not a sound comes from the trench and the fleeting glimpse which the flicker of a far-away flare gives him shows no movement either. If only he can get through the wire unseen he believes he can crawl unheard up to the parapet.

Desperate though the undertaking is, he grips his revolver and crawls to the wire. With difficulty he wriggles under the outer strand and creeps forward inch by inch. With every movement forward his hopes rise higher. Then his quick ear detects a movement in the trench, followed immediately b ya gruff challenge:

"Halt! Hands up!"

The wire prevents him lifting his arms, but to use his tongue, he pronounces the word "Damn!"—as only a Briton can—with such extraordinary gusto that it probably saves his life.

With natural exasperation he forces his way through the remaining wire and enters his own trench.

"One should always—er—creep under one's own wire when—er—returning from a patrol," he remarks, naively to his men; "it's—er—good practice."

The German is sending up very few star-shells and the interpretation of this is that he has a working party in front of his parapet. Accordingly a patrol, composed of a sergeant and four men, is sent out to inquire into the matter, and harry any Germans who can be discovered.

Though clouds obscure the moon there is sufficient light for an object to be dimly made out thirty or forty yards away. The patrol, moving in the shape of a V, with the sergeant in front forming the apex, proceeds about one hundred yards towards the enemy's trench, when they halt and lie down. Here they remain for some little time staring into the gloom and listening.

They move stealthily forward for another 50 yards, then lie down. They are now about half way between the opposing lines and it is no longer wise to proceed in an upright position.

They consequently crawl on all fours, stopping to listen every few yards. At last a low murmur of voices comes from the direction of the enemy trench.

They move forward more quickly now, though as noiselessly as possible and straining their eyes into the darkness they soon make out the dim outline of shadowy forms. At that moment, however, one of the men on the flank wriggles up to the sergeant and informs him that he can hear sounds of movement on the left.

Holding their breaths they listen intently. Slight though the sounds are, they can all hear them. In a flash they realize that it is an enemy patrol out to protect the working party. A signal from the sergeant causes them to line up facing the direction from which the sounds come. Each one of the patrol carries bombs. They are ready and eager to encounter their oncoming quarry.

The sounds, slight at first, grow appreciably louder. From the enemy trench come the monotonous thuds of picks. Now and then a bullet "phits" past them.

Then suddenly the man next to the sergeant gives a spasmodic shudder, and his body twists as though in agony.

The sergeant lays a hand on the [illegible] form.

"Stick it, lad," he implores, in a hoarse whisper. "For Heaven's sake stick it."

The least sound now may reveal their presence.

The man buries his teeth in the [illegible] cloth of his sleeve, and for a moment makes a snuffling sound like a terrier with his head far down a rabbit hole. Then he is silent. He has not stopped a bullet, but a cough.

The sounds of the approaching patrol become louder, and at last the little party lying in ambush can discern crawling shapes looming larger as they slowly approach.

Things now happen quickly. The sergeant springs to his feet, followed on the instant by his men. They hurl their bombs. Guttural shouts of dismay are drowned by the boom of the bursting bombs. The sergeant and his men dash forward with the bayonet. The Boches, taken wholly unawares, turn and run. One trips and falls. The sergeant and another man spring on and seize him before he can regain his feet. Excited shouts come from the enemy trench. Flares flash skywards. In a few moments machine guns will be busy.

"Now 'op it like 'ell!" shouts the sergeant.—London Mail.

Bradstreet's Trade Review

TORONTO.—Price changes continue to come into effect with unceasing regularity. Drygoods wholesalers report a steady upward movement of prices; their business is practically at a standstill now. One representative firm reported an increase in the annual turnover amounting to close to three-quarters of a million, and another wholesaler stated that this year was the first in eighteen months in which an increase had not been noted over the corresponding period twelve months before. The holiday trade in hardware was stated to be very satisfactory. Bank clearings continue to give a favorable impression of the commercial situation, and payments are fairly satisfactory.

MONTREAL.—Wholesalers, jobbers and retailers are recovering from one of the busiest Christmas season that has been experienced. Textile mills are very busy. Demand for cured meats and all lines of provisions has been marked. Hardware and groceries are experiencing a moderate movement. The sugar situation is quiet, and an easier feeling is predominant.

OTTAWA.—In summing up the results of the business ending last week, retailers are practically unanimous in reporting very satisfactory conditions. Most wholesale and retail firms are able to announce increases on the total year's business. The money situation continues to be fairly good.

HAMILTON.—A large proportion of this city's business men are satisfied with trade in year that is just closing, and in view of the liberal orders for spring delivery they are looking to the future with confidence, at the same time realizing that changed conditions are bound to result sooner or later. An attitude of caution is generally noticed, and large surpluses which were piled up this year being relied upon to tide over any temporary reverses which may easily result from a sudden break in values consequent upon the end of hostilities. Building in the last year was easily more extensive than for 1915, but it was to quite an extent to provide for the handling of war business. Labor is busily employed, and little or no distress is being felt in spite of the high prices for staple commodities. Drygoods, housefurnishings, boots and shoes and fancy lines were particularly active prior to the holiday.

A TALK ON RHEUMATISM

Telling How to Actually Cure This Painful Malady.

This article is for the man or woman who suffers from rheumatism who wants to be cured, not merely relieved—but actually cured. The most the rheumatic sufferer can hope for in rubbing something on the tender, aching joint, is a little relief. No lotion or liniment ever did or can make a cure. The rheumatic poison is rooted in the blood. Therefore rheumatism can only be cured when this poisonous acid is driven out of the blood. Any doctor will tell you this is true. If you want something that will go right to the root of the trouble in the blood, take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They make new, rich blood, which drives out the poisonous acid and cures rheumatism to stay cured. The truth of these statements has been proved in thousands of cases throughout Canada, and the following cure is a striking instance. Mrs. F. M. Simpson, R. R. No. 1, Blenheim, Ont., says: "For a long time I was confined to my bed, and actually crippled with rheumatism. The trouble first located in my ankle—which was much swollen. I thought it might be a sprain, but the doctor said it was rheumatism and advised me to go to bed so that the trouble would not be aggravated. I did as directed, but instead of getting better, it spread first to my right knee, then to my left knee, and then to my arms. The limbs were much swollen, and if I moved them caused me considerable pain. I seemed to get weak in other respects, and fell off in weight from 156 to 110 pounds. I had no appetite and seemed to lose interest in everything. One day, while reading a paper, I came across the case of a rheumatic sufferer cured by using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I decided to try them and sent for three boxes. By the time these were gone I had certainly begun to improve, and with help was able to get up. Continuing the use of the pills I was first able to go about with the use of a crutch, which, after I discarded for a cane, and then through the use of the pills I was able to throw aside the cane as well, and go about as briskly as I had ever done. I feel that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been a blessing to me, and I strongly recommend them to other similar sufferers."

You can procure these pills through any dealer in medicine or get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

It's a poor rule that won't work both ways. The people who never worry themselves sometimes worry us.

UNDERWOOD NEWS

Mr. and Mrs McDonald of Maple Creek are home from the west on their wedding trip, and are guests at Mr. Jas. Dobson's.

The first meeting of the Township Council took place in the hall on Monday, Jan. 8th, members all present. The following comprise the board for 1917; Jas. Johnson, Reeve. Peter Dobson, Dep. Reeve, N. McNeil, G. Baker, J. McKenzie Councillors, J. G. McKay, clerk.

Mr. Jno. Coleman is able to be out again after his recent illness.

Mr. J. Forsythe, Sask., is visiting at Mr. Alex McIntyre's.

The Underwood Red Cross Society held their regular meeting in the Workman's Hall on Friday Jan. 5th, about 100 ladies being present. An invitation had been extended to the Centre Bruce Red Cross Workers to be present, and about 25 from that branch availed themselves of the opportunity to be present. During the afternoon a splendid and instructive address was given by Miss Powell, of Whitby, who has been touring in the interests of the Women's Institute. Light refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

Mr. Chester Gibson, who has been critically ill with pneumonia, is now slowly improving.

The annual meeting of the Presbyterian church is to be held on Monday, Jan. 15, in the church.

The many friends of Mr. Lyman Knake will be glad to learn that he is able to be around again after a severe illness

Mrs. Fred Gottschalk, 2nd of Bruce is improving very nicely.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Mr. John Shanks has returned home

Mrs. D. Stewart and Mr Robt Stewart returned from Guelph, Wednesday. Mr Stewart had operations on both sides and it will be sometime before he regains normal strength.

Miss M J. Esplen has returned from a visit in Muskoka.

Mrs Watt, Sr. and Miss Watt have been visiting at the Manse, Mrs W. J. Watt was visiting her people at Listowel

Mr. Alex McDiarmid and Mr. Lavell Crawford left for Toronto last week where they intend to work in a munition factory.

Mrs. Hilborn has returned from St. Catharines. where she had been for some time assisting in her brother's store.

The C. E. Wednesday night meetings have been postponed for a while and the Literary society will meet weekly instead.

Mrs. J. J. McKinnon, of Toronto, is visiting her relatives here.

Mrs. Chas. Donaldson, of Chippewa Hill, sister of Mrs. Alex McCannel, is very ill at present.

Bearing in mind the recent casualties among our young men who enlisted in defence of the empire, and others in the danger zone at the front, many of our young people, were not present at the "Leap Year Ball" as reported by some one in the Burgoyne district budget of last week.

TURNER'S

The congregations of North Bruce and St. Andrew's church on Tuesday extended a call to the Rev. P. N. Currie of Blackstock, Ont. If the call is accepted Mr. Currie will be here the beginning of February.

Messrs. Wm. [illegible] and George [illegible] shipped some nice cattle to Hamilton on Friday.

It's hoped that the Grand Trunk will make some improvements to the station and yards here, as they need it badly. As considerable cream is shipped now a days there should be a right place to load it and not have to lift the can over your head to get it in the car. Another new siding with a neat little freight shed is what is needed to fill the bill.

Rev. Mr. Thynne of Palmerston is to preach in St. Andrew's on Sunday.

A number from here attended the board of Agricultural meeting in Port Elgin on Saturday and came home well satisfied with the discussion. The board certainly know how to cater to the tastes of the farmers when they have Murphies and Beans on the bill of fare.

To enable the farmers to secure larger returns for his labour, greater convenience and comfort, such as he should have is the aim of The Farmers Weekly Sun, the most helpful farm paper published in Ontario. You can do your part by becoming a subscriber. The Sun is essentially the paper of the Ontario farmer. He will find its market report invaluable.

Going out of business, everything must be sold in January, big sale now on. H. Katz.

In Aid of Belgians

Mr. Howell of Toronto, on behalf of the Christian Men's Federation of Canada, gave two very fine addresses, one in the Methodist church in the morning and the other in the Presbyterian church Sunday evening. The money contributed goes to the aid of Belgian women and children in England, of whom there are a million being cared for.

$222 was secured at the Presbyterian Church, $112 at Dunblane church, and $129 at the Methodist. On Monday additional amounts were secured bringing the total up to $500 for Port Elgin alone.

Council Meetings

All councils met on Monday at 11 o'clock The Saugeen council was opened by Rev. Mr. Watt invoking Divine blessing. There were a number of township men present at the opening.

Reeve Christie in his inaugural address thanked the ratepayers for their co-operation in 1916, and he would try and merit that same support in 1917. He suggested to Mr. Watt and to the men present that early in the year, probably in May, a mass meeting of the township and townspeople should be held, led by the clergy for the purpose of prayer, for the success of the allies in the war and a speedy peace. In concluding his remarks he invited the ratepayers to visit the council meetings and also to notify himself or his council when work was needed done.

Ex-Warden McCannel spoke briefly on the good work rendered by the reeve and council. Others speaking were John Cook, Alex Lamont John Scott, Adam Cairns, Clerk Elliott, Councillors, Atkinson, Webster, Greathead, Chappel and E. R. Saylor.

At the conclusion Reeve Christie asked those present to be his guests at luncheon at the Queen's.

There were no formalities at Port Elgin council Monday night, Reeve Izzard and all the members were on the job promptly at 7.30. Among other things the council meets Tuesday 16th to appoint an assessor. Walter Brown will get $1.50 per trip for snowploughing. Mr. J. H. Wismer asked the council to reconsider the matter of charging him 50% extra for water service, because of non residence. He was willing to pay extra, but thought 50% too much. The council meet Mr. Wismer again.

Women's Meeting

The Women's Institute on Saturday afternoon was quite well attended. The speaker was Miss Powell, of Whitby, who gave a very interesting address, pleading for deeper interest in the education of young Canadians. Patriotic work was also touched upon.

Miss Webb sang very sweetly, Miss Avis accompanying. The thanks of the ladies were tendered to Miss Powell by Mrs. McTavish and Mrs. Wismer.

TOWN TOPICS

Mr. Donald McFayden is very ill.

Ten below zero here on Thursday.

Jim McKenzie is home from Toronto for a few holidays.

Mrs. A. F. George, who was seriously ill last week, is improving.

Phone Arthur Gilbert if you want your old papers taken for Red Cross.

The Presbyterians hold their annual meeting Thursday night.

Geo. Chapman was appointed assessor at the usual salary of $60.

Many friends will be glad to know that Master Arthur Barber is recovering.

Miss Mantie Shier has returned to her duties on the teaching staff of Toronto public schools.

Has anyone seen The Times robin? Sol. Schrank reported one two weeks ago, but it lacked a certain color of eye.

Mr. S. A. Shier, of Winnipeg, who was called home on account of the death of his father, has returned to Winnipeg.

Morris Kalbfleisch, has returned home to Detroit where has been working the past four years, after visiting old friends here.

Miss Catherine Chambers will leave in a couple of weeks to take up training as a nurse in the Sick Children's Hospital at Toronto.

Rev. D. McLennan children's aid secretary, was in town Friday looking up the welfare of a ward now with a resident of Saugeen.

Treasurer Struthers paid out $285 as patriotic relief on Saturday. This is the smallest sum in quite awhile, there being some removals and reductions.

Tom Marks' show Friday night was a good one. There was lots of fun, and the specialties were good. The hall was packed about $107 being taken in, local Red Cross receiving 25% or $26.50.

The officers of the L. O. L. lodge are: W. M., Morley Robertson; Deputy, N. Eidt; secry, W. C. McFadden; chaplain, Joseph Collard; committee, D. Park, Bert Collard.

Although a very cold day, there were many men attended the sale at Samuel Schwass'. Some good stock were put under the hammer and brought good prices. D. C. Cavin was auctioneer. Cows went for $93 and $94 and calves sold well.

Miss Olive Brooks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Brooks, of Waldville, Sask., formerly of Port Elgin, was married at Shaunavon, Sask., on Dec. 16, to Mr. Mansell G. Binkley. The young people will reside in Shaunavon. Many friends here join in congratulations.

Mrs. Samuel Harvey passed away at Windsor last week. She is the mother of Mrs. W. J. McCullough, of Port Elgin. The funeral was at Kincardine on Friday. Many friends will extend sympathy to the bereaved.

An interested reader tells The Times the feature of printing pictures of the soldiers of this district, is a good one and everyone is interested. He mentioned that in connection with Pte. Saleman's article we should have added, he was a grandson of our esteemed citizen, Mr. James Whetstone. This is the kind of interest The Times appreciates.

Friday night the junior team plays hockey against Southampton. There are good lot of young lads coming along in town, and as it is well for the development of the boys that they should have organizations for good clean sport, the men and women should attend some of the contests in which the boys engage, and encourage clean athletics.

The Times wants the reports of all church meetings. The ministers and officers are invited to make public through The Times their church progress. By the financial statements printed and in process of printing it is gratifying to see that despite large patriotic gifts the church has not been neglected. A good giver to the church is generally liberal all round.

Mr. Alex Vandrick, sends a paper from Saskatoon describing a few incidents of the rushes made to get to the government dispensaries, which were closed for good on December 30, at 5 o'clock. In the article a description of the run a fat man made to one of the dispensaries but missed the closing of the door by a second. It says this man weighed 235 lbs, but as Alex only weighs 230, it could not have been him.

Following are the officers of the Port Elgin Masonic lodge for 1917: Geo. E. Chapman, W. M.; Jas. H. Cottrill, I. P. M.; Thos. B. McBride, S. W.; Alex Brunton, J. W.; Jas. A. Chapman, Chaplain; R. M. Lowry, Treasurer; C. Currier, Secretary; J. W. Reany, S. D. H. Pollock, J. D; A. G. Miller, I. G; Wm George, Dir of Cer; A. F. George, Sr. Steward; Bismark Hilker, Jr. Steward; Archie McIntyre, Tyler; Trustees, Wm. George and August Smith; Auditors, S. H. Langford and A. G. Miller.

Readers of The Times who noted during 1913 the inauguration in Winnipeg of the Free Trade League for Canada will be interested to note that the League has secured as its general secretary, Mr. W. R. Wood, an old Port Elgin boy and a graduate of our high school. After serving as Presbyterian minister in Dunbarton and Claremont, Ontario, Mr. Wood moved to Manitoba in 1913 and in 1915 was elected a member of the Legislature of that province. In December last the Free Trade League secured his services to take charge of their office in Winnipeg. The League is the concrete expression of the growing sentiment of the West in opposition to high tariff.

Frank Geddes Tells What the Fighting's Like in the Trenches

"Another trip to the trenches has just been completed, so you can understand my lack of correspondence when I explain that a trip occupies half a month, and I just now realize how long that time can be. I wish I knew just how much censorship will allow, so that I might know just what to tell you.

We are back in the same billets we came to just after I wrote last, large huts housing almost our whole company in one as our battalion is very small at present. We are in a very pretty location at the foot of a hill on the side and top of which is a shelled town containing a large ruined church. I think I mentioned it before They say it was destroyed in 1870 and again in this war The huts are in a pretty grove of the finest beech trees I ever saw and it was like home to go outside the door and pick up beech nuts. There is no road very near, so we are very quiet. Imagine huts about the mouth of the mill creek, and the firing line about the lake and you will get an idea of it. Of course it is hardly that secluded, but there are so few signs of war here that that will illustrate it to you. We have a battalion canteen, and a G. M. I. A. canteen, so can live fairly high, when we get paid our 10 francs, ($2.00) or 20 francs as the case may be. In the trenches, we go fairly well, bread, cheese bacon, tea being our regular issue with occasionally butter, cigarettes and pickles. We usually ate them all in one meal after coming off 12 hours duty, then slept, and went on duty again, but back here we have all we can eat, Porridge, rice, cocoa, even tinned beans are luxuries which we buy ourselves, and cook on fires of pieces of sand bags and grease, made in a small tin. Of our time up the line, a part is done in the very front line, then a part in support then a third part in the front line again. In the front line it is surprisingly quiet to all appearances, in fact, I've been under heavier shell fire, in the supposed comparative safety of the support. I was detailed with the rest of the platoon for outpost duty, where we were in rather isolated parts, about forty yards from Fritz. We were on day duty, going up part of the way overland before dawn, and coming down after dark, rather a funny feeling when you get up over the parapet for the first time and a flare lights things up. The first time I went overland one of these burst, and a machine gun opened in the vicinity simultaneously. Lightning was slow compared to the way I fell down on my "tummy" with my face to the mud, but one very soon gets used to that and learns to stand absolutely still when a flare goes up. We could see the smoke from his fire, and could imagine a stout German arranging the sausages in a very orderly fashion over the fire, also we could hear the sound of pumps working clearing his trenches of water and occasionally a discreet cough.

December 19th, hadn't time to finish this last part, owing to an orgy of cleaning buttons, in short, everything and anything. Rather a joke, when the only result is about a day's comparative brightness, and then we are worse than ever when we go in again. Since then we have been in again, the only thing of interest being the blowing up of one of our own mines which was rather novel to the most of us. We were warned of it, I was on sentry, when suddenly some distance away a sheet of flame and smoke went up followed by swish of the shells, and the bang and red flash of the exploding shells, the crack and flash of hand grenades, and the rattle of rifles and machine guns made one realize what poor attempts those of the Toronto Exhibition, etc. to portray modern warfare are, compared to a little trench raid. It wasn't on our front and we were'nt in it, but Fritzie opposite got his wind up and kept the lines as light as day for about half an hour with star shells. I since heard that the battalion that pulled it off got as many German prisoners alone as they had total casualties. But enough of that, you get it in the papers every day.

Do you remember young Bickle who summered in Southampton? I met him in the front line the other day. We both recognized each other at the same moment, he is in the Cyclists, doing Engineer work. I also meet all kinds of 92nd chaps who are reinforcing a Highland batt. in our brigade.

We are back in reserve for a few days and I wish you could see our home. It is an immense cave fully fifty feet underground and it houses the whole company.

After coming down the stairs, one comes into a central cave with small ones opening off, cut in the solid rock.

That is where I am writing this with several braziers around, and candles set in the ledges of rock, but it is comparatively warm and absolutely dry, and well ventilated. It is in a ruined town I mentioned before. I was on gas-guard there one moonlight night, and what a queer sight it was. According to what we are told, the German's occupied this territory in the first dash of the war, then the French with great effort and heavy loss drove them back to their present position, shelling their own towns in the course of events.

You would recognize the district as familiar if I could mention it. In this town, which is a large one, there is scarcely a wall standing. Can you imagine a town ten times as big as ours with every building looking like the steel works after the fire, only worse?

Wherever you can trace a street among the rubble, it is crossed and tangled with our wire, while our trenches make little streets of our own. Only blackened stumps of trees standing where you imagine have been splendid lawns, and a few poles torn in half, representing all that is left of a probably very modern telephone equipment. One building on my beat had been some important place. In the moonlight could be seen tiled floors, decorated walls and standing on the side of the trench one could distinguish the remains of stone walls, a large ruined gateway where a driveway had been and a fountain. The only way into it now is an insignificant little trench which takes one to the back door.

All around one can pick up rusty French rifles, bayonets and clips of cartridges, while occasionally a little cross with "Ici repose un soldat Francais" marks the grave of one who has died for "la Patrie".

I thought I realized the destruction and wastage of war before, but that gave me a new and more vivid idea of it

We are only a short distance from the front line, but even at that, a light railway runs very close to us, bringing up rations, ammunition, etc. upon big trucks.

I see Roy Thomson very often, look him up when we come out for a rest He is in the best of health and looks fit for anything.

Do not worry about me. It is quite unnecessary I can assure you, for I've already explained how quiet the line is here, outside of the fact that I'm not looking for any V. C. The man who looks for one is usually rewarded with a plain wooden one—Inscribed.

I hear a stretcher bearer from our platoon has been recommended for the D. S. M. A man exposed himself one day in the post we occupied by night and of course a sniper got him. A periscope is provided for day observation and its only at night one need look over.

This young chap got up the communication trench all right but the mud was too deep to carry the man down it, so he put him on his back, and went overland in broad day light. Fritz was very decent and didn't fire, but he didn't know that before he started. It's a thing that might have won the V. C. in any other war, but is scarcely noticed in this.

We came out from the front line, mud from head to toe unshaved for two weeks, and unwashed for almost as long. The man who said we eat a peck of dirt before we die had a very small gift of imagination, but still a chap has the feeling that he is doing a man's work, and that's the main thing.

There are times about the tenth hour of rainy, twelve hour's night shift (I never realized how long a night could be) when one wishes the war, the Kaiser, and a few more, were in a warmer climate (and not the South Sea Islands either). Then you are relieved, the walk down the trench warms you up, get into your dug-out, cramped like sardines, but sheltered nevertheless. Some energetic one may start a brazier, another goes half a mile or so for some water, then some cocoa, porridge or coffee, and in an hour everyone is talking laughing or singing as though they were any where but 100 yards from the front line of the western front. Rations come up in the meantime accompanied by the precious mail, and then hot tea and bacon (we are lucky in this line in that respect).

You can't realize when you write a letter in what funny positions it will be read. Then everyone is pretty well tired, and we all stretch out, lying on the same side to economize space (pity the man who has to turn over) and we have six hours sleep if we are lucky.

It is a revelation, one can only realize it by coming here, how much Canadian boys can stand without becoming downhearted, and how quickly they can recover their spirits when that does happen. One has only to think when he has one of these spells, what he would think of himself were he still in Canada with no good reason, and it makes one ready to go through anything. Now this is already too long. If they let up on the cleanliness fad, I may be able to write oftener.

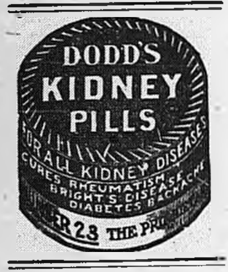
DAILY ROUTINE FOR ABLE SEAMEN A PLEASANT LIFE

Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve is Enlisting Patriots.

SEA EXPERIENCE IS NOT NECESSARY.

Wages Higher Than Pay Accorded British Sailors—Many Advantages.

As part of Canada's contribution of 500,000 men for overseas, the Dominion Naval Department has organized the Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve, in which Canadians can serve the Empire afloat at the same rates of pay as in the Canadian expeditionary forces. Men enlisting in this reserve are ranked as able seamen, and paid $1.10 per day, with $20 per month separation allowance to wife or dependents. No sea experience is necessary—men who are physically fit and between the ages of eighteen and thirty-eight, even if they have never been at sea, are given the unusual privilege of joining the navy at full seaman's rank at a wage many times in excess of that paid the regular British navy seaman and rated two ranks higher than that allowed ordinary "green" recruits.



The naval seaman upon enlistment receives a full kit of clothes, consisting of two cloth caps, one white duck cap and cap covers, three duck working jumpers, two duck uniform jumpers, two serge jumpers without cuffs, one serge jumper with cuffs, two jerseys, two check shirts, two pairs drawers, four pairs duck trousers, three pairs serge trousers, two pairs socks, one pair shoes, one pair boots, three blue jean collars, three flannels, two night shirts, two handkerchiefs, and one silk handkerchiefs, two bed covers, one comforter, hammock, knife, blacking brushes, clothes brush, hair brush, scissors, soap bag, "housewife," comb, tooth brush, cap boxes, prayer book, overalls, lanyards, etc., the whole being stowed in a brown canvas kit-bag—the bedding excepted, which is lashed up in the hammock. Each seaman receives two hammocks. Oilskins, seaboots and watch coats are issued to those men on duties which require them. A stock of ready-made clothing is kept in the naval depots and aboard many ships, and issued to the men when necessary to replace lost or worn-out kit.

GOES TO HALIFAX.

After enlisting at the recruiting offices in Canada the recruit is sent to Halifax, where he is fitted out with an able seaman's kit, and thence forwarded on the first ship to a naval training depot in England. At the training school an R. N. C. V. R. man receives instruction in the rudiments of naval drill and discipline; is taught the distinguishing ranks and flags; how to look after his kit and lash his hammock, and is given at least two months' preliminary instruction in rifle and bayonet drill, foot drill and as much knowledge of seamanship as can be given ashore, and a general idea of signalling, naval gunnery and torpedo work.

When considered competent enough the naval seaman is drafted to a man-of-war and entered on her watch bill. A card is given him, which details him to his mess in one or other of the various departments of forecastle men, foretop men, maintop men or quarterdeck men, and in either the port or starboard watch and the sub-divisions thereof. In his particular watch or sub-division he is given details as to his position in event of collision, torpedo attack, outbreak of fire, going into action, or abandoning ship. Each of these manoeuvres calls for different duties, and at sea he will receive his training in them.

THE DAILY ROUND.

In addition to these special duties, there is the daily round of work, which runs something as follows: At 5.30 each morning the boatswains and ship's corporals call the men. The seamen turn out, have a wash, lash up their hammocks and bedding, and stow them away. Hot cocoa is served out from the galleys, and at 6 o'clock both the port and starboard watches fall in on the upper deck, and the deck sweepers are told off to sweep the upper decks. Hoses are rigged, buckets and brooms served out, and the work of washing down decks begins. Cleaning the guns and scrubbing decks in the fresh morning air soon works up an appetite, and when the work is finished at 7 o'clock, the call for breakfast is sounded. One hour is allowed for breakfast, cleaning up and changing into the "rig of the day," that is, the clothes for the particular work the seaman is assigned. Shortly before 9 the men fall in on deck, the bugler blows "Attention," the marines present arms, and the sailors stand at the salute, while the white ensign is hoisted, and the ship's band, if carried, plays "God Save the King." In summer this ceremony is carried out at 8 a.m.

Ten minutes later "Divisions" is sounded by the bugler, and the entire ship's company muster in their respective groups and divisions and under the particular officers. The names are called off by the various watch officer, and the men are inspected. After divisions, the crew march aft for prayers, which is followed by fifteen minutes' physical drill, then the routine work of the day commences. Parties are told off for painting, overhauling gear and rigging, etc. If the ship is at sea, certain men have their watches at wheel, lookout and signalling—the others, outside of the working parties, are being exercised and instructed in the arts of naval warfare at the guns, torpedo tubes, small arms, and manoeuvres of offence and defence.

At noon, all hands are piped to dinner, and at 1.10 p.m. decks are cleared and work commences again at 1.25 p.m. and continues until 4 p.m., when decks are cleared up ready for the evening muster at 4.15 p.m., after which the men go to tea. There is no work after this except necessary watch duties. Supper is served at 7 p.m., and 10 p.m. every man not on duty is supposed to be in his hammock. Saturday afternoon is generally a half-holiday, and on Sunday nothing but necessary work is done.

Recruiting for the R. N. C. V. R. is being carried on all over Canada.

A Famous Welsh Fortress.

Carnarvon castle is the most splendid specimen of mediaeval military architecture surviving in Britain, not excepting Alnwick. Art and beauty were combined with strength by De Elfrean, the architect, who had been commanded to construct a palace within an impregnable fortress. Whether the mean little passage chamber in the Eagle tower was the birthplace of the infant prince whom Edward I. made the medium of such a grim practical joke upon the Welsh seems doubtful, but the main story may still be true. Every famous soldier who helped to make history in this corner of Britain has played some part within or without the walls of Carnarvon castle. It has been starved into surrender, but never captured by force of arms and can, therefore, claim to be considered a "virgin fortress."—Westminster Gazette.

Every Wink an Eye Bath.

Every few seconds we wink both our eyelids at once, although not purposely. If we stop winking, our eyes become uncomfortable and gradually cease to work as they should. When the eye is open the front of it is exposed to dirt and dust and is apt to become so dry that a painful stinging sensation results or would do so if constant moisture were not provided to cleanse and soothe the tissues.

As a matter of fact, each time we wink we wash the eye, says the Popular Science Monthly for January. Up above each eye is a tiny water bag called the tear gland, and all the time we are awake it makes tears. When the front of the eye feels itself becoming a little too dry or dusty a communication is sent for a supply of moisture. The eyelid then comes down with a tear inside it to wash clean the front of the eye. This is the most gentle and perfect washing in the world.

MAKING ICEBERGS BY AIR VIBRATION.

It was at 2 o'clock in the morning that I had my first sight of the Taku glacier. The sun was already two hours or more high, and its rays caught the icebergs which floated about in the inlet and turned them to sapphires. There were hundreds of these blue ice masses, through which our steamer pushed its way to the face of the ice wall. The [illegible] was the [illegible], with a crowd of tourists on board. It took us right up to the glacier, so that we were within 200 feet of the ice when we stopped.

At this moment the sun struck it full and the great glacier [illegible] became one mass of silver frosted with diamonds and sparkling with sapphires. Where the iceberg breaks off the wall looks like a mighty cutting of the whitest ice cream. When the berg falls into the water it rises up in gigantic floating masses of aquamarine.

As we anchored the wind came to us over the glacier. It had been warm coming up the inlet, but here the icy breath of Jack Frost sent a chill to our bones. It was so cold that I could hardly write, and this cold continued during our stay.

The captain of the steamer gave a number of salutes to show the effect of the sound. As the shriek of the whistle made the air vibrate mighty blocks began to drop from the glacier into the sea. As the whistle continued to blow there was crash after crash, and at one time a mass as big as a New York office building broke away and slid down into the ocean. It [illegible] itself in the water, throwing a rainbow spray almost to the top of the glacier and sending great billows to roll out to the steamer. A moment later it rose to the height of a hundred feet above the surface and moved up and down in the surface.—Christian Herald.

THE POOR WOMAN'S LAWYER

During and after the American Civil War a horde of pension lawyers arose who filled the halls of Congress with clamorings for larger and larger pensions to their clients.

In Canada, so far, there has been no such development. The Canadian Patriotic Fund has acted for the woman bereft of her soldier husband, and has set in operation all machinery necessary to secure her the pension a grateful nation is proud to give to her. It has constituted itself the poor woman's lawyer, her pension agent, her guide and friend—and all in the name of Patriotism, without money and without price.

How Rochefort Hurled Ridicule.

Henri Rochefort even more than Hugo was the natural butt of those caricaturists devoted to the destinies of Louis Napoleon. But none of the cartoons directed against him could bit deeper or leave a more lasting sting than his own sallies in the columns of the Lanterne. His favorite method of attack was one which made prosecution impossible or else made the prosecutor ridiculous. In the Lanterne one found apparently innocent squibs which ran something like this: "The emperor sat yesterday for his portrait, which is being painted by M. ——. M. —— has won wide distinction as a painter of animals, and it is expected that the emperor's portrait will prove a great success."—Exchange.

KEEP LITTLE ONES WELL IN WINTER

Winter is a dangerous season for the little ones. The days are so changeable—one bright, the next cold and stormy, that the mother is afraid to take the children out for the fresh air and exercise they need so much. In consequence they are often cooped up in overheated, badly ventilated rooms and are soon seized with colds or grippe. What is needed to keep the little ones well is Baby's Own Tablets. They will regulate the stomach and bowels and drive out colds and by their use the baby will be able to get over the winter season in perfect safety. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Old, But Wily.

Into the grocery store walked an ancient lady with a slow and halting tread, carrying on her arm a basket containing a large earthenware pot with a lid.

Placing the basket on the counter she made various purchases, which she put carefully in the pot and had her bill made out.

"By the way," she said, "do you mind keeping this pot with the purchases in it until I come back and pay for them, and it will be more convenient for me to leave the things here till later?"

The request was willingly acceded to and, lifting the pot carefully out of the basket, the old dame placed it with an effort in a corner; then, putting her basket on her arm, left the shop.

Hours went by, day ripened into evening, and evening gave way to night, but the old woman did not return.

At last the proprietor thought of examining the earthenware pot to see if by any chance it had the owner's address upon it, and great was his astonishment, not untinged with dismay, to find that it possessed no bottom!

Nowadays that shopkeeper is very suspicious of pots in baskets.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

TREES ON PASTURE.

Poor Location Results in Loss of Fertility.

Perhaps one of the greatest sources of loss of fertility from pasture soils results from the poor location of shade trees and brush, according to the author of the "Grazing Industry of the Blue Grass Region," a bulletin recently published by the department of agriculture. Trees and brush, he states, should always be set on the higher portions of the field and not along the banks of running streams, as so often is the case. With good grass the animals do not graze more than one-third of the time. The rest of the time is spent lying down or standing in the shade fighting flies. Hence much of the manure that is made does not get back directly on the land that produced the grass. If the manure produced while the animals are not grazing is deposited on the tops of the hills its beneficial effects on the grass may be noted for several rods from the hillsides. It is easy to believe that if one-half to two-thirds of the manure is lost from pasture fields and none is added the crops must gradually deteriorate.

Undoing of a Thief.

A Scottish farmer was selling wool one day to a carrier, and after weighing it he went into the house to make out an invoice. When he came back he missed a cheese that had been standing on a shelf behind the outer door. Glancing at the bag of wool he observed that it had suddenly increased in size.

"Man," he said to the carrier, "I hae clean forgot the weight o' that bag. Let's put it on the scales once mair."

The carrier could not well refuse. The bag was, of course, found to be heavier by the weight of the cheese inside. A new invoice was made out, and the crestfallen carrier went away.

The farmer's wife at once missed the cheese, and rushing to the yard told her husband that some thief had stolen it.

"Na, na, Meg," replied the farmer, quietly, "I hae just selt the cheese for two shillin's the pund."—London Tid-Bits.

AFTER-CHRISTMAS GRATITUDE.

Or What We Would Really Like to Say.

Dear Friends, I thank you one and all
For thoughtful gifts bestowed,
The sewing bags (of which I have Already quite a load!)
The red silk stockings,
Though of course I never would wear
red.
The cushion for my living room
That kills the curtains dead!
The many-colored centrepiece
To set the lamp upon (Too bad it's quite impossible—
The room is all cretonne),
The picture in the fancy frame
(A seventh-rate marine),
And though I hate it
I must hang it where it will be seen!
But most of all
I thank you for
The Christmas bills I owe—
'Twill help to build my character
To get them paid, I know!

NEW YEAR'S MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL

Ottawa, Dec. 30.—His Excellency the Governor-General as president of the Canadian Patriotic Fund has issued the following New Year's appeal on behalf of the Fund:

Twice His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught appealed to the people of Canada in support of the Canadian Patriotic Fund. The prompt and generous response on each occasion proves how truly Canada appreciates the debt which she owes to her sons who are fighting for the Empire. Heavy as the sacrifices have already been, the Dominion is as determined as ever to carry the war to a successful conclusion and, however onerous the burden may be, she is equally determined to help the families of those who are serving in the army and in the navy. The administration of the fund has been most successful and economic and subscribers can be fully assured that their contributions are being expended to the best advantage.

Fifty-five thousand families, comprising one hundred and fifty thousand individuals, are to-day dependent upon the fund and it is estimated that twelve million five hundred thousand dollars will be required to meet the requirements of the next twelve months.

The sum is a large one but when the circumstances are fully realized I am confident that the people of Canada will willingly contribute the amount necessary for the fund to continue its patriotic and beneficent work.

(Signed) Devonshire.

His Plans.

The lady visitor was kindly and well meaning. As she chatted with a burglar who had been sentenced to six months' imprisonment, she thought she detected signs of reform in him.

"And now," she said, "have you any plans for the future on the expiration of your sentence?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am," he said, hopefully. "I've got the plans of two banks and a post office."—Exchange.

The Trainman's Joys.

A woman swayed back and forth in the aisle on the front car on train 101.

"There are plenty of seats in the rear cars, madame," said the conductor, politely.

"Let 'em stay there," she snapped back, pettishly. "What I want is more vacant cars in the middle of the train. If you don't provide those so's I can get a seat when I want it I'll complain to the management and to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Seats in the rear car, indeed! I want a seat in the middle car or none at all."

One of them, presenting his card, said: "You shall hear from one of us. Our name is Lawes." "Lawes, is it?" quoth Felix. DARING WORK OF OUR PATROLS

Told of By Canadian War Records Office.

One Minor Raid, Mine Crater Occupied.

London Cable.—The following communication is from the Canadian War Records office:

Daring work by our patrols, one minor raid and the consolidation of a mine crater have been the features of the fighting on the corps front during the past week. The minor raid, which was completely successful, is of special interest in showing the skill and daring which characterize the work of our patrols after dark.

On New Year's eve a party of two officers and five men of a Montreal battalion left our trenches, and fifteen minutes later had crossed the enemy's wire and entered his front-line trenches without being detected. Finding no Germans in the immediate vicinity of the point of entry the raiding party commenced to move down the trench towards a point where a sentry post was believed to be located. The trench was full of mud and water, making movement extremely difficult, but the post was eventually reached without any of the enemy being encountered.

After waiting for about twenty minutes a sentry was heard approaching, and before he could offer any resistance he was overpowered and compelled to surrender. A second German was overpowered as he was emerging from a dugout, and with their two prisoners our party returned to their trenches without further incident.

The spirit of adventure which leads to enterprises such as that already described has given our patrols a predominance the value of which is difficult to overestimate.

On the night of the 28th of December a mine was successfully blown up by us, and the western lip of the crater formed was seized and consolidated by a party of an Edmonton regiment. The work of consolidation was carried out well under most difficult weather conditions, the night being wet and pitch dark.

ROUMANIANS NOT HOPELESS

Firmly Believes in Final Ally Triumph.

Though Hun Invasion Still Proceeds.

London Cable.—The Jassy, Roumania, correspondent of the Times cables under date of January 8th: "To-day the festival of the Orthodox Christmas was celebrated here under circumstances of distress and privation, which might well bring dismay to the modest heart, but the Roumanian nation has the virtue of adversity with fortitude and dignity. An encouraging and touching feature of the present situation is the tone of optimism which pervades the whole community, which is inspired with complete confidence of the ultimate triumph of the allies and the realization of the national unity for which the greatest sacrifices have been cheerfully endured. The Ministerial journal Miscarea says: 'The star of Bethlehem, which two thousand years ago announced to mankind the birth of a new era and the triumph of right and justice for humanity, now rises amid bloodshed, but gives the same eternal hope to the Roumanian people, which have sacrificed all for the sacred ideal; notwithstanding disasters, the nation maintains a firm belief in its destiny and the victory of civilization over tyranny and barbarism.' A resolve to continue the war is unanimously expressed. No details of the German peace proposals are known here, but the reply of the allies meets with cordial approbation. The ministerial press declares that the German overtures are prompted by the hope of escaping the inevitable consequences of their approaching defeat."

INVASION CONTINUES.

The invasion of Roumania by the troops of the Central Powers continues to progress, despite the efforts of the Russians and Roumanians to hold them back. Berlin reports that the invaders, pushing eastward into Moldavia, from the Transylvanian Alps region, are gaining ground step by step, while the forces of Field Marshal von Mackensen, driving northward in Moldavia, has won additional ground, reaching the Putna River sector. In this fighting the Teutonic allies, according to Berlin, have taken 5,423 prisoners and captured three guns and ten machine guns.

Petrograd admits that the Russians along the line of the Putna and Sereth Rivers have fallen back, but says the manoeuvre was carried out without hindrance. A slight retreat on the Kasino River by the Russians is also recorded by Petrograd, but it is asserted that south of the Oituz River and near Rekoza, on the Suchitza River, attacks by the troops of the Central Powers were repulsed.

UNRULY PRINCESS

Put Under Guardian by German Rulers.

Amsterdam, via London Cable.—According to the Rheinische Westphalische, of Essen, Princess Louise of Belgium, has been put under a guardian, at the instigation of Archduke Ernst Gunther, of Schleswig-Holstein, a brother-in-law of the German Emperor. Archduke Ernst is assistant to the Governor-General of Belgium.

Princess Louise of Belgium is the oldest daughter of the late King Leopold and the divorced wife of Prince Philip, of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. She has been constantly before the public for several years on account of her love affairs, her quarrels with her family and her sensational extravagances.

HUN TO STRIKE AT RUSS NEXT

Plans Great Drive in East for This Year.

Sees No Hope of Victory in the West.

London Cable.—The Times' military correspondent, commenting on the German plans, writes: "In mid-December there were, not counting cavalry, 128 German divisions (2,560,000 men) on the west front; 106 divisions (2,120,000 men) on the Russian front, of which 65 are German and 39 Austrian, and two Turkish; 29 divisions (580,000 men) on the Roumanian front, including 12 German 11 Austrian, four Bulgarian and two Turkish divisions; 12 divisions (240,000 men) on the Macedonian front, of which eight or nine are Bulgarian, two or three German, and one Turkish; 33 Austrian divisions (660,000 men) in the Italian theatre. Now that the Roumanians have joined the Russians, we must admit that there are 135 enemy divisions (2,700,000 men) opposed to Russia.

"It takes two to make peace. The writer is only concerned as to what Hindenburg will do if the war continues. We can put the west out of account. First, because the Germans had such a gruelling in France, and, secondly, because a German offensive in this quarter would suit us so well we cannot dare to hope for it. Verdun and the Somme have given the enemy no desire whatsoever to recommence his experience against the armies of France and Britain. Meanwhile his plan is to mass heavy guns, shells and men, so that his inferiority in the west may be less sensible in 1917 than in 1916.

"We cannot exclude Italy as the destination of Hindenburg's floating balance of reserves, because 20 divisions added to the 33 Austrian divisions facing Italy would give the enemy a good chance of doing something. The situation in Switzerland also needs attention.

"We well believe Hindenburg, who always affirmed the greatest danger threatens from Russia, wishes to continue the campaign broken off in the autumn of 1915. With 135 divisions on the Russian front he has the power necessary for conducting a fresh campaign with vigor. Germans declare the Russian armies are exhausted and short of war material, and the Austro-German railway system is far superior to the Russian. Russia must certainly be prepared to find herself in 1917 the anvil of the German hammer."

RUSS PREMIER HAS RESIGNED

Trepoff Quits Post After Two Months' Power.

Prince Golitzine Succeeds to His Office.

London Cable.—The Russian Premier Alexander Trepoff has resigned.

According to Reuter correspondent at Petrograd, both Premier Trepoff and Count Ignatieff, Minister of Public Instruction, have resigned.

Prince Golitzine, a Senator and member of the Council of the Empire, has been appointed Premier.

Senator Kultchitsky has been appointed Minister of Public Instruction. M. Neratoff, Deputy Foreign Minister, has been appointed a member of the Council of the Empire.

Alexander Feodorovich Trepoff succeeded Boris V. Sturmer to the Premiership in November, 1916, his appointment being regarded as a victory for public opinion against so-called "unjust influences." Soon after taking office Premier Trepoff made his famous speech in the Duma, in which he declared that the Entente Allies had agreed to the Russian claim to Constantinople and the Straits. The existence of this agreement had been for a long time alleged, but never before had it been thus publicly and formally admitted.

During Premier Trepoff's incumbency there has been much discussion among the members of the Duma, and the obstructionist movement of some of the members was marked by somewhat serious demonstration.

AUSTRAINS ARE SHORT OF FOOD NOW

Rations of Troops On the Italian Front Further Cut Down.

MORE ALLY GAINS

New Trench Mortar Keeps Enemy From Coming to Grips.

Italian Headquarters, Cable.—New elements in the situation favoring our allies have created a profound depression everywhere among the enemy rank and file.

There has been a recent reduction in the rations of the Austrians. The rations for a year past have been barely sufficient. For six weeks past they have been quite insufficient both in quality and quantity.

The line of battle on the Gorizia and Trieste fronts has advanced a considerable distance since the November offensive. There is no relaxing of the Italian endeavor, no cessation of activity even for 24 hours. The advantages realized are all in favor of our allies.

The Austrians in their retreat on the Carso in the last offensive deliberately left a "No Man's Land" about a mile in breadth from Vippacco as far as Jamiano. This condition was a triumph for the new Italian bombarda (special trench mortar), which with heavy 11-inch projectiles harassed the lines of the enemy so he could come to close quarters. In a series of night advances recorded in some 12 official communiques the Italian lines were brought forward within bombing distance of the Austrians along the entire sector. These rectifications of the line have been carried out as surprises which frequently have made in the short space of a night on rock soil, which admits of no digging without mining. Whatever has been taken has been held.

The greatest onslaught was against the line at Adrian Werke, a mile and a half east of Monfalcone on the night of Dec. 10. It is doubtful whether such a bombardment and attack has been known before. Certainly nothing finer in the way of resistance stands to the credit of the Italian troops. The trench line, in marshes without protection, which for one hour was subjected to the most awful rage of high explosives and big shells to which the Austrians have ever given vent, was held without a break against superior forces of veteran troops.

Bersaglieri (dismounted cavalry) managed to prevent the greater part of the assailants getting back to their own lines. There is no doubt the intention was to recapture Monfalcone that night.

Hungarian troops have been largely weeded out of this front for Roumania, but a fresh division has arrived from Galicia. The increase in the enemy's artillery has been enormous. Such an abundance of munitions has not been observed for many months as now rule. There has been a great improvement in the co-ordination of enemy methods in every department. The visibility of the Austrian trench lines has been enormously reduced in the last three months. To improvements in method are added copious supplies of guns, machine guns and munitions. This is the Austrian response to the Italian advance toward Trieste, which carried Cadorna's troops to within 15 miles of the goal.

PORTUGUESE AT THE FRONT

Force of 20,000 Doing Their Share in West.

Well Equipped and in Splendid Shape.

London Cable.—The beginning of Portugal's active participation in the struggle on the western front is described in a Daily Mail despatch from British headquarters, which says:

"The general impression produced by this first glimpse was of smartness and efficiency. This is no joy trip or merely a formal demonstration of military alliance. It is a real effort on the part of Portugal to do all she can to help the Entente's cause, and do it as well as she can.

"Her little army means business. It has undergone thorough training on a modern line at home, where a compulsory system has been put in force with a period of training varying from four to seven months, and it is ready and anxious to profit out here by all the experience which is being gained.

"Its equipment is good and serviceable, being very similar to that of the French, with the addition of khaki greatcoats.

"The division, as at present constituted, contains three brigades of infantry, of six battalions each, a regiment of cavalry, engineers and field artillery, consisting of eight [illegible] batteries of 75's."

CUNARDER WAS RAMMED.

New York, Report—The Cunard liner Laconia, scheduled to leave Liverpool December 31, with passengers and mail for New York, was rammed by a small vessel just prior to her time of sailing and damaged to such an extent that she was compelled to abandon the trip, according to passengers booked for the Laconia who arrived here to-day on the American line steamship St. Paul from Liverpool. Among arrivals on the St. Paul was Alfred Noyes, the English poet, and ex-Premier Deakin, of Australia.

RHEIMS CATHEDRAL

Will Be Restored When Conditions Permit.

Paris, Cable.—Albert Dalimier, under-secretary [illegible] made a [illegible] statement to-day regarding the Rheims cathedral, which, it has been reported, the Kaiser is anxious to have restored [illegible] has asked permission to this end from the German authorities.

"Tenders were given by the French Government for provisional repairs to the roofs of the cathedral in August, 1914," said M. Dalimier, "but we were unable to begin work without an agreement with the military authorities and they begged us to do nothing. They pointed out that the cathedral was still under German fire, that from Nogent to La Pompelle, where the batteries firing on the town were installed, everything that passed could be distinctly seen and that workmen on the cathedral would therefore be sure to be observed and fired upon. When the situation permits the work will be undertaken."

GERMANS MAY ATTACK ITALY

Before Spring Finds the Allies Prepared.

Expert Also Expects Attack by Hun Navy.

London Cable.—The military expert of the Times, discussing the question of Germany's probable war plans in the near future, expresses the opinion that Field Marshal von Hindenburg may attempt a blow against Italy before the spring finds all his opponents prepared to meet him with their full strength. The writer dismisses the possibility of an attack on the western front as remote, but says that the German chief of staff may use his "floating balance of reserves" against General Cadorna, because "twenty more divisions added to the thirty-three Austrian divisions facing Italy would give him a good chance of doing something."

After saying that the situation in Switzerland must not be disregarded, "since neutrality counts less than nothing to the Germans," the writer finally concludes that Russia will be von Hindenburg's main objective.

"With 135 divisions on the Russian front," he says, "von Hindenburg has the power necessary to conducting to a fresh campaign with vigor and the current operations in Roumania tend to throw back the Russian left and place the Austro-Germans in a better position for continuing the attack on Russia than they could boast last autumn. The Germans declare that they are impressed by what they term the internal disorganization of Russia, and affirm that the Russian armies are exhausted and short of war material. The Austro-German railway system is far superior to the Russian and the German auxiliary service act will supply the drafts needed for an offensive campaign. Russia must certainly be prepared to find himself in 1917 the anvil for the German hammer.

"Meanwhile the present German design is obviously to secure the line of the Sereth, perhaps of the Pruth, and in any event the mouths of the Danube. Thereby the German line, so intolerably extended when Roumania came in, will be shortened to the least possible length. Many divisions can be restored to the general reserve, and Von Hindenburg will be more free to use them where he will.

"The seizure of the lower Danube and the use of the river as a means of entrance into the Black Sea for German submarines would be an attractive programme, affecting adversely not only the Russian campaign in Armenia, but also the other campaigns of the Allies in the eastern Mediterranean. We can hardly expect a winter campaign by Germany on the whole Russian front, but in May all the armies will be in movement, and Russia is not likely to exclude from her calculations the transfer of German weight to the left by rail and an advance on Petrograd in co-operation with the German navy."

The writer anticipates a sea attack by the navies of both the central powers. "If economic conditions," he concludes, "are as galling in Austria and Hungary as they seem to be, we must naturally expect before long a violent effort by their navies to break the blockade which is strangling them. If it comes it will be delivered with all their forces, united and with the last degree of energy. Nothing must turn our minds from the constant expectation of this act of despair."

THE SHANNON WAS NOT SUNK

Berlin Cable, via Sayville—According to the Basler Anzeiger, says an Overseas News Agency announcement to-day, "the British armored cruiser Shannon, of 14,600 tons, was sunk in November last through a mine explosion."

London, Jan. 10, 2.50 p. m.—The British Admiralty stated to-day that there is no truth in the story printed by the Swiss newspaper Basler Anzeiger that the British armored cruiser Shannon, of 14,600 tons, was sunk by a mine off the south coast of England last November.

BRITISH RAIDS ON WEST FRONT

Many Good Gains Over Enemy Forces.

German Trenches Entered, Many Men Killed.

London Cable.—The official report from British headquarters in France to-night reads:

"The last 24 hours have been marked by a series of well executed enterprises in various portions of our line. A highly successful minor operation was carried out last night east of Beaumont-Hamel. We seized a consolidated section of an enemy trench and took prisoner three officers and 166 men.

"We carried out a successful raid this afternoon east of Loos and secured a number of prisoners.

"Yesterday evening we entered the enemy's trenches opposite Armentieres and killed many of the enemy, and destroyed a hostile machine gun and did other damage to the enemy's defences.

"Artillery activity continued in the neighborhood of Les Boeufs and on both sides of the Ancre valley. We bombarded the enemy's trenches opposite Loos and his battery positions in the neighborhood of Gommecourt. Destructive bombardments of the enemy's lines were also carried out north of La Bassee Canal, west of Ploegstreet and in the neighborhood of Ypres."

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris Cable.—The official communication issued by the War Office Wednesday night reads:

"Intermittent artillery fighting occurred on the greater part of the front; it was more active north of the Somme, in the regions of Bouchavesnes and Clery, and in the Argonne, in the sector of Four de Paris."

ANOTHER HUN BID FOR PEACE

Amsterdam Cable—Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German Imperial Chancellor, may be expected to make an important declaration about the middle of the present month, according to a despatch to the Tyd from Berlin to-day.

The reply of the Entente to President Wilson is being awaited, says the despatch, and the Chancellor, after its contents are known, will further define in the Reichstag the position of Germany. Germany, it is declared, will simultaneously address representations to the neutrals which supported President Wilson's proposals.

ALL FOR WAR AND VICTORY

Watchword of the New Premier of Russia.

Is a Reactionary in Internal Matters.

Petrograd Cable.—The political situation during the last two months, for which the word "crisis" seems entirely inadequate, has taken a new turn with the resignation of Alexander Trepoff from the Premiership and of Count Ignatieff, Minister of Public Instruction, and the appointment of a new Premier. The official announcement of this change which has fallen upon the country, continuously excited and emotionally exhausted by the drama of swift changes and climaxes, hardly created the effect which would have been natural under other circumstances.

This time the tide has suddenly shifted, and is running strongly in the reverse direction. Prince Golitzine, who succeeds Trepoff, is a member of the extreme conservative group, who always manifested the strongest reactionary principles, and, as a member of the Imperial Council, has always shown little sympathy for the progressive tendencies of the new regime. The ostensible reason for his replacement of Trepoff was the inapparent inability of the latter to preserve a strong, united Cabinet.

It had been known for some time that there was a great divergence in the point of view between two distinct groups in the Cabinet, in one of which stood Trepoff and Ignatieff, and in the other M. Protopopoff, the Minister of the Interior. The fall of one group or the other became essential. The significance of the latest change in the Ministry can best be judged by the following sentiments expressed by Prince Golitzine in an interview after his appointment:

"I have not yet had time to formulate a programme, but my watchword will be 'Everything for the war; everything for victory.'

"Being occupied with this aim, we cannot now think of reforms in the interior. After victory we can begin the reorganization of our internal life."

The new Premier said that he was a firm believer in the responsibility of Ministers only to the will of the Emperor and that in this principle the Government must be united.

"This, however, does not exclude the Legislative Chambers from taking an interest in the affairs of Government," he continued. "There is no reason to believe that the work of these chambers will be postponed beyond the date already set for reconvening."

Prince Golitzine's career has brought him into frequent contact in the past with former Premiers Goremykin and Sturmer, with whom he is said to be on good terms. He shares the political opinions of M. Protopopoff.

The Russia Volia, a newspaper recently founded, commenting on the change, says:

"The news has had the effect which one might expect. The meaning is clear. The old regime has been strengthened in the direction taken at the time of Protopopoff's appointment as Minister of the Interior—the original conservative course, to which has been added new reactionary elements. The theory of the practical working of the Ministry, which has been so unsuccessfully attempted by Trepoff, has been set aside. Consequently, there can be no talk at present about co-operation with the Legislative Chambers. We are before us desolate Parliamentary prospects."

FORECAST OF ALLIES' REPLY

Restitution, Reparation and Securities Demanded.

Map to Be Redrawn On National Lines.

London Cable.—The Manchester Guardian's London correspondent, forecasting the terms of the Allies' reply to President Wilson, says:

"Restitution, reparation and securities are demanded, and the note gives some indication of the aims of the Allies in redrawing the map of Europe. The principle governing this must be the question of nationalities.

"[illegible] are mentioned. Belgium must regain her independence and be indemnified for her loss. The boundaries of France must be redrawn in a spirit of restitution. Italy must redeem her provinces, and the boundaries of the Balkans must be redrawn in conformity with nationality and history. Russia must have access to a warm sea. Great Britain is not mentioned, nor is the question of colonies.

"The reply also deals with the American proposals for a league to enforce peace, which it approves in principle, but questions how such a league can be brought about, and the machinery by which peace can be enforced.

"The striking thing to the world is that while the President directed the note to each of the Allies, the Allies' reply is one."

In the West Simcoe campaign Col Currie tried to connect the name Bowman with the Kitchener trouble, thereby linking up C. M. Bowman, M. P. P. for West Bruce, in the hope of questioning his loyalty. The Globe says Mr Bowman has Swiss ancestors, while a Toronto clergyman in the same paper makes out he is Pennsylvania Dutch. Mr Bowman would do well to call off the dailies with their explanations and ask them to leave it with the people of Bruce, who know Charley as an all-round good Britisher and a mighty good man to have in any community.

Paying the Price of Prosperity

Agnes C. Laut, a writer of note on financial conditions, in McLean's for January, makes a comparison in food prices in the United States and Germany.

It will no doubt be a great surprise to our readers to know that bread, milk, meat, clothing, rent, fuel, each and all are 100% higher in United States than in Germany or in Austria. Five cents to day will buy a loaf of white bread in Germany twice as large as the white loaf in New York. Food is cheaper to day in a Berlin restaurant than in New York, for the simple reason that when the price raisers in Germany began to put on the price the Government at once put on force and made them come down. Miss Laut does not argue that there is not scarcity of food in Germany. There is. But for what there is to be had it is cheaper than in the United States.

The writer shows that the U. S. is in a riotous state of prosperity and warns the people of Canada that what is true of the U. S., from an industrial standpoint is true, to a certain extent, of Canada.

But, the high wages in Canada, apply mainly to a few industries, such as munition factories. Not all workers can receive the high pay because there are many things offered for sale which people can do without and yet in the making of these things many persons are given employment. Although in Canada not all can receive the higher wages all must struggle with the higher prices charged for living.

While some Canadians have profited by the war, the great majority have suffered. But, we are proud to suffer for a cause which means freedom.

No Canadian covets the present prosperity of the United States. We are assisting in a life and death struggle for the principles of democracy, and we want, after the struggle has been won, to bear some of the marks of it. We hope money is not the standard of our nation, and when peace comes it will mean rest and freedom to us What will it mean to the United States, which has wallowed in wealth and remained neutral in the greatest moral struggle the world has ever known?

North Bruce Baptist Church

The annual meeting of North Bruce Baptist church was held on Wednesday afternoon January 10th at 2 o'clock. Owing to the extreme cold the attendance was not so large. After devotional exercises reports from the different parts of the work were presented. Clerk by Allan McKinnon, jr., Treasurer's by H. B. McLean, which showed a good year's work had been done in finances, in reducing a considerable deficit, with which the year opened. The Sunday school report were presented by A. E. Jones and showed a balance on hand. The school is open all through the summer.

The Women's Circle report was given by Mrs. Allen McKinnon and showed a good year's work Beside the Missionary work the ladies raised a large sum for repairing the interior of the church A new ceiling and paper on the wall has made a fine change in the appearance. A. E. Jones reported on the extensive repairs to the roof that places the building in a good state of repairs.

The following were elected as officers for the year 1917. Clerk, Allan McKinnon, Jr; Treasurer, A. E. Jones; Sunday School supt., A. McDonald; Sec. treas., Mrs. A. McKinnon. Finance committee J. McArthur, A. McDonald, D. M. Cameron, A. McKinnon.

The church has raised for all purposes for the year about $600.

Hockey Game

Port Elgin 2, Southampton 9. What will "Beefer" Geddes, "Rusty" Thomson, and "Dobby" Stephenson say when they read this while shooting at old Fritz on the firing line. However, it wasn't as bad as it looks. Port Elgin has had to manufacture a new team of youngsters, the only experienced, being Alex. Mann. It was a remarkable game, too. Just think of Southampton and Port playing a game without any rough-house. Only one player was ruled off, and that was Haug of the old Southampton players. However, his offence was slight, that of picking a tooth from Edgar Ridout.

The first part of the game belonged to Southampton, and they got four goals quite easily. The second and third periods were evenly contested. Wells in goal is the making of a good man, while Bell and Ridout are going to be fast with practice The defence was made up of Billy Goar and Tassie, who are showing they know something of the good points. Alex Mann was a tower of strength to the home team, but the fact is all the boys need practice. They show good combination, and the spectators were well pleased with the first effort.

For Southampton Huber and Gemmel were the stars. Taylor in goal was also there nearly every time, and it had to be a fast shot to get by.

M. McIver refereed, and kept the boys in good order. Off sides were frequent, but this will improve as the season advances.

Make Some Money By Appointing Officer

Port Elgin council could make some money by appointing an inspector under the Temperance act.

According to section 120 the council of any municipality may appoint an officer to enforce in the municipality the Ontario Temperance act. When this is done all fines go to the Treasurer of the Municipality. This has been done in several places recently, and as the fines are usually heavy a goodly sum has been taken in by the Municipalities in question.

This officer has the same powers to proceed as Inspector Waite has, and in town if the people are not being properly served by the council's appointee the county inspector may still be called in.

Reeve Izzard brought this matter before the council, but a by-law was not passed for lack of a suitable man to fill the job.

Here's a chance, then for some good temperance advocate to show a willingness to act and the council will do the rest.

ELSINORE

Rev. Dr. Minido visited Elsinore on Sunday afternoon last and at the service in the Presbyterian church presented the claims of the Belgian relief fund. He was well received.

The action brought by two farmers, Ernest Ashcroft of Albemarle and Edwin Bennet of Turnberry, against two drovers, Jos. Sanderson and Cecil Day of Wiarton for $425 damages and costs for breach of contract in the purchase of 45 head of cattle, and which was argued before Judge Greig and Jury at the County Court here last week, resulted in the plaintiffs getting a verdict of $403 and costs. The drovers after contracting to buy the cattle from the plaintiffs, afterwards refused to take them, and were held liable by the court for the loss the farmers sustained by the latter drop in price, as well as expenses incurred re-selling them.

As Explained in Port Elgin's School

The teacher of one of junior departments of Port Elgin public school was looking for information. She asked the scholars to define a prairie, a ford, a tidal bore, and perhaps a lot of other things.

But one lad immediately stopped the procession in his anxiety for an opportunity to explain what a ford was.

"Well, explain to the class."

The lad's reply was: "A ford is an inexpensive car!"

She hath done what she could

Every married man in the ranks of Canada's soldiers means that his wife gave her consent.

His the sacrifice, the danger, yes—but his also the interest of a new experience, the companionship of comrades, the inspiration of action, the thrill of the advance, and the glory of victory.

Her's the pitiful parting, the weary waiting, the fevered watching for the dreaded message, the gruelling grind of daily responsibility for those dependent upon her—and her alone.

No, No; not alone! Not alone, as long as the people whose battles her husband is fighting have a heart in their bosoms or a dollar in their pockets.

Not alone—as long as Canadian manhood and womanhood knows the meaning of the word "trust." Not alone, as long as Generosity is the handmaiden of Duty and Privilege.

Only an appreciation of the need is required by those of us who here at home keep the hearth fires burning. Not for some of us the supreme sacrifice, but for one and all of us at least that whole-hearted answer to the cry of patriotism that never yet has failed to go ringing around the world when the call has come.

GIVE — GIVE — GIVE as your own heart prompts you, give to the Canadian Patriotic Fund. $6,000,000 must be raised in Ontario for the vital necessities of the great work of caring for the needy families of Ontario's men at the front.

Every case is carefully investigated, everything humanly possible is done to eliminate mistakes and prevent imposition—but to the needy is held out a helping hand, without lavishness, but with the determination to see no real want unsupplied.

You are again offered the great privilege, not of charity, but of recognition of the magnificence of Canadian Wifehood.

Remember, if the Man is a Hero, the Woman is a Martyr.

"She hath done what she could"

Ontario is being asked to assure the Canadian Patriotic Fund that it can depend on having six million dollars in 1917 for the families of Ontario's soldiers.

Four million of these dollars must be secured from individual subscriptions. If there is no Branch of the Fund in your town or county send your subscription direct to the Head Office, Canadian Patriotic Fund, Victoria street, Ottawa. 13

Lesson III. Jan. 21, 1917.

First Disciples of the Lord Jesus.—John 1: 35-51.

Commentary.—I. Following Jesus (vs. 35-39). 35. Again the next day—The day following the one on which John the Baptist said to the people, "Behold the Lamb of God." The records of his testimony as to Jesus are that on three successive days he declared to the people that Jesus was the Messiah. He gave witness of this fact to the priests and Levites who came from Jerusalem. He introduced Jesus to the multitudes. He declared this truth privately to two of his disciples. Two of his disciples—We are not told how many disciples John the Baptist had. From this chapter we learn that some of them directly became followers of Jesus. From an account of his sending an inquiry from the place of his imprisonment, asking Jesus of his Messiahship, we know that he had disciples then (Matt. 11: 2-6); and he had disciples at the time of his death (Mark 6: 27-29). 36. Looking upon Jesus—The verb has in it the thought of beholding with intense interest. Behold the Lamb of God—"Behold, the Lamb of God!"—R. V. This announcement declared both the nature and mission of Christ. 37. They followed Jesus—The two disciples were so impressed by the declaration the Baptist made and the appearance of Jesus, that they were fully convinced that he was the Christ and henceforth became his disciples. It was but natural that they should do this, and John could not expect them to do otherwise. He was preparing the way for the establishment of Christ's kingdom and was not interested in securing a following for himself. "They followed Jesus" as truly as their former master had heralded his coming. They followed him when there was little in sight to attract them. They followed him because they were convinced that he was the "Lamb of God" to take away the sins of the world. They followed him through reproach and shame and through suffering, but they followed him to eternal triumph and bliss.

38. What seek ye—This was not asked to obtain information. It was a kind of inquiry respecting their desires; an invitation to lay open their minds, to state their wishes, and to express all their feelings respecting the Messiah and their own salvation.—Barnes. Rabbi—A Jewish title. Jesus forbade his disciples to accept it (Matt. 23: 8). It means master, or teacher. Interpreted—John explained the Hebrew term rabbi for the benefit of those who were not Jews. Where dwellest thou—They wished to know where he lodged that they might have an extended interview with him. 39. Come and see—Jesus gave them a hearty welcome. He recognized their sincerity and devotion. About the tenth hour—According to the Roman method of reckoning it would be ten o'clock in the forenoon, but according to the Jewish method it would be four o'clock in the afternoon. The latter was probably the hour.

II. Winning souls (vs. 40-46). 40. one of the two .... was Andrew—Andrew's name is the first mentioned in the list of Christ's disciples. There is no doubt as to the other one, for it must have been John, the writer of this Gospel. He always modestly refrained from mentioning his own name. 41. he first findeth his own brother Simon—The language in the Greek would imply that each of the two disciples sought at once his own brother to bring him to Jesus, and Andrew succeeded first in bringing his brother Simon. Thus each disciple sought to bring some one to Jesus. This has ever been the method of advancing the cause of Christ. we have found the Messias—There was an expectation at that time that Christ was about to appear. It was wonderful news that Andrew carried to his brother. The fullness of time had come, and he who was to redeem the world had been found. 42. he brought him to Jesus—It was through human agency that Simon was brought into contact with the Saviour of men. thou art Simon—Though it is the first time that Peter ever saw Jesus, it is not the first time that Jesus, in spirit at least, ever saw Peter. He knows his parentage, his name and history.—Whedon. Jona—John. thou shalt be called Cephas—Jesus saw clearly the nature of Simon and what he might become through grace, and he changed his name accordingly. His new name meant rock and stood for solidity. which is by interpretation, A stone—"Which is by interpretation, Peter."—R. V.

43. the day following—The day after Christ's interview with Peter. Jesus would go forth into Galilee—Jesus determined that his ministry should begin in Galilee rather than in the wilderness where John was preaching or in Judea, where ecclesiasticism was intense. His home was in Galilee, and the people of that district were not closely bound up in religious customs and hence would be open to the teachings of Jesus. findeth Philip—Philip's home was in Galilee, in a village called Bethsaida, on the northwest shore of the sea of Galilee, and one also at the north end, east of where the Jordan flows into the sea. This was called Bethsaida Julias. The home of Philip, Andrew and Peter was the Bethsaida first mentioned. The name means house, or place, of fish. 45. Philip findeth Nathanael—As soon as Philip became a disciple of Jesus, he went forth to bring another to him. He became at once a winner of souls. in the law—The Pentateuch, or the five books of Moses. the prophets—The Old Testament prophets foretold the coming of the Messiah. Jesus of Nazareth—Nazareth, the early home of Jesus, is a city about fifteen miles west of the Sea of Galilee, situated among the hills, high above the plains of Esdraelon, which stretches away to the south. It overlooks the scenes of many of the great events of Old Testament history. the son of Joseph—This is the language of Philip. Joseph was the reputed father of Jesus, and Philip expressed the common opinion of those who knew the family. 46. Can there be any good thing come out of Nazareth—The question implies either that Nazareth was an insignificant town or that it bore a bad reputation. Nathanael lived in Cana, only four miles from Nazareth, and he was astonished that the Messiah should come from that place. come and see—Personal investigation would answer his inquiry.

III. A hearty confession (vs. 51). 47. Behold an Israelite indeed—Jesus not only saw Nathanael as one man sees another, but He also saw thoroughly his character. He noted that there was no guile, or deception, about him. He was an honest descendant of Abraham. 48. Whence knowest thou me—Nathanael was not acquainted with Jesus and he was filled with wonder that Jesus should know him. When thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee—The thick foliage of the fig tree furnished a choice place for meditation and prayer, and doubtless Nathanael made use of it for that purpose. He was astonished at the words of Jesus. 49: Thou art the Son of God—The bearing of Jesus together with the marvelous knowledge that He manifested drew forth from Nathanael this sincere and weighty confession. He declared that He was the Messiah and the long-expected King of Israel. 50, 51. As great as was the mystery of how Jesus saw Nathanael under the fig tree, there would yet be shown much greater manifestations of His power and glory.

Questions.—What did John the Baptist announce to two of his disciples concerning Jesus? What course did those disciples take? Why did they address Jesus as "Rabbi"? Who were the two disciples? Whom did they go to seek? What name did Jesus give to Simon? What does the name mean? Whom did Philip bring to Jesus? What confession did Nathanael make?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Finding the Christ.

I. Was the culmination of John's ministry.

II. Led to personal, saving faith.

I. Was the culmination of John's ministry. We have here the first steps in the history of the gospel. The first announcement which sent men to Christ was, "Behold the Lamb of God." John the Baptist and Jesus had here met for the last time. The Baptist was preparing for the change in their relative positions implied in the entrance of Jesus upon His public career. It was a proof of John's humility that he should be content to transfer his disciples to One greater than himself. In the school of the herald they had been prepared for the service of the King. It was a proof that they had profited by the lessons of the herald when they evinced a yearning for the still higher society of Christ. There was much to be known of Christ which their teacher could not impart. In following Jesus they acknowledged His high character as a Master, on whose instruction they desired to wait. We have brought before us the first beginnings of the Christian Church, beginning with the quietness which is characteristic of God's noblest works. It is the beginning and first movements of personal religion. In this record we have the principle of Christian missions condensed into a few words, the happy exercise of Christian sympathy and enterprise. The two disciples of John followed Jesus. That was the decisive act which determined their destiny.

II. Led to personal, saving faith. Jesus came to earth in order that in him the favor, fellowship and life of God might be made accessible to man. The efficiency of his sacrifice covers all the needs of spiritual life. It was not an accident that the first words of the Master, spoken in his Messianic office, expressed the profoundly significant question, "What seek ye?" It suggested to the disciples of John their need of having a clear consciousness of their object. Jesus set them on examining their purpose in following him. There was no lack of tenderness in his question. He saw that the motive of these ardent disciples must be laid bare to themselves. He foresaw that they were to become able ministers of his gospel to their fellow men. They desired a private interview that they might have a deeper insight into his character and mission. Their question, "Where dwellest thou?" was a direct confession of a desire for closer communion. It was the time for a deeper exercise of faith and the rising by it into a higher life. Jesus fully gratified their desire and satisfied all their hopes. The seed sown in the wilderness bore fruit when Christ by his invitation quickened it into life. The conviction was formed in the minds of his two guests that their Host was none other than the Christ foretold in Hebrew prophecy. Momentous consequences flowed from Andrew's loving act. He could not have performed for his brother a nobler act, neither presented to Christ a nobler tribute of his love. His was the impulse of a brother's heart, the action of a brother's energy. Prompt zeal, quiet helpfulness and yearning faith entered into his act. The Master took possession of Simon, changed his name and received him at once into his service. Philip did not seem to have been moved by the preaching of the Baptist to follow Jesus. He was called to discipleship by the direct voice of Jesus. Gratitude to the Redeemer impelled him to a proclamation of redemption. By inviting Nathanael to see for himself, Philip showed his entire confidence in his own assertion and his willingness to have it proved. Philip's anxiety was to bring Nathanael into personal communication with Jesus. Nathanael heeded Philip's terse advice. He honestly yielded to the force of truth. He uttered at once an emphatic testimony to Christ's divinity and Messiahship. That earliest creed, formulated by a guileless Israelite, was a brief statement of faith in Christ, made to Christ himself. In obedience to John's wilderness preaching we trace results in the disciples beholding Jesus, in following him, in communing with him, and finally pointing others to him. In faithfulness to his mission we mark the searching question of Jesus, put to his first followers, his gracious invitation to them, his encouraging promise to Peter, his divine command to Philip and his revelation to Nathanael concerning himself.

HOW TO MAINTAIN FERTILITY OF THE SOIL

Growth of Leguminous Crops, Conservation of Barnyard Manure, Application of Lime and Phosphatic Fertilizers Are the Four Essentials.

Every agricultural country so far as the fertility of its soil is concerned, passes four stages. The first stage is where the soil is virgin and yields crops bountifully. No manure or fertilizer of any kind is required, and indeed, on account of the richness of the soil, it would not pay to use them. The second stage is where the land has been depleted of a certain amount of its virgin fertility, but still contains sufficient plant food to wield profitable crops, if leguminous crops are grown, and all the manure that is made is returned to the land. The third stage is where the reserve of plant food in the soil is still furtherther depleted, and where the application of manure made from the crops grown on the farm is not enough to produce crops that will yield maximum profit. The soil has also probably become somewhat acid through the continued use of farmyard manure. Now the growth of leguminous crops (clover, alfalfa, peas beans, etc.), and the use of manure must be supplemented by regular applications of lime (to correct the acidity of the soil,) and phosphatic fertilizers. The fourth stage is where not only must leguminous crops be grown, manure applied, regular dressings of lime and phosphatic fertilizers given, but potassic fertilizers must be used as well. In other words, the soil through heavy cropping has become deficient in all the essentials elements of plant life and a complete fertilizer must be used.

CLOVER INCREASES YIELD OF NEXT CROP.

All these different stages of soil fertility are represented in Canada. Only a very limited area has reached the fourth stage, but practically all the older settled portions have reached the third stage.

Some leguminous crop should be included in every rotation. Extensive experiments have shown that where land is fertilized regularly with lime and phosphatic fertilizers, and the only manure applied is that obtained by feeding the roots on the land, that the fertility of the soil can be maintained for at least sixty years. Leguminous crops are the sheet anchor of modern agriculture.

A great many farmers do not realize the necessity of conserving the manure on the farm. They regard it more as a nuisance than anything else. If they realized that every ton contained about two dollars' worth of fertility, they would probably take more care of it. A ton of manure contains about 10 pounds of nitrogen, 5 pounds of phosphoric acid and 10 pounds of potash. At pre-war prices these elements of fertility would cost in artificial fertilizers about $2.25.

Not only does manure enrich the soil directly with plant food, but when it rots or decays the acids formed which act on the insoluble plant food already present, and make it soluble and available for plant use. The organic matter in the manure furnishes the living bacteria in the soil with energy to work. The activity of Azotobacter and other nitrogen fixing bacteria is directly proportional to the amount of organic matter the soil contains.

Not only does manure enrich the soil with plant food and benefit the soil bacteria, but it has a very important physical effect. It loosens up heavy clay soils and makes them more easily worked. On the other hand, it makes loose sandy soils more compact. The desirability of an abundance of organic matter in the soil is noticed especially in dry seasons, when it will be observed that soils that are lacking in this respect dry out very quickly and become hard and crack. If lots of manure has been applied and the soil consequently has an abundance of organic matter, the moisture will be held—where it is wanted—near the surface, in reach of the plant roots.

Barnyard manure does not make a "balanced ration," so to speak for plants. It is deficient in phosphoric acid. For this reason, when land has been worked for a number of years and the crop yield is not as large as it was formerly, it pays to use phosphatic fertilizers. They should be used as a rule on the roots or corn. The application of from two to four hundred pounds of acid phosphate or basic slag per acre will generally prove profitable.

When land has been dressed regularly with barnyard manure for a number of years it becomes acid. Lime will correct this acidity. Experienced farmers in the older countries give their land a dressing of lime every few years.

There are three chief kinds of lime, viz: lime carbonate or ground limestone, slaked lime, and gypsum. The lime carbonate or ground limestone is the kind that should be used in most cases. It is less caustic than the slaked lime and moreover is a good deal cheaper.

Gypsum, or sulphate of lime, is found in beds or deposits in various parts of the Dominion. When pulverized, it is very commonly called land plaster. It is a valuable source of lime, as the compound is more soluble in water than the carbonate of lime, but it does not neutralize the acid of sour soils as do the lime carbonate and slaked lime. In other respects, gypsum or land-plaster may substitute lime, and being more soluble may be applied at a much less rate per acre. It also contains some sulphur, which some authorities now think may have a special value in the soil.

Ground limestone may be applied at almost any time of the year. Freshly slaked lime, especially if the soil is very sour and a heavy application is required, is perhaps best applied in the fall. It is the surface soil that needs the lime most, consequently, it should not be plowed down.

In considering the amount of the various forms of lime that should be applied, it is well to remember that 56 pounds of pure quick lime is the equivalent of 80 pounds of pure carbonate of lime. That is, 56 pounds of fresh lime or 74 pounds of slaked lime will have the same general effect in the soil as 100 pounds of ground limestone. While not quite accurate, one ton of quicklime may be considered equal to two tons of the carbonate. However, the character of the soil should be taken into consideration in deciding which material to use, carbonate or lime, that is, ground limestone and marl, is much milder in its action than the freshly slaked lime, and is therefore the better material to apply where rapid action is not an important point, and especially on light sand and gravelly soils. These soils are usually poor in organic matter, due to the free oxidation induced by their open porous nature. Freshly slaked lime is generally credited with hastening this oxidation and on light soils would thus cause too rapid a dissipation of this valuable material. On heavy clays, freshly slaked lime may be used to advantage. There is not the same fear of unduly hastening the decay of the organic matter and its action in causing flocculation of the clay particles will be more rapid and the improvement in the physical condition of the soil more quickly obtained. On soils between the sands and clays, experiments in other countries indicate that the carbonate of lime will probably give the best results through a term of years, although the returns for the first year or two may be in favor of fresh burned lime.

AMOUNT OF LIME TO APPLY.

For mucks and peaty soils that may be decidedly acid, the fresh slaked lime is to be preferred.

The amount of lime that should be applied naturally varies with the nature of the soil, and the degree of acidity. We have generally recommended one ton of fresh lime or two tons of ground limestone, per acre. This is probably enough for light soils that are not very acid, but experience is showing us that much heavier applications may be made on clays that show acid with litmus paper. Too heavy dressings with fresh lime tend to sterilize the soil for a time, that is, the lime checks the life process of organisms within the soil. There is, however, no fear of this with the carbonate of lime. On light soils it is safe to apply from one to two tons of the ground limestone, and on clay the same amount of the fresh lime. But in some cases the clays may be so sour that much heavier applications are required to neutralize the acid present and give the maximum returns.

PECULIARITIES OF HIGH EXPLOSIVES

It is now realized that armies in the field are using many different kinds of explosives, of which the most common consists of nitrocellulose, manufactured from cotton. For this purpose, as the late Sir William Ramsay pointed out, the guncotton must be "nitrated," or converted by the action of nitric and into a gelatin-like material, which may or may not be combined with nitro-glycerine. It is a frequent mistake to suppose that nitroglycerine usually supplies the propulsive force of modern ammunition. It has been found, on the contrary, that it is inferior to some other explosives, while it has certain objections, such as the space it occupies, and its tendency to explode when struck or when a concussion takes place near it, as during the firing of a heavy cannon. Hence, the material made by nitrating cellulose and cotton, when reduced to a very fine powder or to threads, known as cordite, is employed for the purpose of generating the force which propels a projectile out of a gun. This modern ammunition is far more effective than ordinary gunpowder, made from charcoal, sulphur and saltpetre. It develops an enormous amount of energy. The pressure of the gases liberated may equal twenty tons to the square inch in the chamber of the gun, and the porjectile may leave the barrel with a velocity of 1,600 yards a second.

Cotton, however, is not the only form of woody fibre from which nitrocellulose can be made. Wood pulp, straw and substances like coke dust have been used, for example in Austria, but these substitutes have various drawbacks. First, they have the defect mentioned before of occupying too much space and, secondly they ignite too quickly, and thus the pressure is raised so suddenly that they cannot be used to expel a bullet from a gun. They are manufactured for other purposes, however, being excellent explosive material for shells, since they are not so easily made to explode as guncotton is, and because this property enables them to pass through the barrel of a gun without exploding; whereas the concussion of firing, as Sir William Ramsay says, is apt to explode a shell filled with guncotton.

Another objection to nitrocellulose prepared from straw or wood pulp is that, though it possesses similar properties to guncotton, the powders made from it have not the same propulsive power as has an equal weight of guncotton, from which it is apparent that a bullet propelled with one of these substitutes will not have the same velocity as if propelled by an equal weight of guncotton. It is probable, however, owing to the great demand for explosives that much nitrocellulose made from wood pulp is now being used, and so it will be necessary to compress it into a smaller bulk to fit guns already designed for guncotton; there is a new danger due to this confinement.

Whether this confinement of nitrocellulose could have been one of the causes of the explosion in New York is, of course, more or less conjectural, but it is quite likely that some circumstances like the compression of explosives may have been a contributing cause. It will be noticed that there were several explosives reported. The concussion produced by a single explosion would initiate a state of the elements of such substances as mercury fulminate or picric powder sufficient to cause their detonation, a condition of things which would immensely increase the unstable properties of high explosives like trinitrotoluene and picric acid, otherwise not easily made to explode by burning or ordinary percussion.

Now the packing or confinement of explosives, as in railway cars and barges, can produce other effects that heighten the danger of what may be called spontaneous explosion. If these explosives should contain picrates or picric acid, there is the danger that compounds of a highly explosive nature will be formed. Picric acid, for example, forms dangerous compounds with lead, and for this reason it is necessary to pack it in shells or receptacles which contain no lead, nor even lead paint on the screw threads of the plugs. To avoid this danger manufacturers commonly varnish the interior of shells which are filled with picric acid, but at the best it has a capricious chemical character and may explode even after such precautions have been taken.

In the present war picric acid is used on a great scale. It is reported that lyddite shells were stored in barges in the harbor. Lyddite is picric acid, either uncombined—that is, mixed, say, with other substances — or molten and "cast" picric acid. Cast picric acid is a treacherous substance with a dangerous and wholly unwarranted reputation for stability. In fact there are chemists who say that it is the safest explosive for transport. This is quite a mistake. The French have found that it has an unstable nature, sometimes exploding after a very slight concussion, though at others it requires a considerable detonation to make it separate into its gaseous elements.

An expert of the "Conservatoire des arts et metiers" describes it as the perfect type of explosive. He means that in ordinary circumstances it does not explode under violent shocks, and it is not easy to ignite. But there appears to be no absolute security for this stability. "Without any apparent reason," he writes significantly, "it explodes spontaneously by detonation." (Revue Scientifique, p. 452, 1915). He then says: "If we examine the causes of this singular property with more care we find that this capricious explosiveness is due, in the first place, to the formation of picrates. Picric acid, which is made by nitrating phenol or carbolic acid, combines with most metals, forming salts which are more unstable than picric acid itself."

Picric acid, when detonated, is one of the most powerful of known explosives. The violence of the explosion in the harbor would indicate the true origin of the unhappy occurrence. It is also quite likely that the picric acid and its mixtures were improperly packed and stored, and certainly the presence of such a large quantity of this explosive in one place, under bad atmospheric and other conditions, is a wonderful example of imprudence and that happy go lucky system of guarding such things under which we live.

There is still another peculiarity of this explosion to be noticed. The question of relative bulk has had a great influence in the selection of the charges for shells. We have plenty of modifications of picric acid which are known, like shimose and melinite, and doubtless other modifications which are unknown, and due to the genius inspired by the war.

Modern inventors have tried to make an ammunition which concentrates the greatest energy in the smallest space and the greatest explosive power in the most manageable form; nitrocellulose is a type of the first; picric acid and picrates, ammonium picrate and others are types of the second. But, according to Sir William Ramsay, guncotton cannot be compressed to a greater density than 1.25, but picric acid and other shell fillings can be compressed to a density of 1.69, in other words, a shell, which would hold a pound and a quarter of guncotton would hold one and three-quarter pounds of the denser picric acid and trinitrotoluene.

The explosion is therefore increased in violence because the larger amount is used as well as the more rapid explosion of the shell filling. Sir William Ramsay is an incontestable authority, and his views on explosives throw much light on the New York catastrophe. As usual we have done business in a modern, up to date manner, which is a melancholy satisfaction, if such a reflection can support our optimism in this mean.—N. Y. Sun.

Souvenir for Germans.

"Bike" Evans, former Brantford ball player at the front lost none of his old nerve. The story has come out that recently "Bike" crawled over to a German dug-out and called out with expletives: "How many are there of you down there?" The answer came back in good English: "Eight of us." "Then divide these among you," called Evans, and with that he hurled in two hand grenades, and in the confusion made his way back uninjured.

Care With Ashes.

During the winter months the disposal of ashes from stoves and furnaces demands attention. Though many fires are caused by the deposition of hot ashes against frame buildings, wooden fences, etc., the practice is still continued.

Too much care cannot be given to the disposal of ashes. Either metal containers should be used, or the ashes should be placed at a safe distance from anything combustible.—Conservation.

AN EVIL HERITAGE

"It was perfectly true. Marian had always been silent and always been serious, but since she was at Thornton she had become an aggravated copy of herself. The place was detestable to her. When she had last been here she had thought to love it; now that everything reminded her of those few happy weeks, she felt as though she could not breathe its air. Rather would she have lived in some dark alley where the sun never shone, in some tumble-down hovel, anywhere rather than in this luxurious home, where the shadow of Bernard semed to meet her at every turn, reproaching her for being in the place which should have been his. The sight of every farmhouse which she had entered when accompanying him on his daily rounds, of the plans of the model cottages which were discovered in a drawer in the writing table, of these and many other things, was enough to make the old wound bleed afresh each time. Once—it was on the day when she first saw again the ruined chapel and the ivy-grown walls of the cemetery within the park—a passion of grief seized on her, so intense and so irresistible that she flung herself face downwards on the ground, not weeping, for the tears would not come, but tearing at the grass with nervous fingers; while her chest heaved with dry sobs and her teeth were tightly locked. It was on this spot that she had met Bernard on the morning after coming to Thornton, and it was here that he had spoken first of the dead Caroline Berrincott, who had become the indirect cause of his misfortune. The sight of the cemetery walls had brought back the moment so vividly that Marian was frightened at herself. She had not even known that she was capable of such a passion as this. From her childhood upwards she had been trained to hide every sign of outward emotion, and the result had been that the strong feelings, forcibly repressed, had grown stronger yet, with the intense strength of concentration. Until to-day she had never thoroughly understood herself, and it was dating from this solitary outburst that she began to see the necessity of battling against her grief. It must not be allowed to master her again in this fashion; the world must not know that she was mourning for her cousin.

From that day forward she carefully avoided the part of the park where the cemetery lay, and she began more frequently to accompany her aunt Valeria to dinner parties and afternoon calls.

The yet, despite of everything she could do, the county pronounced her to be "not like other girls," and the various suitors who had sprung up like mushrooms around the new-made heiress, could not understand why it should be so difficult to win a single paltry smile, not to speak of higher favors, which even the most sanguine among them soon came to recognise as standing out of their reach.

The comforts of life had not the same attraction for Marian that they had for the father, partly, no doubt, because youth can more easily dispense with this sort of outward support than middle age, and therefore it was that even this source of consolation failed her. What was the good of it all? She sometimes asked herself, what was she to do with all this money placed at her command, since not even one shilling of it could go to lighten Bernard's struggle with existence?

There was one thing, however, for which she wanted her large allowance. Ever since she had learnt of Miss McCrie's dismissal from office, the old maid had become her pensioner. The captain was not much of a connoisseur in ladies' dress, and yet even he was puzzled at the want of variety in Marian's attire, and the dearth of those laces and furbelows which figured so largely on the persons of his neighbors' daughters, and which surely £20 a month ought to have sufficed to procure. How could he know that about two-thirds of the banknotes destined for these agreeable frivolities sailed out to St. Clara by the first mail of every month? However indignant she might feel toward the betrayer of her secret, Marian could not let her starve because of having saved her from the consequences of her own rash act, and Miss McCrie had accepted the proffered support without protest, with the same straightforward simplicity that she would have given it. Besides Miss McCrie was the only person through whom she could occasionally get direct news from Bernard, for the old maid got a letter from Bolivia at least once in every two or three months.

Once, during the first months of her stay at Thornton, Marian had a confidential talk with Sybil. They had met before more than once, but never without witnesses. The tete-a-tete, when it came, took place, strangely enough, during a dance. It was the hunt ball, which Marian had made a point of attending in order to convince the county that she was, after all, "quite like other girls." Sybil was there, too, of course, the queen of the ball, as she had been for these two years past, though to-night strange to say, her sovereignty was not absolutely undisputed. Among those who had ever been her true subjects treacherous whispers were heard, and as the evening advanced opinions grew more and more divided as to whom the palm of beauty was due—to the stately, black-haired girl in the flowing maize-colored draperies, or to the slender one in the softly pink robe with the cluster of wild roses in her breast.

"There can't be any question in the matter," an admirer of Sybil's superciliously remarked. "Sybil Durrant flashes upon you the very moment you're over the threshold, while as for the little Berrincott girl, I don't believe anybody would ever have looked at her twice if it were not for the money. Why, she verges on the insignificant. It is nonsense even to dispute about it."

"Then why do you dispute about it?" asked some one else. "You've been watching her those five minutes, though you may not be aware of it."

"It is quite possible that one would not have looked at her if she had not ben the Thornton heiress," another said, "but once you have looked at her it is not so easy to look away again. It's the sort of face that one is always making discoveries in, and I like making discoveries. I began by thinking that her eyes were gray and her hair brown, and now I am not quite certain whether her hair is not golden after all. And as for her complexion, which I took at first to be colorless, I am beginning to discover that it is as transparent as a piece of mother-o'-pearl, and almost as full of delicate tints. Now what I object to about Miss Durrant is that there are no surprises about her. It is quite true that she flashes upon you, but then she flashes everything upon you at once. The moment you set eyes upon her you know what you have got before you—a big, black-haired woman; for as for the color of her hair and eyes there can't be two opinions, unless one of them comes from a color-blind person."

"All that is true enough," said a fourth speaker, "but it is not there that the point lies. The real difference between them is that there is a history in one face, and nothing but a serene resignation, at most, in the other."

"What is she being resigned to just now?" came from another. "Can it be Sir Norman Vallington? I am told the engagement is proclaimed."

So a great many people were told that night. The news was first whispered and then spoken aloud, and many were the congratulations received by Mrs. Durrant. In the course of the evening this newest piece of gossip could of course not fail to reach Marian's ears. Her first feeling was a quite unreasonable sense of indignation. That a woman who had been loved by Bernard, who was still loved by him, as she supposed, should find it possible to marry another man, was in itself incredible enough, and the appearance of Sir Norman, whom she had seen for the first time that evening, only served to make the case appear more monstrous. As she watched the little man hopping nervously around Sybil's chair, and thought of what Bernard was, her heart swelled in anger against the girl who might have been his wife.

It was during the next half hour, when indignation was still in its first heat, that Marian, entering the toilet-room with about two yards of pink flouncing in her hand, found Sybil Durrant having her maize-colored draperies readjusted, for the last waltz had been a rather stormy one. Various other young women were standing about the room, quivering with impatience while the helpful needle was being plied, and scarcely able to stand still because of the sound of the dance music which penetrated even here. Each made haste to be gone as quickly as was manageable, for there was another round dance on, and five minutes after she had come into the room Marian found herself alone with Sybil. She might have been gone too, had she wanted, for the pink flounce was in its place again, but the maize-colored draperies had been more troublesome to adjust, and Marian seemed to have made up her mind to wait until they were done, rather to the surprise of Sybil, who glanced at her once or twice inquiringly, and, as it appeared to Marian, almost a little uneasily.

"She knows I am his cousin, and she has a bad conscience," said Marian to herself.

When the attendant spirit rose from her knees and left the two rival queens of the ball standing comparatively alone, Marian, knowing that there was no time to lose, began at once.

"Is it true that you are going to marry Sir Norman Vallington?"

"Yes, it is true," said Sybil, looking startled.

"But why are you going to marry him? Not because you love him, surely? You need not tell me that you love that man, because I would not believe it. Do not forget that I have seen him."

Sybil looked a little shocked, and her astonishment increased. Evidently she was flurried, too, despite her calm exterior, for she began to play with her fan, just as any other girl might have done. Marian, on the other hand, was too excited to be flurried. Since Bernard was not there to stand up for himself, she felt as though it were her sacred duty to take his part.

"Of course I must love him since I am going to marry him," stammered Sybil.

"And have you quite forgotten Bernard?"

The other looked at Marian doubtfully. She would have preferred to escape this tete-a-tete had it been possible, and yet Marian had always interested her, ever since the day when she had seen her take that first jump with Bernard by her side.

"Have you really quite forgotten him? I thought it was not possible to forget him. I wish you would tell me how you did it."

"I have not forgotten him," said Sybil, throwing a frightened glance towards the door, and speaking low and quickly.

"Then why do you—how can you——"

"But it is not I who do anything, or can do anything; it is mamma."

"I don't believe that. No mamma could be the so unkind. I am sure it depends upon you. And, oh, Miss Durrant, have you ever thought how much he needs some one to love him, out there where he is quite alone, with everything, everything lost? Try and think how dreary the world must be to him. You are not yet married to Sir Norman—oh, do you think it is too late?"

"Too late for what?" asked Sybil, aghast, but there were tears in her eyes, as Marian saw.

"Why, for breaking off your engagement, of course, and becoming Bernard's wife."

This time Sybil almost laughed, though her eyelashes were still wet.

"You don't know mamma. If you knew mamma, you would know how funny what you are saying must sound to me."

"Are you afraid of her?"

"I suppose 'afraid' is the right word. At any rate, I could never do anything except what she wants."

"I don't believe that either; you look like the sort of person to be ordered about."

"I can't help what I look like. I have told a great many people so already. You can't think how tired I am of hearing my 'queen-like' qualities talked of. And it is no use telling people that I don't feel a bit queen-like," went on Sybil, warming a little to her subject. "I only want to be let alone, and nobody will leave me. They will go on expecting great things from me, when all the time I am feeling so small, so miserably small, and then, of course, they are disappointed. Don't you understand what I mean?"

"Yes, I think I am beginning to understand," said Marian thoughtfully.

"It is not my fault, is it, that I am big and have got black eyebrows, and happen to carry my head at an angle that suggests haughtiness? I assure you that I can't even imagine what it feels like to be haughty; and though I know that it is generally the strong-minded women that have got black eyebrows, I know just as well that I am weak-minded, ridiculously weak-minded. I am a coward, morally and physically; I know it, and I do so wish that other people would get to know it too."

She paused, a little short of breath, not being used to speaking so much.

"I see," said Marian. "Yes, I think I see. Shall I tell you what I think? I don't think it is quite fair upon you to look like that. You ought not to have been so beautiful."

What Marian wanted to express was the impression floating in her mind that the small weaknesses confessed to by Sybil could not help looking all the smaller and more despicable by contrast with her magnificent physique.

"Of course I ought not," said Sybil readily. She had always been wonderfully simple about the possession of her beauty. "In this way I feel so in a false position, for I am not what people take me to be, and I don't really know whether I am anything else in particular. I have not got spirit enough to do what I know is right. I am not even what they call 'a beautiful picture,' for a statue doesn't have no feelings at all, I suppose, and I do feel a good deal sometimes, though it does not generally last very long," she added candidly and with a resigned sigh.

"I am sorry for you," said Marian, putting out her hand and giving Sybil's fingers a furtive little grasp. "I think I understand you better than I did before. I see now that there is no hope for Bernard."

"Not that sort of hope; but I always fancied——"

"What did you always fancy?" asked Marian, growing scarlet under the other's gaze.

"He is sure to get over his disappointment," said Sybil dispassionately, "and he always used to speak so kindly of you. I really do think you would suit him very well."

"But how do you know that I——"

"You? Oh, that part is simple enough. Anybody can see that you are unhappy about something, and I always had a sort of suspicion. That evening when we first met I began to guess, but I never was quite sure until this evening. Now I am certain of it."

"This evening? But what have I said? Haven't I been urging you to marry him?"

"In order that he should not be lonely—yes, that is just it."

"I don't understand; and why can anybody see that I am unhappy about something? Surely, I go to parties and talk just like other girls, and to-night I have been smiling, and even laughing, quite as much as you, for instance."

"Yes, but your eyes—you have not got any control over them; they look so terribly sad."

"Do they really?" said Marian in bewilderment. "Oh, I wish I knew what to do!"

"You must not ask me, for I never even know how to advise myself, but I know what would be the best ending of it all. And you would make a far better wife for him than I ever could have done."

She looked at Marian with friendly eyes as she spoke, and with something like emotion in her voice, for such things as spite and jealousy were unknown to her. She might be weak, but she was not ungenerous.

"And you would be able to take interest in his plans and projects, and I know that I should have got tired of it all very soon. Those sort of things weary me so terribly, I am not made for fusses and worries, I know it."

"I wish you would not talk like that," said Marian, almost angrily. "You know that it is all nonsense, and that it can never be. It is you he loves, not me." And for one moment she felt as though she hated Sybil. "It only makes it worse to have these sort of ideas put into one's head."

"Does it really? Well, I am not going to talk like that, or like anything else either, for I am afraid Sir Norman may [illegible] looking for me, and it would be such a bother to explain. It will be far less trouble to go."

And gathering up her gloves and fan from the table beside her, Sybil went from the room, sweeping her maize-colored draperies behind her; and as she walked, her features settled back again into that serene resignation which was her habitual expression, and which had been noted by more than one person this evening as being stamped upon her beautiful face in a more than usual degree.

Both before and after this interview Marian and Sybil remained strangers to each other; the short conversation in the toilet room was like an oasis of intimacy in the midst of a wide desert of cool acquaintanceship.

Constant Headaches

When the nervous system gets run down one of the most persistent symptoms is headache. Nervous headache has been described as the cry of the starved brain for more blood.

Because of its remarkable blood-forming and blood-enriching qualities, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food ranks first as a means of overcoming nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, headache, indigestion, sleeplessness, irritability and all the annoying symptoms of nervous breakdown.

It is not a mere relief, but thorough cure; for it rebuilds and reconstructs the wasted and depleted nerve cells.

Don't say "Breakfast Food"—say "Shredded Wheat"—for while you no doubt mean Shredded Wheat, you may get one of those mushy porridges that are a poor substitute for the crisp, delicious shreds of baked whole wheat—that supply all the nutriment for a half day's work. Two Biscuits with milk or cream make a nourishing meal at a cost of a few cents.

"Skirl" of the Bagpipes.

It is claimed for the Scottish bagpipe that it is louder than any other variety of instrument. This is probably because it was originally designed to cheer the clansmen when they were fighting. In the hands of a skilled performer the strains of a Highland bagpipe carry about six miles and under specially favorable conditions as far as ten miles. The Duke of Sutherland owns a bagpipe which figured in the battle of Prestonpans, and must therefore be nearly 200 years old, yet it can be heard at a distance of eight miles.—London Globe.

Magical Effect on Neuralgia Throbbing Pain Goes Quickly

A YEAR'S SUFFERER CURED BY "NERVILINE."

No person reading this need ever again suffer long from Neuralgia.

Nerviline will quickly cure the worst Neuralgia, and Mrs. G. Evans, in her strong letter written from Russell postoffice, says: "One long year, the longest of my life, was almost entirely given up to treating dreadful attacks of Neuralgia. The agony I experienced during some of the bad attacks was simply unmentionable. To use remedies by the score without permanent relief was mighty discouraging. At last I put my faith in Nerviline. I read of the wonderful pain-subduing power it possessed, and made up my mind to prove it valuable or useless. Nerviline at once eased the pain and cured the headache. Continuous treatment with this magic-working remedy cured me entirely, and I have ever since stayed well."

Mrs. Evans' case is but one of hundreds that might be quoted. Nerviline is a specific for all muscular or joint pains. It quickly cures neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, lame back neuritis and rheumatism. Forty years in use, and to-day the most widely used liniment in the Dominion. Don't take anything but "Nerviline," which any dealer anywhere can supply, 25c per bottle.

Cold Hearts.

Young Lord Uffington, the heir of the Craven earldom and the Bradley Martin millions, has eloped with a town clerk's daughter."

The speaker was E. Berry Wall, the New York clubman. He went on:

"Young men continually make these romantic marriages, but young women seldom do so. Dukes sons marry beneath them regularly, but dukes daughters—never.

"Women, I fear, have colder and more mercenary hearts than men. There's a story on that line.

"An octogenarian banker took the hand of his beautiful girl wife in his, and, shedding a senile tear, he quavered:

"'Alas, darling, we are ruined. An unfortunate slump in war stocks has wiped me out completely. Not a cent is left.'

"Nathalie, the ex-movie queen, gave a bitter laugh.

"'Then,' she said, 'I did marry for love, after all, didn't I?'"—Exchange.

HIS SMILE.

I know a jolly little lad
  Who gets up every morning glad;
He's happy all the time. He knows
  Such heaps of jolly things to play.

His face is very seldom clean,
  Except just at his washing time,
For even dirt is fond of him
  But mother doesn't mind the grime.

She kisses both his chubby cheeks
  And tells him merrily the while,
However thick the dirt may be,
  It cannot cover up his smile.

And when she cleans him up, she laughs
  And says most every single day
How glad she is no soap that's made
  Can ever wash that smile away.
    —Ina L. Wright, in Ladies' World.

RICH RED BLOOD MEANS GOOD HEALTH

Just a Little More Rich, Red Blood Cures Most Ailments.

The lack of sufficient red health-giving blood does not end merely in a pale complexion. It is much more serious. Bloodless people are the tired, languid, run-down folk who never have a bit of enjoyment in life. Food does not nourish, there is indigestion, heart palpitation, headache, backache, sometimes fainting spells and always nervousness. If anaemia or bloodlessness be neglected too long a decline is sure to follow. Just a little more blood cures all these troubles. Just more rich, red blood, then abounding health, vitality and pleasure in life. To make the blood rich, red and pure, use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. No other medicine increases the pure blood supply so quickly or so surely. The cure actually begins with the first dose though naturally it is not noticeable. This is not a mere claim. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been doing this over and over again in Canada for more than a quarter of a century. This is why thousands have always a good word to say for this great medicine, for instance, Mrs. Alex Gillis, Glenville, N. S., says: "I cannot praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills too highly. They are really a wonderful medicine. I was very much run down, suffered from frequent dizzy spells, and had an almost constant severe pain in the back. My home work was a source of dread, I felt so weak, and life held but little enjoyment. Then I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and the result was most marvellous. They made me feel like a new woman and fully restored my health. I would urge every weak woman to give these pills a fair trial."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail, post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Horns of Venus

References are made in some cuneiform literature to the "horns of Venus," from which it is concluded by some that in the clear air of Mesopotamia the crescent form of the planet was detected in early times without optical aid. Since Venus, when at a sufficient angular distance from the sun not to be lost in the glare of the latter, is hardly more than half a minute of arc in diameter at the utmost, such an observation seems quite out of the question, and Professor Campbell thinks the allusion to the horns was merely a lucky guess on the part of the ancient astronomers.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Messrs. Arthur Burgess and Noble Burgess have gone to Guelph to take a short course at the Agricultural College.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Morrow of Tara are visiting at Mr. W. J. McIvor. Mr. Morrow is still unable to do any work.

The debate in the literary society last week was very interesting and both sides held their own in excellent arguments.

Miss Wallace, teacher, was taken ill suddenly on Monday.

About 35 of each, men and women attended the Board Agriculture meeting on Monday afternoon. The church vestry being too small the meeting was held in the body of the church. Mr. McDougal president of the board, presided, introduced the speakers and took fees and subscriptions, Mr. Wismer, the usual secretary being absent. The lady speaker was not on the bills, for Burgoyne but word got around that she would be along with the others and wished to speak to the ladies here. After a few chosen remarks the president introduced Miss Powell. She is a lady of good appearance and talks well. Her topics were interesting to both sexes. Some valuable information was given concerning the Red Cross and Patriotic work and workers. But after 20, 25 minutes and more to a flow of good advice on home topics to the women and a hint thrown out here and there to the other sex, the men began to get more fidgety because the afternoon was getting very short and they wanted to give the men speakers a fair show. There was a noticeable brightening up when Mr. Dean was introduced, but alas, he chose for his subject, hens, and all because the women folks are usually interested in the fowl business. But the men know from sad experience the grain-gobbling abilities of most fowl, and if they, being selfish of course, get a good egg now and then for tea that's as far as they want to go in the fowl line. Mr. Dean's pleasant address being finished there was another straightening up and a smile of expectation on most faces as our former friend Mr. Murphy was introduced. But alas, for the large building and the position of the speaker in the centre thereof on a level with the listeners his voice could not be heard distinctly more than a few seats away, and those farther back had just to laugh at his rich jokes when they saw others nearer by laughing. His chief subject was "seed selection." Number one, extra was the only pure grass seed sold, all other 1, 2, 3 government standard were allowed to have thousands of bad weed seeds to the bushel, seed grain should be put through the mill again and again and only the plump seed sown. Choose the ripest and largest heads for a change of seed. Treat all seed for smut. The speaker preferred immersing the seed in a solution of formalin, instead of the sprinkling method although the former takes longer time. The evening late and farmers having chores to attend to the meeting dismissed without hearing a gentleman from Tara, who wished to talk egg circle.

More Than One Dance

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir,—Your Burgoyne correspondent last week reported that "many" of the young people of this district, did not attend the Leap Year Ball given by the young ladies of this locality, because conscientious reasons prevented them from doing so. To be accurate with regards to numbers, there were only six of those who were invited who did not attend. They met at another house and danced there. All honor to the man who listens to the dictates of conscience. Burgoyne Reader.

Great Interest

Great interest is being taken in the short courses in agriculture being given by Norman MacKay, District Agricultural Representative. The classes are being held in the township hall at Underwood, and there are about 35 men in attendance.

Instruction is being given in weeds, seed grains, farm book keeping, in fact all departments of farming. Mr. MacKay is delighted with the class of intelligent and capable young farmers, and says that much profit will be derived from the courses. They are held from Tuesday to Friday at 10.30 to 4 o'clock, lasting till February 2nd.

On January 22nd the girls and ladies will be instructed in domestic science by Miss D. J. Ross. Everything points to a large class. Already there are many applications.

To give sweater coats a new lease of life

Now that sweater coats are getting more expensive, it is more than ever desirable that you wash yours with LUX. Of all things a sweater coat, which is seen so much, must be kept soft, fluffy, fleecy and "new" in appearance. You can keep yours that way and wash it again and again if you do this:

Pour boiling water over LUX flakes—pure essence of soap—allowing 2 and 3 tablespoonfuls for every gallon of water you use. Whip into a creamy lather—a few seconds is needed. Then put in the garment and stir it about. Let it soak until cool enough for your hands to squeeze the water out of the coat—the dirt [illegible] Rinse in two or three relays of [illegible]

Very simple. Anyone can do it—just a few minutes' work and [illegible] result that the most expert French cleaner might well envy.

LUX won't shrink woollens. Won't hurt any fabric or color that pure water can safely touch.

NORTH BRUCE.

The house social at D. M. Cameron's 12th Bruce on Friday evening January 19th was a splendid success. The house was filled to its capacity. The social part of evening was enjoyed by all present. A fine program of recitations, solos, duets, chorus, violin solos, gramaphone selection and readings was very much enjoyed by all present, the autograph quilt made by the ladies of the North Bruce Baptist church containing over 300 names was sold to D. M. Cameron for $5. The ladies provided a very fine lunch which was appreciated by the company. A hearty vote of thanks given to Mr. Cameron and family for opening their home for the occasion. Also to all who took part in the programme. After singing God save the King the company dispersed to their homes. Proceeds $18.

Fine Time at Red Cross Mystic Tea

Everyone knows what a stormy night was Thursday, but that made no difference to the attendance at the "Mystic Tea" given by the Red Cross of S. S. No. 14 Bruce. Mr. Neil McGillivray's large residence was packed, and a splendid social time was enjoyed. The tea was first, and the mystic part was to be able to recognize a sandwich by asking for a twin sister, or a piece of pie by bachelor's delight. After tea, Mr. Alex McGillivray made a very capable chairman as he took charge of a program of speech and song. Those taking part were: Misses Young, P. Nicholson, Robertson, Messrs John Ribey, L. White, I. McVittie, E Smith, W Miller, R. Wankel, Ed. Barnes, Miss Murker, Miss L. Barnes, Dan McLean, Mrs. McVittie. Walter Annes was the lucky winner of the meat fork, and C. Nicholson the honey. The ladies of the Red Cross are to be congratulated on the fine success on such a stormy night. $50 was realized.

Whom Should we Thank?

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir: In a recent issue of The Times there appeared an article signed "Defendants" thanking J. A. Chapman J. P. for his kindly offices in getting fines refunded for two Bruce Tp. young men.

We would like to know who should be thanked in this case? Should it not be the gentlemen who wrote to the Department and had the inspector sent here and the matter investigated? SAUGEEN OBSERVER.

OUR LAST WEEK

This is our last week of business here. Your last chance at bargains.

H. KATZ,

TOWN TOPICS

W. Fenton is home from Chatham for a holiday.

Mr. Hugh McLaren is auditing in Hepworth this week.

Mrs. McMurray was in Toronto last week visiting her son, Gunner Cecil McMurray, who goes overseas shortly.

Mrs. Colschlaeger has returned from a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Ernst, at Kitchener.

Pte. Geo. Walsh, who lost a toe by accidental shooting while out hunting on New Year's, is improving.

Henry Crowe and Lambert Hamilton, dealers, have formed a partnership for buying cattle and hogs.

Rev. J. P. Parke has gone to Sutton, Quebec, for a couple of weeks visit with his daughter. Church service will be cancelled next Sunday.

Mr. Travis, of Granum, is visiting at John Howe's. He is having a good time renewing old friendships in town and district.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Craig, of Saskatchewan, are holidaying here, with Mr. and Mrs. Upshall. Mr. Craig was a former business man in Port Elgin.

The report of the annual meeting of the Agricultural Society is held over to next issue, also a report of Burgoyne church.

Miss Reddon, Teeswater, is the guest of Mrs. Chick. Sunday night she sang very acceptably in the Presbyterian church.

"Cot" Cameron returned last week from Wellesley hospital, Toronto, after his operation. Many friends will be glad to know he is improving nicely.

Mr. James Whetstone has returned from Port Hope. Mrs. Whetstone is visiting in Harriston for awhile. Both are in good health, and many friends will be glad to welcome them home.

Mrs. H. H. Stevens and daughters Frances and Dorothy left this week to spend the winter in the south at Daytona, Florida. Mr. Stevens accompanied them, and will spend a brief holiday with them.

Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture for Alberta, was in the neighborhood Monday. He purchased a fine bull calf from Reeve Christie and also a couple from Mr. John D. McArthur, town line.

Many farmers were in town last week getting corn. Shipments have been received by the North End, the Farmers' club of Bruce Tp., and George Roppel of Underwood. Several carloads were got rid of.

Red Cross ladies sent to Toronto Saturday, 37 suits of pyjamas, 90 pairs sox, six rolls absorbent cotton, $100 to Red Cross, $25 to Belgian fund, three scrap books from Mrs. Henderson's class.

A party was given by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Fenton, at their home, on Goderich street, on Thursday night last in honor of their son Pte. Herb Fenton. A large number of young people enjoyed the social time immensely.

A jolly time was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs John Cassidy last Wednesday evening. The affair was arranged by the young people in honor of Miss Celia, who is leaving shortly to take up training as a nurse in a Chicago hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. James Shouldice of Calgary, were visitors in town last week with Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Lowry. Mr. Shouldice was the warden of Bruce county twenty years ago. He represented Elderslie township at that time, and it is noted that Elderslie township has never since had the wardenship. Mr. Shouldice is prominent in the business life of Calgary, having moved to the west many years ago.

How's the Coal Bin?

There's lots of coal but no trains to draw it. Toronto got a hundred cars Saturday, and supplies may get this far in a month's time. Gib. McLaren says he has coal, but he is dealing it out in 300 lb lots, in order to keep everybody going. A car promised Mr. Heller last fall reached here last week. With this cold spell and coal scarce it's no fun watching the bin fade away. Wood is very scarce also. At least there is lots in the country, but no one with time to cut it. One man to a hundred acres and forty or fifty head of stock to look after won't be able to saw much wood.

Mrs. Chas. Donaldson is recovering nicely. Nurse Lucy McCulloch has returned home.

The carnival in Port Elgin Tuesday evening, January 30th, promises to outclass anything of the kind ever put on in Port Elgin.

Car of Corn

We have coming a third car of feed corn. Get in your order at once there is an immense demand and this car will be cleared up in a hurry.

Annual Meeting of Port Elgin Presbyterian Church

On Thursday evening, January 18th the congregation met at 7.30 p. m. to hear the various reports and provide for carrying on of the work of the congregation. The pastor, J. R. Mann, presided and after devotional exercises the business of the congregation for 1916 was reviewed, and it was gratifying to learn, that, notwithstanding the many extra demands made upon the people in a year of stress and strain on account of the European war, the congregation had maintained in good measure its former record. The moderator of session J. R. Mann, presented the report for the session, some few items of which were that 12 names had been added to the communion roll, four had been removed by death and an equal number by certificate. There had been seven baptisms. In closing the session report the pastor stated that this was the fifth annual meeting at which he had presided, that during his pastorate 105 had been added to the roll, 58 on profession and 47 by certificate, that about 70 had been removed by death and by certificate. The roll was 224 five years ago, now about 260.

The report of the board of managers showed that the total givings of the congregations for all purposes including Missions, etc, were $3420.71. After some remarks explanatory concerning a few matters, the report of the Women's Missionary Society, prepared by Miss Murker, Secretary was heard. This report showed a year of activity. $162 was the amount raised. Then followed the report of the Mission Band, Nellie Avis, Secretary. The band raised $74 during the year, both of these societies being able to report a slight increase over 1915. The report of the Ladies Aid was then given by Mrs. Wm. Geddes, Secretary, stating that $204 was raised. "Boy's Recruits," an organization yet in its infancy, officered by Misses Murker, Currie and Duncan, has an enrollment of 34, meetings being held every second Tuesday.

Messrs. Jas. Kennedy, Geo. Falconer and W. A. Mitchell were elected managers and J. D. Cottrill was elected trustee in place of J. W. Dougherty removed.

The Sunday school report was given by J. D. Falconer showing a good year, $265 was received. A goodly sum was given to Missions

After a hearty vote of thanks to choir and a gift, $15, to prayer meeting organist, the meeting adjourned for 12 months.

The total amount raised for Missions $1086 and Belgian relief $360.

Mr. Neil Pollock has returned to B. C. after spending a couple of weeks with his mother here.

Miss Beulah Stewart of Burgoyne, spent a few days here.

Mr. Malcolm McLean of Didsbury, Alta., is visiting old friends here.

Mrs. Hagan was called to Duluth last week owing to the illness of her daughter.

Mr. Peter McArthur of Calgary, is spending a couple of months with his sister, Mrs. Arch Campbell.

Mr. James Clark was in Toronto for a couple of days last week.

Many friends of "Colonel" Cameron are pleased to see him back at the old homestead again.

A number from here took a day off on Friday and went into Port to see the Government exhibit and learn how to farm. To the ones passing through the car and just glancing at the many things it was a great disappointment, but to the ones who went slowly through and followed the 'ask and you shall receive' plan, there was much valuable information given. Many modern conveniences were shown which would come in handy on any farm (were a government grant added to them.) At the night meeting poultry, bacon hogs and beef cattle were the subjects. On the whole the exhibit was interesting, but in war time we think the staff could have been cut down one half.

Mr. J. B. Fleming, of Neepawa, Man., in renewing says: "The weather here has been very cold, but milder now. We have enough snow to make sleighing. The past years crop was the worst we have known in this district for 30 years. There were some who had a fair yield, but the majority had poor crops."

Dan. Muir, of Yellow Grass, Sask., spent a few days last week with his friend, Dugald McKinnon of 13th con., Sullivan. He was a caller in Chesley on Saturday and tells us his post office got its name from the color of the grass in the sloughs in which the grass turns yellow about mid-summer. We often wondered why the place got such a peculiar name because grass is usually green. Mr. Muir owns 640 acres at Yellow Grass. He was a teacher in Saugeen before going West, taught for six years in the West but has gone back to tilling the soil again. He tells us the farmers of the West will elect about 25 of their candidates next Dominion elections and these representatives will support the party that stands for greater freedom of trade.—Enterprise.

Farming Special

The "Better Farming Special" consisting of two cars was at Port Elgin station all day Friday. Despite the worst weather of winter, and rather bad roads hundreds of people, including the school children visited the exhibits.

The train is run by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, was in charge of seven experts, who were ready to explain to anyone and everyone all about preparing the soil, sowing the seed, fertilizing, storing, selling, in fact, anything within the farm home and on the farm that everyone needed to know. A lady demonstrator was in charge of an exhibit of all the handy things a woman needs in her work in the house.

The people in the district took a keen interest by asking for much advanced information. Mr. Clark, who was in charge, said it was a great day for his staff. They liked the way our people asked formation, as it showed that our farmers and their wives were well up in the farming and housekeeping methods. Of especial interest was the poultry department. With eggs and poultry a great price all wanted to know "how to make 'em lay."

In the evening the hall was filled, when the government staff, by addresses given by three experts, entertained the gathering to some of the things for better farming. There were many school children present, who sat quietly throughout, and enjoyed the pictures shown at the close. Inspector Reid was chosen as chairman of the evening, which he filled in his usual capable manner. In his address he pointed to the great interest everyone was taking in the question of agriculture, for it was one of the chief forces in the winning of war.

The men in charge distributed much literature covering fully the plan for better farming, and this will be read and studied to good advantage.

$25.00 FOR A LETTER

CAN YOU WRITE ONE?

Thirteen Prizes to Be Awarded In a Letter Writing Competition.

Some years ago the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., of Brockville, Ont., offered a series of prizes to residents of Ontario for the best letters describing cures wrought by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Hundreds of letters were submitted in this competition, yet there must have been thousands of users of the Pills who did not avail themselves of the opportunity to win a prize. To all these another letter writing competition is offered. Thousands of cures through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have never been reported. These will furnish the material for the letter to be written in this contest. There is no demand upon the imagination; every letter must deal with facts and facts only.

THE PRIZES:

The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., of Brockville, Ont., will award a prize of $25.00 for the best letter received on or before the 17th day of February, 1917, from residents of Ontario, on the subject, "Why I Recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." A prize of $10.00 will be awarded for the second best letter received; a prize of $5.00 for the third best letter, and ten prizes of $2.00 each for the next ten best letters.

THE CONDITIONS:

The cure or benefit from the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills described in the letter may be in the writer's own case, or one that has come under his or her personal observation.

More than one cure may be described in the letter, but every statement must be literally and absolutely true.

The letter should not be longer than is necessary to relate the benefit obtained from the remedy in the case described.

Every letter must be signed by the full name and correct address of the person sending it. If it describes the cure of some person other than the writer of the letter, it must also be signed by the person whose cure is described as a guarantee of the truth of the statement made.

The writer of each letter must state the name and date of the paper in which he or she saw this announcement.

Fine writing will not win the prize unless you have a good case to describe. The strength of the recommendation and not the style of the letter will be the basis of the award.

It is understood that The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. shall have the right to publish any letter entered in this contest if they desire to do so, whether it wins a prize or not.

The contest will close on February 17th, 1917, and the prizes will be awarded as soon as possible thereafter. Do not delay. If you know of a cure write your letter NOW. Observe the above conditions carefully, or your letter may be thrown out.

Address all letters as follows:

The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co.,

The Subconscious Conscience.

Tired and dusty, the excursionists were returning from a Sunday at the shore. One of them, a bald man with big ears, overcome with his day of recreation, dropped off to sleep. In the hat-rack above another passenger had deposited a ferocious crab in a bucket and when the little man went to sleep the crab woke up and finding things dull in the bucket, started exploring.

By careful navigation the crab reached the edge of the rack. The next moment it fell down, alighting on the little man's shoulder. Not feeling quite safe it grabbed the voluminous ear of the little man in order to steady itself and the passengers held their breath and waited for developments. But the little man only shook his head slightly.

"Let go, Mary," he murmured. "I tell you that I have been at the office all the evening."—New York Times.

PLANS FURTHER EXTENSIONS

The Canadian Pacific has plans for wharves at Vancouver which will cost $1,500,000. These plans will dovetail into those which the city contemplates to carry out at the port. The latter is growing in value and bigness all the time. There is great complaint from shippers of congestion, for Vancouver is becoming a great port. The city is going to spend $5,000,000 on wharf extension in the immediate future, and the railway company, on its own account, has plans for a further extension of the wharves which it will use for its own business. Both east and west the Canadian Pacific Railway has now for its shipping interests, facilities which render it absolutely independent—this independence making for better and more efficient service in the ocean carrying business, which the company has notably extended during the past few years. The fleet of the company now numbers, all told, over 100 vessels; but it has especially strengthened its Atlantic and Trans-Pacific service in latter years—recognizing, as it did, the possibilities of increased exchange between this continent and Europe and Asia, an intimacy and largeness of communication which, somewhat hurt by the war, are resuming their urgency and importance from day to day.

TO CANADA.

Our neighbor of the undefended bound
Friend of the hundred years of peace, our kin,
Fellow adventurer on the enchanted ground
Of the new world, must not the pain within
Our hearts for this vast anguish of the war
Be keenest for your pain? Is not our grief,
That aches with all bereavement, tenderest for
The tragic crimson on your maple leaf?

Bitter our lot, in this world clash of faiths,
To stand aloof and bide our hour to serve;
The glorious dead are living; we are wraiths,
Dim watchers of the conflict's changing curve,
Yet proud of human valor, spirit true
In scorn of body, manhood on the crest
Of consecration, dearly proud of you,
Who sped to arms like knighthood to the quest.

From quaint Quebec to stately Montreal,
Along the rich St. Lawrence, o'er the steep
Roofs of the Rockies rang the bugle call,
And east and west, deep answering to deep,
Your sons surged forth, the simple, stooping folk
Of shop and wheat field, sprang to hero size
Swiftly as e'er your Northern Lights awoke
To streaming splendor quiet evening skies.

Seek not your lost beneath the tortured sod
Of France and Flanders, where in desperate strife
They battled greatly for the cause of God;
But when above the snow your heavens are rife
With those upleaping lustres, find them there,
Ardors of sacrifice, celestial sign,
Aureole your Angel shall forever wear,
Praising the irresistible Divine.

The Word "Boche."

The word "Boche," a new one in the French language, introduced since the beginning of the great war as a designation to be applied to a German, is regarded as a most offensive expression when applied by any one to a French man or woman. It now figures frequently in French courts as a term of abuse for which the user sometimes pays a money penalty or as much as eight days of imprisonment. Recently nine women were brought into court, and the complainant, a man, asked for 2,000 francs as damages because these dames had called him a "boche." One definition of the word says that it is a shortening of the word "caboche," which, interpreted into English, means a dunderhead, a nincompoop, a blockhead, a numskull, an ignoramus, a mutton head and several other things which the German is not. It is in no way related to the American word "kibosh," which has not been accepted by lexicographers.

Dangerous Throat Troubles Prevented by Nerviline

IT ENDS MISERY OF COLDS QUICKLY.

Don't wait till night.

Get after your cold now—this very minute, before it grows dangerous you should apply old-time "Nerviline."

Rub your chest and throat, rub them thoroughly with Nerviline. Relief will be immediate.

Nerviline will save you from lying awake to-night, coughing, choking and suffering from congestion in the chest and acute pain in the throat.

Nerviline will break up that dull neuralgic headache—will kill the cold and chill at its very beginning — will save you from perhaps a serious illness.

To take away hoarseness, to break up a grippy cold, to cure a sore throat or bad cold in the chest, you can use nothing so speedy and effective as Nerviline. For forty years it has been the most largely used family remedy in the Dominion. Time has proved its merit, so can you by keeping a bottle handy on the shelf. Sold by any dealer anywhere, 25c per bottle.

WHO AM I?

I am more powerful than the combined armies of the world.

I have destroyed more men than all the wars of the world.

I am more deadly than bullets, and I have wrecked more homes than the mightiest of siege guns.

I steal in the United States alone, over $300,000,000 each year.

I spare no one, and I find my victims among the rich and poor alike; the young and old; the strong and weak; widows and orphans know me.

I loom up to such proportions that I cast my shadow over every field of labor from the turning of the grindstone to the moving of every railway train.

I massacre thousands upon thousands of wage earners in a year.

I lurk in unseen places, and do most of my work silently. You are warned against me, but you heed not.

I am relentless; I am everywhere; in the home, on the streets, in the factory, at railway crossings, and on the sea.

I bring sickness, degradation and death, and yet few seek to avoid me.

I destroy, crush or maim; I give nothing, but take all.

I am your worst enemy.

I am Carelessness.

DON'T GET "BLUE."

They're a Disgrace to the Average Healthy Person.

To give way to the "blues" is worse than folly—it's the quintessence of selfishness; and instead of the sympathy meted out to a person in the doldrums, what he heartily deserves is a thorough good shaking and a real bad time. Truly troubled persons, people who've been through the mill, are the ones who grumble the least; they know when they're well off. The other, and major portion of the community, only think they're badly done by. You'll generally find a cripple or otherwise afflicted person quite cheery. Then think shame of yourself that you, a strong, healthy individual, permit yourself to grizzle and growl, and be your own devil, driving yourself out of your Eden.

"Blues" arise either from liver or selfishness. If the former, take a dose of medicine; if the latter, take yourself seriously to task. Look within; don't try to find out why you're not happy, but why you're not happy, but why you're miserable. Is it that you expect too much from life? The happiest man is he who is content with little from the present, and expects much from the future. Go out into the world, and instead of comparing your misfortunes with other people's successes, realize your own blessings in life as contrasted with some poor thing's downright bad luck.

Don't think so much about what you haven't got, as what you do possess. This is the way not to think "Here am I, twenty—thirty—forty years of age. Not many men have worked as hard as I. I flatter myself I've got my fair share of brains, and I'm only earning a few dollars a week, while that absolute young idiot, Jones, who's never done a day's work in all his life, has more money than he knows what to do with!" Well, what if Jones is better off than you! There's nothing in that to make you unhappy! Instead, think how good God's been to give you your fair share of brain and your health!

Now, this is really the best way to treat your "blues." Go for a stroll in any street in any city; go with your eyes very wide open and power of observation very alert. In a few minutes you'll see a dozen poor unfortunate beings who are truly to be pitied—poor, deformed poverty-stricken wretches who might say with truth they've never had a chance in life. These "blues!" they're a disgrace to any healthy man or woman; and, besides, a doleful person becomes so wearisome. He may meet with a little superficial sympathy, but his acquaintances soon learn to avoid him. The "bluer" you feel, the cheerier you should be.

Not Equal to Bridge.

A well-known bridge player who imagined himself an authority on the game, and who had proved to be a perfect bore among his friends by his verbal comments, suggestions, and advice upon methods of play, decided to write and publish a book. One copy was sent to a famous player for his opinion about it. In about ten days the book was returned to the author with the following note:

"My Dear Sir: Your favor of the eighth inst. accompanied by your book, was duly received. I have read it very carefully. It seems to be a very good game, but I don't think it as good a game as bridge."—Exchange.

IF YOU CANNOT FIGHT, PAY, PAY, PAY!

Fight or Pay! These are the alternatives that are before the people of Canada to-day. From taking one or the other of them there is no escape for the man of military fitness.

All of us must make sacrifices if the war is to be won. That is so self-evident a proposition that it should not be necessary to make it. Yet there are people who even yet do not accept it as applying to themselves. In the matter of financial sacrifices, many a man is beginning to say to himself that he has given as much as he should be expected to give. But where is he to draw the line if he is in earnest about "Doing his bit" to win the war?

Plainly, there is one place at which he cannot draw it, and that is where the claims of the Canadian Patriotic Fund present themselves.

If there is one fund more than another that must be maintained, at cost of sacrifices, if need be, it is this one. The work it has undertaken cannot be allowed to drop. The dependents of our soldiers must be protected against want, privation or unnecessary suffering. All Canada has pledged itself to the men at the front that their families will be looked after, and that pledge must be fulfilled.

For 1917 the call on Ontario will be $6,000,000. Of this large sum about $4,000,000 will have to be raised from individuals. It is clear, therefore, that no good citizen can say that his subscription will not be needed. If he cannot Fight, it is up to him to Pay.

SONG OF TRUE PATRIOTISM.

Where the mind is without fear and the head is held high
Where knowledge is free,
Where the world has not been broken up into fragments by narrow domestic walls,
Where words come out from the depth of truth,

Where tireless striving stretches its arms towards perfection,
Where the clear stream of reason has not lost its way into the dreary desert sand of dead habit,
Where the mind is led forward by Thee into ever-widening thought and action—
Into that Heaven of freedom, my Father let my country awake.

(It has been written of the Hindoo poet and thinker: "He is the first among our saints who has not refused to live but who has spoken out of Life itself, and that is why we give him love. . . We are moved because we have met our own image . . . The Deity to Whom these songs are offered is at once the stirring spirit of Creation, and that Creation's eternal source and end.")

NERVOUS DISORDERS

Are Promptly Cured by the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

If your hand trembles or is unsteady, it is a sure and early sign that your nervous system is at fault. The trouble if not taken in time will develop slowly to a worse stage, and there is no person more to be pitied than one suffering from nervous trouble. You feel unaccountably weak after exertion, lose flesh, turn against food, and suffer palpitations and indigestions after eating. Sometimes sharp pains shoot down your spine and legs, and often neuralgia robs you of your sleep at night. These are some of the troubles that indicate the presence of nervous disorders. If they are neglected they result in a complete nervous collapse, sometimes in paralysis. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have won a great reputation in curing all forms of nervous diseases. The nervous system depends entirely upon the blood supply for nourishment. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually increase the supply of rich red blood; feed, strengthen and tone the nerves, enabling them to perform their functions and dispel all signs of breakdown. Mrs. B. Walcott, Beaver Bank, N. S., says: "I was sick run down and awfully nervous. The slightest noise would startle and annoy me. I suffered pains around the heart, and every particle of color left my face and hands. I always felt tired and slept poorly at night. I was so poorly that my friends thought I would never recover. I tried many medicines but they did not help me. Then I read of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and decided to drop all other medicine and try them. It was fortunate I did, for in the course of a few weeks I found them helping me. I continued taking the pills for some weeks longer and them completely cured me. I earnestly advise every weak woman and girl to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial, and I am sure they will not be disappointed."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Sing Sing's Funny Side.

"I got my first laugh in Sing Sing from Johnny Connaughton, our "P. K."—I suppose I ought to write "Principal Keeper," now that he is dead. They had just brought in a man for his first bit and he was spelling for a soft berth by showing off his erudition.

"I'm a linguist," said he, "and I talk 27 languages."

"Well," retorted Connaughton dryly, "we talk only one here, and little of that."

The joke was on the newcomer by this time. But soon after the boot was on the other leg and it was our chaplain who got the laugh. He had been talking in chapel about the prodigal son, and of how he was ragged and unshaven and starved, and in desperation he took a job tending pigs.

"And," says the chaplain, "there was nothing to eat and he had to eat the stuff they threw to the pigs."

"Why didn't he kill one of the pigs and eat pork?" asked a convict, so simplelike that we know he wasn't kidding.—New York World.

"All things come to those who wait," quoted the Wise Guy. "Well, the fellow who expects to have greatness thrust upon him must be a pretty good waiter," added the Simple Mug.

Science in the Kitchen.

Thomas A. Edison was praising the excellent native dyestuff plants that have sprung up since the war, relates the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

"There was a lot of silly, ignorant talk among us at the beginning," he said. 'Who'd have believed that such talk would have borne good fruit—good dye fruit?'

"Yes, the talk was so silly and ignorant at the beginning that it reminded me of the cook who said to her mistress:

"'That there new butler you've got in is certainly a fine scholar, ma'am.'

"'Yes?' said the mistress.

"'O, yes, ma'am,' said the cook. 'The servants' sitting-room is altogether a different place of an evening since he came.'

"'Yes?'

"'Oh, yes, indeed. He talks science—science—all evening long. It is certainly fine.'

"'What kind of science does he talk, cook?'

"'Well, ma'am last evening, for instance, he showed us how we was all descended from Mr. Darwin.'"

The Brook Cherith To-day.

This desolation doubly desolate is the gorge of the Brook Cherith in the Jordan valley, whose limestone cliffs hid the prophet Elijah from the wrath of Ahab. Here the ravens fed the prophet while the wicked king and the people over whom he ruled suffered the pangs of famine. The rain ceased, the crops failed, the king raged in his impotence but the prophet, solitary and alone beside the dwindling brook, had daily proof of the watchful care of Jehovah whose word he had obeyed. Then, when the brook failed for lack of rain, God led Elijah to the home of the widow of Zarephath. The place is still desolate, and you wonder what living thing the Arab in the foreground can be aiming at. The gorge is now called the Waddy Kelt, and in a snug corner of the canyon walls nestles the old Elijah convent, in which Greek monks commemorate the long vigil of the prophet of Israel. Possibly instead of raven, they are fed by tourists—who knows?—Christian Herald.

Breaking the News.

Young Michael and his father were both employed in the same stone quarry. One day a bank caved in and killed the father.

No one cared to break the news to the widow, so the foreman eventually went over to young Miko and said to him:

"Miko, you'll have to go home and tell the mother. It's your place to do it, but whatever you do, boy, break it gently to her. Let her know of it easy like. Understand?"

Michael nodded his head, and slowly made his way home. As he came up to the door he saw his mother busy in the garden. This he said to her when she looked up with surprise:

"That's a fine gold watch father's ownin', mither."

"He never owned wan in his life!" was the sharp rejoinder.

"Then I'm glad of it, mither, for it 'ud be smashed now under twenty tons of rock!"—Exchange.

BRITISH FOREIGN MINISTER EXPLAINS ENTENTE'S TERMS

Balfour Gives Reasons Why Present Peace Is Impossible, Why Turk Must Go.

Restoration of Alsace-Lorraine and Italia Irredenta---Needed Guarantees.

Washington Report.—The Entente allies, in a note addressed by Arthur Balfour, British Foreign Minister, to Ambassador Spring Rice, and delivered to the State Department, amplify the reply to President Wilson's peace note, by explaining in detail why they believe it impossible at present to attain a peace which will assure them such guarantees as they consider essential. The note also explains why the allies demand the expulsion of Turkey from Europe, restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France, of Italia Irredenta to Italy and the other territorial changes set forth.

Those who think the future peace of the world may be ensured by international treaties and laws, the note says, have ill-learned the lessons taught by recent history. After charging that German influence in Turkey had resulted in conditions as barbarous and more aggressive than were known under Sultan Abdul Hamid, and that it had been shown Germany cannot be expected to respect treaty obligations, Mr. Balfour says:

"So long as Germany remains the Germany which without a shadow of justification over-ran and barbarously ill-treated a country it was pledged to defend, no State can regard its rights as secure if they have no better protection than a solemn treaty."

BELGIUM NOT ONLY VICTIM.

Asserting that Belgium was not Germany's only victim, and that "neutrals were intended to note outrages which accompanied its conquest," the note recites the "reign of terror" attendant upon Germany's method of warfare, and in that connection says:

"The war staffs of the Central Powers are well content to horrify the world if at the same time they can terrorize it."

The people of Great Britain, Mr. Balfour says, share President Wilson's desire for peace, but do not believe it can be durable unless based on the success of the allied cause. Such a peace, it is argued, cannot be expected unless these three conditions are fulfilled: Existing causes of international unrest shall be, as far as possible, removed or weakened; the aggressive aims and the unscrupulous methods of the Central Powers should fall into disrepute among their own peoples; and, finally, that behind international law and behind all treaty arrangements for preventing or limiting hostilities some form of international sanction should be devised which would give pause to the hardiest aggressor.

ALLIES' TERMS IMPERATIVE.

It is recognized that these conditions may be difficult of fulfillment, but the belief is expressed that they are in general harmony with President Wilson's ideas. The note declares confidence that so far as Europe is concerned none of the conditions can be satisfied, even imperfectly, unless peace is secured on the general lines indicated by the Allies' joint note.

The note was entirely unexpected to officials here, but was gratifying because they interpreted it as a step toward the world federation to preserve peace, to which President Wilson, both in his speeches and in his peace note, has pledged the United States.

Great Britain justifies her continuance of hostilities, it was pointed out, not only for the immediate objects of the war, but also on the necessity that "behind international law and behind all treaty arrangements for preventing or limiting hostilities some form of international sanction should be devised which would give pause to the hardest aggressor."

It is just some such arrangement, it was pointed out, which President Wilson has been urging, and which is expected to cause wider disagreement in American foreign policy than any other question raised in the country's history.

Great Britain's answer was interpreted as her official acceptance and endorsement of the President's proposal.

TEXT OF THE NOTE.

The text of Mr. Balfour's note, dated January 13th, and addressed to Sir Cecil, follows:

"In sending you a translation of the allied note I desire to make the following observations, which you should bring to the notice of the United States Government:

"I gather from the general tenor of the President's note that while he is animated by an intense desire that peace should come soon and that when it comes it should be lasting, he does not for the moment, at least, concern himself with the terms on which it should be arranged. His Majesty's Government entirely share the President's ideas; but they feel strongly that the durability of peace must largely depend on its character, and that no stable system of international relations can be built on foundations which are essentially and hopelessly defective.

"This becomes clearly apparent if we consider the main conditions which rendered possible the calamities from which the world is now suffering. These were the existence of great powers consumed with the lust of domination in the midst of a community of nations ill-prepared for defence, plentifully supplied indeed, with international laws, but with no machinery for enforcing them and weakened by the fact that neither the boundaries of the various states nor their internal constitution harmonized with the aspirations of their constituent races, or secured to them just and equal treatment.

"That this last evil would be greatly mitigated if the Allies secured the changes in the map of Europe, outlined in the joint note, is manifest, and I need not labor the point.

THE TURK MUST GO.

"It has been argued, indeed, that the expulsion of the Turks from Europe forms no proper or logical part of this general scheme. The maintenance of the Turkish Empire was during many generations regarded by statesmen of world-wide authority as essential to the maintenance of European peace. Why, it is asked, should the cause of peace be now associated with a complete reversal of this traditional policy?

"The answer is that circumstances have completely changed. It is unnecessary to consider now whether the creation of a reformed Turkey mediating between hostile races in the Near East was a scheme which had the Sultan been sincere and the power united, could ever have been realized. It certainly cannot be realized now. The Turkey of union and progress is at least barbarous and is far more aggressive than the Turkey of Sultan Abdul Hamid. In the hands of Germany it has ceased even in appearance to be a bulwark of peace and is openly used as an instrument of conquest. Under German officers Turkish soldiers are now fighting in lands from which they had long been expelled and a Turkish Government controlled, subsidized and supported by Germany, has been guilty of massacres in Armenia and Syria, more horrible than any recorded in the history even of those unhappy countries. Evidently the interests of peace and the claims of nationality alike require that Turkish rule over alien races shall if possible, be brought to an end; and we may hope that the expulsion of Turkey from Europe will contribute as much to the cause of peace as the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France or Italia Irredenta to Italy, or any of the territorial changes indicated in the Allied note.

SAFETY NOT THUS ASSURED.

"Evidently, however, such territorial re-arrangements, though they may diminish the occasions of war, provide no sufficient security against recurrence. If Germany, or rather those in Germany who mould its opinions and control its destinies, sets out to domineer the world, they may find that by the new order of things the adventure is made more difficult, but hardly that it is made impossible. They may still have ready to their hand a political system organized through and through on a military basis; they may still accumulate vast stores of military equipment; they may still persist in their methods of attack, so that their more pacific neighbors will be struck down before they can prepare themselves for defence. If so, Europe when the war is over will be far poorer in men, in money and in mutual good-will than it was when the war began, but it will not be safer; and the hopes for the future of the world entertained by the President will be as far as ever from fulfilment.

"There are those who think that for this disease international treaties and international laws may provide a sufficient cure. But such persons have ill-learned the lessons so clearly taught by recent history. While other nations, notably the United States of America and Britain, were striving by treaties of arbitration to make sure that no chance quarrel should mar the peace they desired to make perpetual, Germany stood aloof. Her historians and philosophers preached the splendor of war; power was proclaimed as the true end of the State; and the general staff forged with untiring industry the weapons by which at the appointed moment power might be achieved. These facts proved clearly enough that treaty arrangements for maintaining peace were not likely to find much favor at Berlin; they did not prove that such treaties once made would be utterly ineffectual. This became evident only when war had broken out; though the demonstration, when it came, was overwhelming. So long as Germany remains the Germany that without a shadow of justification overran and barbarously ill treated a country it was pledged to defend no State can regard its rights as secure if they have no better protection than a solemn treaty.

INTENDED TO INTIMIDATE.

"The case is made worse by the reflection that these methods of calculated brutality were designed by the Central powers not merely to crush to the dust those with whom they were at war, but to intimidate those with whom they were still at peace. Belgium was not only a victim; it was an example. Neutrals were intended to note the outrages which accompanied its conquest, the reign of terror which followed on its occupation; the deportation of a portion of its population; the cruel oppression of the remainder. And lest the nations happily protected either by British fleets or by their own from German armies should suppose themselves safe from German methods, the submarine has (within its limits) assiduously imitated the barbarous practices of the sister service. The war staffs of the Central powers are well content to horrify the world if at the same time they can terrorize it.

"If then the central powers succeed, it will be to methods like these that they owe their success. How can any reform of international relations be based on a peace thus obtained? Such a peace would represent the triumph of all the forces which make war certain and make it brutal. It would advertise the futility of all the methods on which civilization relies to eliminate the occasions of international dispute and to mitigate their ferocity. Germany and Austria made the present war inevitable by attacking the rights of one small state, and they gained their initial triumphs by violating the treaty guarantees of the territories of another. Are small states going to find in them their protectors or in treaties made by them a bulwark against aggression? Terrorism by land and sea will have proved itself the instrument of victory. Are the victors likely to abandon it on the appeal of neutrals? If existing treaties are no more than scraps of paper, can fresh treaties help us? If the violation of the most fundamental canons of international law be crowned with success, will it not be in vain that the assembled nations labor to improve their code? None will profit by their rules but powers who break them. It is those who keep them that will suffer.

ALLIED CAUSE MUST INSURE.

"Though, therefore, the people of this country share to the full the desire of the President for peace, they do not believe peace can be durable if it be not based on the success of the allied cause. For a durable peace can hardly be expected unless three conditions are fulfilled. The first is that existing causes of international unrest should be as far as possible removed or weakened. The second is that the aggressive aims and the unscrupulous methods of the central powers should fall into disrepute among their own people. The third is that behind international law and behind all treaty arrangements for preventing or limiting hostilities some form of international sanction should be devised which would give pause to the hardiest aggressor. These conditions may be difficult of fulfilment. But we believe them to be in general harmony with the President's ideas and we are confident that none of them can be satisfied even imperfectly, unless peace be secured on the general lines indicated (so far as Europe is concerned), in the joint note. Therefore, it is that this country has made, is making, and is prepared to make sacrifices of blood and treasure unparalleled in its history. It bears these heavy burdens not merely that it may thus fulfil its treaty obligations, nor yet that it may secure a barren triumph of one group of nations over another. It bears them because it firmly believes that on the success of the allies depend the prospects of peaceful civilization and of those international reforms which the best thinkers of the new world, as of the old, dare to hope may follow on the cessation of our present calamities."

GERMANY WELL WITHIN SIGHT OF GREAT MUNITIONS CRISIS

Car Famine Cuts Off Coke, While Food Scarcity Cuts Workers' Output.

London Cable.——New York Times cable.—Francis Gribble, in an article on Germany's munitions, published in the Daily Chronicle, says:

"Although the censorship is strict in Germany, awkward truths have a way of leaking out through the columns of trade organs and technical papers, and it may now be gathered from these instructive sources that the munition supply is a cause of increasing anxiety.

"The present complaint is that there is not enough cars to convey coke to the blast furnaces, with the result that the production of steel is menaced. Difficulty prevails even in Westphalia and the Rhine provinces, where the Essen syndicate had to diminish its deliveries of coke by one-half. It is even more acute in Silesia, where, according to a recent market report, the number of trucks available is only about 20 per cent. of the number required, and the water transport hardly relieved the situation at all, owing to the scarcity of carts for conveying combustibles to the barges. That is one reason why a metallurgical crisis is imminent. Another may be found in the increasing lack of labor, which is diminishing the output alike in the coal mines and iron mines, as a few selected figures will show."

Gribble then points out that the number of workmen employed in German coal mines in 1913 was 404,182. They were reduced to 291,852 in the last three months of 1916. The output of iron ore of three leading companies for 1915-1916 decreased by 3,712,535 tons, compared with 1913-1914.

Gribble concludes:

"Nor is that the only reason why the average output of workers in the Germany munition factory has declined. Under-feeding of workers is a factor of scarcely less potency. The official report of a Government functionary attributes to this cause alone a decline of no less than 30 per cent. in the average output of German munition workers. Germany, in short, is well within sight of a munitions crisis, which probably will come to a head whenever the course of events compels her to lavish her munitions on all fronts at once."

GERMAN FOOD SITUATION GROWN MUCH WORSE IN LAST HALF YEAR

Weekly Potato Ration 4½ Lbs.—No Cheese or Eggs—Milk Scarce.

Stockholm, via London, Cable.——The food situation in Germany has grown much worse during the last six months, according to the experience of an Associated Press correspondent, who has returned from a trip to Berlin. Potatoes are so scarce that this week's per capita ration in Berlin was less than four and a half pounds. This is attributed in part to the farmers withholding shipments until Feb. 15, when higher prices will be permitted, but it is not denied that the potato crop is insufficient to meet normal demand.

No cheese has been in the market since August, and eggs are unobtainable, except surreptitiously, at 16 to 20 cents apiece. Berlin's daily milk receipts are about 350,000 litres, against a normal 1,000,000, and it is impossible to buy clothing, shoes, stockings or blankets, except by permission of the police. This latter, however, may be merely a precautionary measure, as the shops appear well stocked with clothing.

Chief Burgomaster Wermuth, as well as the heads of other cities, compelled to suffer unnecessary hardships because the system of distribution of foodstuffs has failed in many respects. In some cities the situation seems to be better than in others, and a Berlin business man told the correspondent that he had spent Christmas week in a Rhine city, where he got plenty of meat and bread, without being required to show a meat or bread card.

THE DEUTSCHLAND

Has Sailed Again—Word as to the Bremen.

Bremen Cable.—Preparations have been made for the sailing to-day for an American port of the merchant submarine Deutschland.

According to the Kolding newspaper Avis, the German submarines Deutschland and Bremen have not been lost, as variously reported. The Deutschland, says the paper, which returned shortly before Christmas from America, left Bremen yesterday (Monday) for New York.

"As to the Bremen," adds the paper, "she has been in the Mediterranean and the Gulf of Bothnia, where she was mother ship to the submarines operating there."

"The Deutschland, according to a New London, Conn., despatch, Jan. 11, left its home port Jan. 2 on another trip to the United States. Another report said that the Deutschland was four weeks overdue.

WAS FRENCH SUB.

That Sunk Austrian Boat Off Dalmatia.

Rome, Cable.—An Austrian ship was torpedoed on Jan. 11, near the Dalmatian Archipelago, by a French submarine, according to an official communication issued by the Admiralty to-day. The text of the statement follows:

"An Austrian ship was torpedoed on Jan. 11 by a French submarine attached to our fleet, near the Dalmatia archipelago. The submarine was fruitlessly attacked by an Austrian airplane."

A Vienna despatch, under date of Jan. 15, reported that the Austrian passenger steamship Zagreb, [illegible] tons, had been torpedoed off the coast of Central Dalmatia with the loss of 26 lives.

According to the despatch, the ship was sunk without warning.

FEELS THE PINCH.

Prussian Minister Admits the Blockade Hurts.

London, Cable.—In submitting the war budget to the Prussian diet, Dr. Lentze, the Minister of Finance, according to a Reuter despatch from Amsterdam, made the following statement:

"The war has severely taxed our budget, and has demanded special efforts. Although a balance of receipts and expenditures was established on the [illegible], that was only in appearance, because many important financial questions had to be postponed until later. This means that after the war we must continue to support our political economy in harmony, more stringently than formerly.

"The principal thing to-day is that we win the war," Dr. Lentze continued. "The blockade makes itself felt more and more. It cannot be denied that it lies heavily on the country, and it must be borne."

HUN SUB'S FOUR CAPTIVES.

London Cable.——A German submarine has just returned from a cruise with four captains of merchantmen on board as prisoners, according to an Amsterdam despatch to Reuters, quoting German newspapers. One of the prisoners is an Englishman. The submarine is in charge of Commander Arnauld, who visited Cartegena last June on the submarine U-35 and delivered a letter from Emperor William to King Alfonso.

GREAT DAYLIGHT RAID BY CANADIAN TROOPS IN WEST

Second Line Trenches Reached On 1,000-Yard Front---All Dugouts Destroyed.

British Troops Also Make Heavy Assaults and Win Much Ground.

(From a Staff Correspondent of The Associated Press.)

With the British Armies in France, Cable.——In the gray half light of late midwinter dawn and in the swirl of a cloud-like snowstorm, which lasted through the night, a Canadian contingent of the British troops raided nearly a thousand yards of the German trenches north of Arras this morning. Besides inflicting heavy losses they came back with 100 prisoners, one of them being a company commander and former assistant professor of chemistry at Strassburg.

As a raid to-day's attack establishes a record for the proceedings in the Somme sector in the last week, which netted 300 prisoners in what have been classed in the official communications as "minor operations." In addition to a big haul of prisoners, the booty to-day included two machine guns, which were found chained to the ground and one trench mortar. The Germans have been using these mortars in lively fashion against the Canadians recently, and while it required a great effort to drag it back over the snow-covered "No Man's Land," the capture of this particular weapon gave the greatest satisfaction.

This was the second daylight raid carried out north of Arras by the Canadians, the first resulting in the capture of 60 prisoners. It was marked by many of the same features that characterize all such daring and successful undertakings, except in this instance there was no marked increase in the preliminary bombardment, for the guns, which had been going steadily for eight days in this neighborhood, had cut to ribbons the much-vaunted protective barbed-wire entanglements. It was just after dawn that the British barrage began to sweep over nearly 400 yards of No Man's Land that separated the front trenches. As it formed its curtain shield of bursting shells, the Canadians went "over the top." On either flank a smoke barrage had been flung out.

Thus sheltered by the artillery, the Canadians trudged forward almost gaily through the snow. It was like a touch of home to them. They encountered comparatively little resistance and a very light machine-gun fire, and in little more than an hour they had cleaned out two lines of trenches and returned to their own lines with their prisoners and booty. The British losses were exceedingly light, and all the casualties were brought home. The prisoners were mostly Silesians and Poles, one of them having been a waiter in a popular London hotel before the war.

The Germans may have suspected that an attack was imminent from the heavy-arm fire of the last week, for their assembly trenches were well filled, a fact which helped to swell the numbers of the prisoners taken. The raiding troops were somewhat chagrined when they were told that the German corps commander was in the trenches all day yesterday, leaving last night.

"Some wise old 'Teuton,'" said a Canadian captain; "we should like to have pinched him."

HIT GERMAN LINE HARD.

London Cable.—— The British troops in France have hit the German line hard at two places for good gains, according to the latest British communication. Northeast of Cite Calonne the Canadians carried out a brilliant raid of German trenches on a front of 700 yards and penetrated the positions to a depth of 200 yards to the German second line. The German dugouts were completely wrecked and 100 men were made prisoner. The Germans suffered heavy casualties.

At Beaucourt-Sur-Ancre another drive by the British gave them German positions over a front of 600 yards, which they held despite a counter-attack in which the Germans lost heavily under the British barrage fire.

THE BRITISH REPORT.

The report from British headquarters in France issued to-night reads:

"After heavy preliminary bombardment Wednesday morning we occupied a line of enemy posts north of Beaucourt-Sur-Ancre. The whole of our objectives were gained on a frontage of 600 yards, with few casualties. The position gained considerably improved our observation in this area.

"This afternoon an enemy counter-attack was broken up with heavy loss by our artillery barrage. The consolidation of the new position is proceeding. We had complete success yesterday and to-day in the neighborhood of Lens.

"Late in the afternoon yesterday the German positions south of Cite Calonne, west of Lens, were entered under cover of heavy bombardment. Our troops reached the enemy's support line and bombed and destroyed dugouts and inflicted many casualties. Our losses were small. We successfully blew a mine in connection with the operation.

"This morning another very successful daylight raid was carried out by Canadian troops northeast of Cite Calonne. The attacking parties entered the enemy's trenches on a front of 700 yards and penetrated to a depth of 200 yards, as far as his second line. Here also heavy losses were inflicted on the enemy and all his dugouts were completely wrecked. We captured one officer and 93 other ranks, two machine guns and a trench mortar. Our artillery and machine guns co-operated very effectively with the infantry. Our casualties were again slight."

After a bombardment Tuesday evening the German troops attacked the French lines east of Clery and gion. They were repulsed, the Paris south of Biaches, in the Somme re- War Office announced to-day. A minor attack by the Germans at Les Eparges, southeast of Verdun, also was repulsed after hand-to-hand fighting. French patrols penetrated the German lines at several points on the heights of the Meuse, in the Verdun region and in Apremont forest.

Hanover infantry troops yesterday entered the French positions on the Combres heights and returned to their own trenches with several prisoners after defeating the hostile garrison in their trenches, says the official statement to-day by the German War Office.

RUSSO-ROUMANIANS COMING BACK AGAINST THE INVADERS

Petrograd Cable, via London Cable——The War Office announces the recapture of the village of Vadeni, in Roumania, six miles southwest of the Danube town of Galatz.

The official statement reads:

"Our detachments, after artillery preparation, gained by storm the village of Vadeni, ten versts southwest of Galatz. The enemy, having received reinforcements and assisted by an artillery drumfire, himself took the offensive with the object of regaining the village. His dense formations which came under our concentrated fire, suffered great losses, and failed to reach our trenches.

"Our detachments, by a night attack, succeeded in driving the Germans out of Gerlescht, southwest of the mouth of the River Rimnik, capturing two machine guns, but as the result of a counter-attack by superior enemy forces we were obliged to withdraw from the captured village. German attacks southeast of Gerlescht were checked by our fire."

THE RUSSO-GALICIAN FRONT

Petrograd, Jan. 17.—via London.—The following statement on operations along the front in Russia and Galicia was issued to-day by the War Office:

"Western front.—The enemy is conducting an intense infantry fire in the region of the Zborov-Zlochoff railway and south of Augustoskin. South of Swistelniki the enemy mounted a machine gun with which he bombarded our trenches, but by a successful, well-aimed shell the machine gun was damaged."

ALLIES TAKE OFFENSIVE.

London, Jan. 17.—It is remarked here that the Teutonic allies now, for the first time since mid-November, are failing to make advances in Roumania, and that the offensive, for the moment at least, seems to have passed to the Russians and Roumanians.

Information is lacking as regards the cause for the slowing up of the movement. Some reports say the Russo-Roumanians have received large reinforcements and guns and munitions, but the question is being asked whether the situation is not due to the winter in northern Roumania, which is as severe as that in mid-Russia.

The Morning Post's Petrograd correspondent says the opinion prevails there that the Russian stroke in the direction of Mitau had a disconcerting effect on the German arrangements, which has been heightened by the increased activity of the Russians on various other sections of the northern front. The correspondent says the German lines are thinly held everywhere, except in Roumania, and that the Germans consequently are showing nervousness over the recent Russian moves.

FRENCH REPULSED GERMANS.

Paris, Jan. 17, noon.—After a bombardment last evening, German troops attacked the French lines east of Clery and south of Biaches, in the Somme region. They were repulsed, the War Office announced to-day. A minor attack by the Germans at Les Eparges, southeast of Verdun, also was repulsed after hand-to-hand fighting. French patrols penetrated the German lines at several points on the heights of the Meuse in the Verdun region, and in Apremont forest.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Saugeen council started the year's business well, by remembering, first of all, the patriotic societies of the township. The grant of ten dollars each to Burgoyne, S. S. No 2, S. S. No. 5 and Dunblane patriotic women was very thoughtful, and will no doubt be appreciated by these societies. Bruce Township councillors went one better and granted $33 to each Red Cross organization in the township. Both councils are to commended for their promptness

The spirit is the great thing. It matters not what your ancestors were or where they came from. The thing is, if you live in Canada you are a Britisher, and loyalty is expected from you. If there is any man or woman who is secretly in sympathy with the enemy it would be better for them to remove to a country where they can be loyal. Depend upon it, this war will last long enough to try every man to the soul, and the man whose sympathy is with the enemy, no matter how secretly, will be discovered. The higher the position one may occupy the greater the responsibility.

Arran Tp Council refused to pay the Medical Health officer, Dr. Armstrong, $100 for services, offering $75. The officer has refused, to accept $75 and the council has asked for a statement of services rendered, miles travelled, etc. This, of course is the proper method for the council to pursue, but it must be borne in mind that very little professional service these days would amount to $100. Councils will have to consider the adjustment of the salaries of their officials generally, if they would keep competent men on the jobs Times have changed, as we were told by a prominent man at Saugeen nomination.

The fire chief has asked the council to consider the purchase of a sleigh that the men might more easily get hose to a fire Another matter that the fire chief might have spoken of is the purchase of a small chemical outfit. The apparatus at present used for a small fire is water, and more of it, and consequently much damage is caused by flooding of premises with water. Where the firemen have an opportunity to get a blaze quickly the chemical outfit is a very great help, and will cause much less loss than the use of water, where small fires are concerned.

A year or more ago we were counting it a high degree of patriotism to earn large wages in a munition plant. There is some doubt about the patriotic part of it now. At least, certain Journals would have us believe so. We submit that there is still a great deal of patriotism about working in munition plants, and especially is this true where the thousands of women are concerned. Any man who has conscientiously taken up work on munitions without thought of the larger remuneration, to him it is patriotism, but to him who has had in view that of the wages paid for this work, well here is where doubt enters. But this applies also to a host of manufacturers, who have tried to impress upon public opinion that they were doing special patriotic service for their country, when they have simply been making themselves rich.

Canadians are leaving Canada for the United States in quite large parties, especially since the National Service plan was put into operation. On December 4, last, the Bruce Preparedness League, by resolution, pointed out to the government that many young Canadians were entering the United States, and that steps should be taken to publicly point out the lack of loyalty on the part of these young men and also to restrict the eligibles from going out of the country. Once a young man goes to a neutral state he cannot be forced to come back. But when the war is over he can be debarred from again returning to his native land, as an undesirable citizen. Every young mann should consider well the step before going to any of the border cities of the United States. It is not disloyal to be an anti-conscriptionist but it is very much disloyal to run away from it. Allowance must be made for many of these men who will return when called upon to do so, but the man who has left his country and fails to return in a crisis like this one, will occupy a very uncertain place in the respect of his former friends. One of the very first things expected of every Canadian is that he will stand by his country. Dishonor will overtake the Britisher who does not show absolute devotion to his country.

What About the Worker?

Sir Edmond Walker says that Canada's prosperity is beyond anything we have ever known and that in the year 1916 twenty millions of dollars left Canada in payment of motor cars, velvets and silks. We accept this as true, for Mr. Walker is in a position to know. But that there are many people in Canada wallowing in wealth as a result of the war, can have no particular enjoyment for the thousands who have given their sons and their husbands to do the fighting, and to the multitude who have kept up appearances, perhaps, but who are feeling the pinch just the same. There is prosperity in Canada, but it is with the few. Don't say that all the people have had a share of it. The worker is only getting enough to live very carefully on, and with the high prices of food, in thousands of homes, wages are not sufficient to make ends meet. It is not hard to pick out the prosperous ones, but the common people of Canada have had no share in the luxury to which the noted financier refers.

When Jack Comes Back

"When Jack comes back there'll be a hearty welcome for a soldier boy." So runs the song, but will it always be true?

Port Elgin and the municipalities around have many young men in this big fight, and some are already returning, bearing the honored marks of the heroic part they have taken in the battle for freedom.

Are these young men to be allowed to return without a civic welcome?

It is the duty of every municipality to to see that every man who has been spared to return home from the battlefield, shall have a becoming welcome. It will not be necessary to have a lot of noise and amusement for the benefit of a crowd gathered to enjoy themselves, but a gathering ought to be arranged where our thanks can be tendered and honor done to every hero who has offered to lay down his life for our protection and our liberty.

The Bruce Preparedness League is supposed to have an active branch in every municipality for the very purpose of fittingly welcoming home our soldiers and of assisting them in taking up their pre-war occupations.

Here is a worthy undertaking. Let every municipality see that it is not found wanting.

What a shame if a hero should return without being accorded a civic welcome?

The Bruce Battalion

The boys of Bruce have heard the call
That rang our wide flung Empire through—
"To arms! to arms," From cot and hall
The foe of freedom would enthrall,
With tyrant's yoke our necks would gall,
With blood the world imbrue.

Shall Prussian war lords rule the earth?
Shall first of mail exalted be?
Shall cannon prove a nation's worth,
And make of noble men a dearth?
"No! by the God Who gave us birth!
The God Who made us free!

"No Kaiser's heel shall ever crush
No barbarous Hun shall hold us down;
No blood of ours shall ever rush
To show itself in coward's blush,
Rather on fields of France 'twill gush
To break the tyrant's crown.

"It is not war the Prussians wage—
Not war from sky, nor land, nor sea.
'Tis lust and pillage, hate and rage
The assassins—not the warriors—gauge
We come the barbarous beast to cage
And set the nations free.

"The Lusitania's victims call,
The murdered from the British coast,
The poisoned from the fields of Gaul
And Belgium clad in bloody pall,
The crucified, the outraged all—
A multitudinous host.

"We hear. We come. We join the brave—
The British brave—the brave of France.
We'll backward drive the German wave,
The freedom of the world to save,
Each find in France a free man's grave,
Or on Berlin advance."

The boys of Bruce will never fail
To do their bit where'er they be.
No despot's might shall make them quail,
Nor blows that fall like Autumn's hail.
They'll stand against the fiercest gale—
Stalwart, valiant, free.

GRESHAM

Much sympathy is felt for Mr. Vance and family in the bereavement of a wife and mother.

Mr. Angus Ross has returned to Calgary after a visit with his parents on the 10th.

The box social that was held at S. S. No. 10 Bruce-Greenock was a decided success. Mr. Alex Mowhinney acted as chairman, which place Alex fills to the very best. There was a good program of drills, songs readings, recitations and speeches. Afterwards the boxes were sold by R. C. Pearce. The boxes ran as high as $6. The proceeds, over $155, went to the Red Cross Society of the section.

Mr. Richard McGregor sold a valuable horse to Mr. Charles Helwig.

Mr. George R. Brown spent the week-end visiting friends on the Elora North.

Mr. M. Sturgeon visited friends on the sixth.

Wedding bells are again ringing.

Council Meeting

The special meeting of the council held last week was mainly for the purpose of appointing an assessor. As announced in last issue, George Chapman secured the job. His was the only application.

The reeve and council also discussed the request of the fire chief for a sleigh capable of carrying a thousand feet of hose. During the winter time, if extra hose were needed, it had to be run out on wheels, which was very hard for the men.

At the next meeting of the council, which will be Friday, February 2nd, a branch of the Bruce Preparedness League will be organized.

After the meeting Reeve Izzard invited those present to partake of an oyster supper, which was provided at Koepke's restaurant. The council and several citizens were present. Brief speeches were indulged in by Messrs. D. Geddes, G. Chapman, E. R. Sayles and Reeve Izzard.

Church Report

The annual meeting of the Port Elgin Baptist church was held on Thursday evening January 11. The meeting was well-attended. After devotional exercises, pastor W. S. Buckborrough, took the chair. The following reports were received. Clerk, Mrs. J. A. Chapman; Treasurer, Mr. Nicholson, showed the finances in good shape.

The Sunday School report was given by H. Anderson, and was a good report as to attendance, and finances.

The Women's Mission Circle, whose work was somewhat interrupted during the year, have reorganized. The report was presented by Mrs. H. Anderson.

The Ladies' Aid reported through Mrs. E. Roberts.

The total raised during the year by the church, including cash on hand, at first of 1915 was over $828.

The following officers and committees were elected for the year 1917: Clerk, Mrs. J. A. Chapman; Financial Sec'y and Treas., A. Nicholson; Organist, Mrs. McLeod; Choir Leader, Mrs. R. Bell; Managing Board; A. Howe, A. McCannel, E. R. Sayles, J. J. George, A. Nicholson; S. S. Superintendent, J. J. George; Sec.-Treas., H. Anderson; Ushers, W. Howe, H. Anderson, A. Nicholson; Auditors, A. McCannel, R. Bell.

AUDITORS' REPORT

In accordance with the provisions of Sub-sections 19 and 20 of Section 56 of the Bank Act, we report to the Shareholders as follows:—

We have examined the above Balance Sheet with the books and vouchers at Head Office and with the certified returns from the Branches, and we have obtained all the information and explanations we have required, and in our opinion the transactions which have come under our notice have been within the powers of the Bank.

We have checked the cash and verified the securities of the Bank at the Chief Office and at several of the principal Branches during the current year, as well as on November 30th, 1916 and have found that they agreed with the entries in the books of the Bank with regard thereto.

In our opinion the Balance Sheet is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the Bank's affairs according to the best of our information and the explanations given us, and as shown by the books of the Bank.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson IV., January 28, 1917.

Reverence of Jesus for His Father's House.—John 2., 13-22.

Commentary.—I. Christ cleansing the Temple (vs. 13-17). 13. The Jews' passover was at hand—From the fact that John speaks of this feast as the "Jews' passover" it is inferred that he wrote the Gospel outside of Palestine, and possibly while he lived in Ephesus. The Passover in the year A. D. 27 occurred April 11-17, only a few months after Jesus began His public ministry. The Passover was one of the principal feasts of the Jews. It was held yearly in Jerusalem in commemoration of the deliverance of the Israelites from slavery in Egypt. It continued eight days and was a season of great gladness. Jesus went up to Jerusalem—The law provided that all males should go to Jerusalem three times each year to attend the great feasts, the Passover, the feast of Tabernacles and the feast of Pentecost, and they were to take an offering to the Lord. The women were not commanded to go, but they often went, especially to the Passover. We have the record of the attendance of Jesus at the Passover when He was twelve years of age. John records his attendance at each Passover, but one during His public ministry, and it is possible that He attended that one also. The expression, "Went up to Jerusalem," is literally true to the geographical situation of Capernaum and Jerusalem. The latter city is more than three thousand feet higher than the former. Jerusalem was thronged with visitors at this feast. Josephus declares that at times as many as two million strangers were in the city.

14. Found in the temple—The entire temple enclosure is included in the term temple as here used. The buildings and various courts covered the temple platform, which contained something like twenty-five acres. The court of the Gentiles is said to have contained fourteen acres, and in this large space the trafficking which Jesus rebuked was carried on. Those that sold oxen and sheep and doves—The law required each worshipper to bring a sacrifice to the Lord. Those who lived near Jerusalem could bring their own animals for sacrifice, but those whose homes were remote could not conveniently do this. Hence it was an accommodation to them to be able to procure suitable animals after arriving at the place of the feast. This gave rise to an extensive system of trading in the city, which gradually became established in the very temple area. "The court was filled with a noisy assemblage. Dealers were advertising their stocks in loud and lusty voices; buyers were wrangling and disputing, and coarse shouts of the drovers added to the general uproar, while the clink of coins and the cries of animals rose above the din of the jostling crowd."—Howard. The changers of money sitting—Each adult Israelite was to pay the half-shekel temple tax, equivalent to thirty-three cents, annually, and it must be paid in Jewish money. Those who came from other lands had the money of their respective countries, hence they were under the necessity of securing the Jewish coins in exchange for their own money. Money-changers were on hand to accommodate them and at the same time enrich themselves. Both the dealers in animals and the money-changers were in a position to exact exorbitant prices of the pilgrims and the temple officials were in league with them.

15. A scourge of small cords—A whip, the lash of which was composed of several small pieces of small cord, or rope. He drove them all out of the temple—Jesus exercised the authority of which he was possessed by virtue of his divinity, and there was no resistance. Both the sheep and the oxen (R. V.)—Evidently Jesus used the scourge to drive out the animals. The dealers themselves fled. They knew they were out of place trafficking in the temple, and the very presence and appearance of Jesus awed them into submission to his authority. Poured out the changers' money—He threw the money of the dealers in animals upon the pavement. 16. Take these things hence—The doves were enclosed in cages, hence they must be carried out. Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise—Convenience and profit had led to this gross desecration of God's house. It was to be a house of prayer, a place of worship. Religion was at so low an ebb and of such poor quality, that the people were not getting much out of it. The priests and the traders were reaping a financial harvest, however. It has been the tendency of worldly professors of the religion of Jesus to introduce into the church schemes for raising money by appealing to the people's love of pleasure. God's house is dedicated for sacred uses and no one has a right to use it for worldly business or amusements. 17. His disciples remembered—The five or six disciples whom Jesus had thus far gathered were with him on this occasion and witnessed the cleansing of the temple. Zeal for thy house shall eat me up (R. V.)—The quotation is from Psa. 69: 9. Jesus was intensely in earnest to honor the Father, to purify his house and to bring about a condition of righteousness. "The zeal of Jesus was not an occasional ebullition, a fire kindled in grass or thorns, but like a fire in a coal mine. But it consumed him, it exhausted his strength; it burned up all other aims and ambitions; it brought him to the cross."—Peloubet.

II. Christ's authority (vs. 18-22). 18. What sign showest thou—In cleansing the temple Jesus had not consulted the officials, but acted in a manner that indicated his full authority in the case. The Jews naturally inquired what miracle he, as a prophet, would perform to substantiate His right to break up the traffic in the temple. He was interfering with an established custom, and they did not purpose to allow the course that Jesus had pursued to go unchallenged. 19. Destroy this temple—In v. 21 John tells us that by the term temple Jesus meant his own body. Jesus here utters the prediction that the Jews would put him to death, but he would rise from the dead in three days. He did not say that he would destroy the temple, as was later falsely charged (Mark 14: 58), but he spoke of his own body. His resurrection from the dead would be a convincing proof of his authority over the temple in Jerusalem. 20. Forty and six years was this temple in building—The temple in which Christ stood was the third temple erected on Mount Moriah in Jerusalem. The first was built by Solomon and dedicated in B. C. 1004, and it was destroyed about 400 years later by Nebuchadnezzar. The second temple was built by Zerubbabel after the return of the Jews from captivity. Herod the Great rebuilt Zerubbabel's temple, whence it is spoken of as Herod's temple. The Greek implies that though it had been forty-six years in process of construction, it was not yet finished. Wilt thou rear it up in three days—The Jews failed to comprehend the declaration that Jesus made. It would have been a marvellous work for Jesus to build up the destroyed temple in Jerusalem in three days, but it was infinitely greater to rise from the dead. This he did three years later.

21. He spake of the temple of his body—That the body is a building has been recognized by both the science and the literature of all the world. All religious thought specially recognizes that it should be a temple, the temple of the Holy Spirit. And Christ's body was the temple, of which the Jewish material temple was the type. When, therefore, the disciples subsequently found that after three days of destruction Christ revived his bodily temple, a new inner meaning flashed upon their minds. Before fulfillment it would indeed have taken a prophet to extract this inner meaning; yet, none the less, we see after the fulfillment that none but a prophet could have uttered the prediction.—Whedon. 22. When therefore he was risen from the dead—John here introduces an event that took place three years after the demand of the Jews for a sign was made. He was able to speak with full authority of the fulfillment of the prediction uttered by the Master. His disciples remembered—John was one of the disciples and he could speak for himself. The disciples had but a vague idea of the import of Jesus' words to the Jews at the time when they were spoken, but after Christ's resurrection they understood clearly what he meant. They remembered his words and became fully convinced that he had uttered the prophecy of his own death and resurrection. As the disciples treasured up the words of their Master and were profited by them in after-years, so it is important that we should store away in our memory the word of the Lord that we may be directed, encouraged and blessed by meditating upon it in all of our after-life.

QUESTIONS.—What did the Passover feast commemorate? How was it observed? From what place did Jesus go up to Jerusalem? Who accompanied Jesus? What did Jesus see in the temple enclosure? What course did he pursue? What is the proper use of the Lord's house? What is said of Christ's zeal? What question did the Jews ask Jesus? What answer did he give them? What did he mean? When did the disciples comprehend what Jesus said?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Christ's defense.

I. Regarding the claims of God.

II. Regarding man's highest need.

I. Regarding the claims of God. Christ's attendance on the Passover showed that he honored every ordinance of the old dispensation as long as it lasted, thus fulfilling all righteousness, and thus entering into fellowship with believers of the Old Testament, unto whom he would reveal himself and his mission to the nation. Holy memories of national history gathered around the sacred edifice. The temple was the centre of religious life, the place where God manifested himself to man and where man dedicated himself to God. Jesus attached to the sanctuary a holiness greater than was conferred upon it by all the associations of its use and its history. A breach of trust had been committed. Both the claims of God and the religious needs of man were utterly neglected. Divine worship was exchanged for human interests. The offering to God was forgotten. Only the making of good bargains was remembered. The building was abused and profaned in being diverted from sacred to secular uses. Where there should have been only sacrifices there were sales of beasts and birds. Where there should have been only offerings, there was money-changing. There was an abuse of the place, an abuse of privilege, an insult to God, his authority, purity and honor. The profanation affected by these uses of the temple courts was indicative of widespread secularism, an outward indication of the corruption of the entire idea of worship. Jesus made a public demonstration of his loyalty to the theocracy, to the temple and to its worship. In a special manner he felt and proclaimed God to be his Father. It was profoundly significant that Jesus should demand from the temple worship a right presentation, rather than a corrupt defilement, of its true significance.

II. Regarding man's highest need. Jesus yearned over those who had destroyed themselves. He longed to rescue the world from its degradation and to build up its desecrated fragments into a temple of the living God. He was misunderstood by the Pharisees through their slavish adherence to the letter of scripture; through their spiritual blindness occasioned by hypocrisy; through their positive aversion arising from inward moral corruption. The scourge in Christ's hand was a conspicuous object and expressed his indignation and augmented the force of his command by an indication that he must be obeyed then and there. His act was designed to be a revelation to the ecclesiastical authorities of his Messiahship. The scourge was only an emblem of power and chastisement, the sight of which was sufficient, and at which they all unhesitatingly fled. The startled Sanhedrin recognized the Messianic character of the act. They were dumb and helpless because conscience-stricken in the presence of incarnate Righteousness. They trifled with their consciences by asking for a sign. The disciples supplied a most appropriate text to the symbolic sermon of their master, which confirmed their recently-formed convictions. His attitude was the subject of prophecy. It was in keeping with his character as John had declared him. It was an act of supreme courage and holy zeal. Jesus purified the temple at the risk of his life. He fearlessly confronted combined opposition. He met the opposition of the dealers, the rulers of the temple and the people. Jesus was supported in his act by the very consciences of the Jews themselves, who knew that he was right while they were wrong. But because he was different from what they expected, they declined to receive him and questioned his authority by demanding some further sign. They preferred the darkness, though the light had conspicuously dawned. The authorities of the temple, by their question, espoused the cause of the traffickers. In Christ's answer there was an exalted claim, a striking prediction and a wonderful declaration. The temple he had just purged was shown to be a figure of something greater than itself. Compared with his body, the temple in all its glory, beauty and service was but a poor, profitless structure.

PLAN YOUR CROPS FOR 1917--NOW

Don't be Misled into Growing Grain Crops at the Expense of Roughage—Remember at War Prices Silage and Roots Are Worth $5.50 per Ton for Feeding Purposes—Follow a Definite Rotation.

It is a good thing to plan things ahead—forewarned is forearmed, as the saying goes—and now that work is getting slack, it will be both pleasurable and profitable to spend some of the long winter evenings planning out next season's work. By giving one's work a little thought and figuring out how is the best way to go about things, one can usually see where mistakes have been made and how they can be remedied in the future.

The first thing to do in planning for next season's crop is to decide to have a definite rotation and stick to it. Too many farmers do not have a systematic rotation. They grow the crops which are the essentials of any rotation, that is, hoed crops and clover or some other leguminous crop, but the rotation is not systematic, with the result that some fields are more fertile than others and some fields have scarcely a weed in them, while others are "chuck full" of them.

If it looks certain next spring that the war will last for at least another year, many men will be tempted to put in wheat and other grains, where normally they would put in roots or corn for fodder. If a man has only a few horses to feed he is perhaps justified in doing this, but if he is in the live stock business at all extensively he would be most foolish to grow grain at the expense of corn for silage and roots. The amount of roots grown should be only enough to supply the pigs, but enough corn should be grown to allow each full grown animal at least 15 or 20 pounds of silage per day.

With wheat selling for about $1.50 per bushel and oats selling for about 60 cents per bushel, as they are at the present time, silage has a feeding value of $5.50 per ton.

Suppose we get 30 bushels of wheat per acre. At $1.50 per bushel that means we get $45 from an acre. Say it costs us $14 per acre to produce the wheat, this means that we make $31 per acre.

SILAGE CORN WORTH $60 ACRE

This looks pretty good business. But consider the other side of the question. Suppose we can get 12 tons of silage from an acre, which is not at all a large yield. A ton of silage when wheat is selling for $1.50 a bushel is worth in round figures $5 per ton. That means that we grow $60 worth of corn for silage per acre. Subtracting $18 for the cost of production, we see that we make $42 per acre. That is $42 from an acre of corn for silage as compared with $31 when wheat is grown.

Some may object that we do not really make $42 from the silage corn, for we do not sell it, but compared with bran, feed corn and feed barley, and other feeding stuffs that we buy, this is what it is worth, and if we did not grow it we would have to buy more of these expensive grains. With cattle selling for $10 per cwt., lambs for $12.25 per cwt., and hogs for $12 per cwt., cheese at 25c pound and butter at 41 cents per pound, it should not take one long to decide that growing crops to feed to animals is just as profitable as growing them to feed to human beings.

It is hard to emphasize too strongly the importance of growing leguminous crops such as red clover, alsike clover, alfalfa and sweet clover. Sweet clover has really now got just past the experimental stage, and if one has got some land which is run down and will not grow red clover, it will be well to try some sweet clover. If the land is at all acid, however, the sweet clover will not catch any better than the red clover, so that an application of lime to correct the acidity should be given the fall before the clover is sown.

Clover selling for $12 per ton is the cheapest feed we have. For every dollar spent on clover hay at this price we get $1.52 worth of nutrients as compared with only $0.82 worth in bran at $32 per ton and $0.86 worth in oat straw at $9 per ton. One pound of alfalfa hay has practically the same feeding value as one pound of oats.

Not only do clover and alfalfa make first class feed for cattle, but they make first-class feeds for the soil at the same time. Through the work of the little nodule bacteria that they have on their roots they enrich the soil with that most important soil constituent—nitrogen. The four essential elements of fertility are nitrogen, phosphoric acid, potash and lime. In some English experiments, when a four-year rotation of roots, barley, clover and wheat was used, and none of the manure made from the clover or roots returned to the soil, and the only fertilizing treatment it received was a regular application of fertilizer containing phosphoric acid, potash and lime, but no nitrogen, it was found that after sixty years the amount of nitrogen in the soil was practically the same as when the experiments were started.

The average yields of crops during the sixty years of the experiments were: wheat 35.1 bushels, clover 2.2 tons, roots 9.2 tons and barley 34.5 bushels per acre.

When it is remembered that a 35-bushel crop of wheat removes about 50 lbs. of nitrogen per acre from the soil, it will be seen what a marvelous effect clover has in renewing the nitrogen supply of the soil.

Just what kind of rotation to adopt will depend on one's system of farming, whether one has a large number of animals to feed, and also on the fertility of the soil and its freedom or otherwise from weeds.

If the soil is poor and full of weeds, a short rotation may be used and a leguminous crop may take its place.

The following rotations are given as suggestions, and, of course, may be altered to suit one's particular conditions.

Three-year Rotation—First year, hoed crop. For corn apply manure in the winter or early spring at the rate of 15 tons per acre and plow shallow before planting time, turning under both clover and manure. For roots the land should have been plowed the previous fall.

Second year, grain. Seed down with 10 lbs. red clover, 2 lbs. alsike, 6 lbs. alfalfa, and 6 lbs. timothy per acre.

Third year, clover hay or pasture. The second crop might be used for seed.

This rotation is well suited where dairy farming is practised on a large number of cattle are fed during the winter, as it supplies a large amount of roughage. It is better suited for heavy than for light soils.

Four-year Rotation—First year, hoed crop. Apply manure at the rate of 20 tons per acre during previous fall or early in the spring.

Second year, grain. Seed down with ten pounds red clover and 10 lbs. timothy per acre.

Third year, clover hay. The second crop may be used for seed.

Fourth year, timothy hay or pasture.

Plow the field shallow early in the fall, and cultivate from time to time to germinate and kill the weeds. Just before the freeze up ridge the land in preparation for the hoed crop the following year.

This rotation is very satisfactory in every way and is the one that would probably suit most mixed farmers. It provides abundance of hay for the stock, and the land is pastured once in four years.

Five-year Rotation—First year, hoed crop.

Second year, grain. Seed down with red clover and timothy as in four-year rotation.

Third year, clover hay. Top dress in the fall with barnyard manure available.

Fourth year, timothy hay or pasture. Plow shallow in fall, cultivate and ridge up last thing in preparation for the grain crop the following year.

Fifth year, grain. Seed down with 10 lbs. of clover per acre to be plowed under for green manure the following spring, when the hoed crop is corn.

This rotation will be favored by those who wish to grow a relatively large amount of grain, but still wish to maintain the fertility of the soil by carrying some live stock to make manure and by the growing of clover.

Six-year Rotation—First year, hoed crop. Give a heavy application of barnyard manure.

Second year, grain. Seed down with the following mixture: red clover, 6 lbs.; alsike 3 lbs.; orchard grass, 3 lbs.; meadow fescue, 3 lbs.; timothy, 3 lbs.; making a total of 18 lbs. per acre.

Third year, hay.

Fourth, fifth and sixth years, pasture.

This rotation is especially suitable where land is cheap and labor scarce.

Automatic Poultry Feeder.

A new device for feeding poultry will greatly reduce the labor of caring for fowls in large poultry yards. It consists of an automatic feeder which distributes any kind of grain in amounts of from one to sixty quarts at any time during the day, scattering it over an area of from ten to fifty feet. If fowls are to be fattened for market, it can be made to supply their food at regular intervals, as the mechanism includes a master clock attached to the scattering wheel. The weight of the grain causes a pinwheel to revolve which has a series of pins arranged so that each pin releases a quart of grain. When the right time is indicated by the clock, the grain is scattered in any desired quantity.

Bells Frighten Wolves.

One of the most serious problems in the cattle business on the open range arises from the depredations of wild animals. Wolves destroy many hundred thousand dollars worth of stock annually, and their attacks on young calves are particularly frequent. One progressive cattleman finds that the wolf is frightened by the jingle of a cowbell, and he is putting bells on all his young calves soon after birth. This season he used more than 2,000 bells, with good results.

SUNDAY AT HOME

FOOL'S GOLD.

Smith in his prospecting
Found a golden vein
Glittering and shining
With its gleaming grain.
Not a thing it brought him.
Luckless was his score.
"Fool's gold," said assayers,
"Fool's gold, nothing more."

Jones in his prospecting
By a lucky find
Found a golden metal,
Ore with nuggets lined.
Everything it brought him
On this earthly shore;
"Fool's gold," said the angels.
"Fool's gold, nothing more."

THE PASSOVER.

Arise ye, and depart, for this is not your rest—Here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come.—There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God.

Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately. Blessed are those servants whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching.—Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind ...... I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore as many as be perfect, be thus minded.

INFANCY.

Is there an infancy of the spirit of man; is there the blade, the ear, the full corn in the ear? Do we get salvation on the installment plan? When I look at the interview of Christ and Nicodemus, I see two men, robust, mature, devout. The milk of the breast and the swaddling band are not in evidence. I see complete relation, ourselves in relation to God, God in relation to us; the revelation is complete, a thousand objects are left outside, their shadows come not to disturb. One thing of incomparable importance demands attention: how admirable! The matter is complete at its first reception, offered to us entire and at once, susceptible of being embraced at a single glance, or imbibed at a single inspiration; its radiance ever increases during the longest career, its aspects multiply with the aspects of life; always the same, it is always new; an instant suffices to possess it, ages will not suffice to fathom it, it is an endless study.

I see no childhood, no fragments, no half truths. I see the whole truth for the whole man.

Look at Paul. Any infancy here? Man meets man. "I'll show him what things he must suffer for my sake." "Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." It is not like going fishing, a fish now and then, but a whole life to start with, not bit by bit, but a blessed unity coming down from the centre of inaccessible light, from the very heart of God, to fill and furnish the entire spirit.

I am weary as they sing "There is a Land of Pure Delight," "There is a Green Hill Far Away." I am weary of reading "There is a home above where friends never depart, where Christ is supreme." Of course it is all true, but these teachers take liberties; they pitch their tent in the future. I demur, because there is no future. What is future? Time to come; how much? Before the clock strikes the midnight hour your heart may be stopped! The future is subsequent to the present; it means following in order of place.

Man is superior to time, so are you, if you did but know! God knows nothing of time; there is no future with Him. Man knows nothing of time; just now he goes from stepping stone to stepping stone across the shallow stream, but my calculation, my heritage, my dignity, my destiny are superior to time. I use it; I pass in and out, but I do not pass out of God. He is my present, my everlasting possession.

I fight, I win, here; my qualifications for heaven are obtained on earth; the victory is achieved here. We don't go to heaven to fight; we go to rest. The subdividing is done here; sweetness to angry souls, to patience, impetuous natures; to humility, haughty spirits; to sincerity, dissembling characters; to tranquility, troubled hearts—in a word, a new soul, capable of all the virtues.

Helping to Save the Ducks.

If you shoot a duck and find an aluminum band on one leg send band to the Biological Survey, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., giving place, date and circumstances under which the duck was shot. The Biological Survey is making a study of the longevity and migration of wild fowl, and returning tags will be of value in this work. Some of the tagged ducks were treated in Utah for a malady that was killing them off by the thousands.

You can't be too careful. Many a man who has avoided banana skins all his life has finally been tripped up over a lie.

Household Hints.

Molasses will run out of a measuring cup quickly if the cup is first dusted with cornstarch.

Wire baskets, such as are used for holding unfiled letters in offices, make excellent receptacles for vegetables.

As you iron, pin a piece of brown paper to each article you discover to be minus a button or otherwise in need of mending. This saves looking them over twice, and few discrepancies are lost sight of.

When the stove becomes rough from accumulated polish, try giving it a rub with sandpaper before polishing.

If your wall paper has suffered a scratch, moisten a scrap of the paper you have saved, carefully scrape off the coloring with a thin knifeblade and apply to the spot. When dry the injury will be quite healed.

AN EVIL HERITAGE

CHAPTER XXXIII.

It was the beginning of his second year at Thornton that Captain Herriscott's health began visibly to fail, and before that twelve months had run to an end, port wine, strong meats and a generally too luxurious mode of living had done its work so well that one more stone slab arose in the little cemetery within the park, for the poor captain had been laid to rest beside his cousin Simon.

Marian was alone except for her two aunts—alone, and the most wealthy woman for many miles round. When the acutest stage of her grief had spent itself she resolved to leave this place, which was so hateful to her. It should be the very first use she would make of her liberty and of her money. But where should she go to?

"If you go to a cold country," Miss Valeria argued, "you can have me as travelling companion; but if you have set your heart upon a hot country you must take Honoria, for I have no mind to lose all my newly acquired flesh in tropical heats. Why should it be the tropics? Have you not all the world to choose from?"

No doubt she had, but in all this wide world there was nevertheless only one little spot to which she felt herself drawn. When Miss Valeria was told that Marian had made up her mind to visit St. Clara her face fell a little, for she would have much enjoyed a trip to Norway, for instance.

"As if there was any sense in looking after those ridiculous canes," she sighed, "now that we are quite independent of such trifles as a sugar plantation."

But of course Marian, being her own mistress, also had her own way; and so impatient was she to be gone from Thornton that Miss Honoria scarcely had time to order a few light dresses and to buy a big straw hat before she found herself hurried on board, the mail steamer Neptune, which was the next to sail after Marian's resolve had been taken.

Of course it was not the lot 13 canes that Marian was going to look after at St. Clara. She herself would have found it hard to say why she was going there. To see Miss McCrie, in the first instance, she supposed; but there was besides in her mind an unacknowledged afterthought to the effect that at St. Clara she would feel nearer Bernard, partly because of those Bolivian letters, and partly because Miss McCrie was the only person to whom she could talk openly about him.

They had been more than a week at sea, and wraps were already beginning to be discarded, when Marian, established one afternoon in her deck-chair enjoying the first perfect day they had yet had, was aroused by the sound of a familiar name. She had made few acquaintances on board, and had taken her mourning as excuse for keeping aloof from those rough-and-ready entertainments which had amused her so much two years ago; but she knew that those men talking beside her were West Indian officials of some sort, returning to their posts after a leave of absence.

"Poor Hibbert always was an unlucky dog," one remarked, and Marian immediately laid down the book she had been trying to read and raised her head. What a long time it seemed, to be sure, since she had last heard that name, and how many things it brought back with it!

"Yes, they say his life has been a failure all round, beginning with the shape of his nose and ending with his love affairs."

"For a fair portion of his bad luck no doubt he has got himself to thank. What is the sense of setting sail, when the black fellows tell you—and the black fellows always know best—that there is a storm coming over the hills at the rate of fifty miles an hour?"

"Hibbert always had about as much care of his life as though it were an out-of-date shilling for which there is no use. They say that of late years he has grown more reckless than ever."

Marian had never till to-day spoken to any of the three men thus conversing; but now, somewhat to the consternation of Miss Honoria, she turned to the one nearest to her, whose name she did not know, although he sat opposite to her at table, and asked:

"Is the Mr. Hibbert you are speaking of the one who is district magistrate at Cassacon?"

"Was district magistrate," replied the passenger addressed, after a short pause of astonishment. "Yes, that is exactly what he was."

"And what is he now?"

The three men exchanged a foolish, helpless glance, aware that neither "food for the fishes" nor "pasture for the worms" was exactly the thing to say, though coming nearest to hitting the nail on the head.

"The poor fellow was drowned last month," said the one with the readiest tongue. "The crossing from St. Clara to Cassacon always is a nasty bit, except in the very nicest weather, and Hibbert always was a madman where prudence was concerned. On this occasion there was a speckled cloud coming over the hills which the niggers told him meant a storm. He took it into his head that he would race the cloud—well, and he lost the race, though it seems to have been a close run, for it was within hail of Cassacon that he went down."

"Have they not even found the body?"

"Yes, they found that caught among the stumps of a dead tree trunk that lies stranded on the coast. Two of the niggers swam ashore; the bodies of the others have not been recovered."

Marian leant back again in her chair without further remark, and presently the three men began to move off.

"Surely it cannot be that poor Hibbert has thrown away his life too soon?" said one to the other, with a puzzled glance.

"She looks cut up and no mistake, and they say she's a huge heiress. There is no saying whether his luck wasn't on the turn, after all."

Meanwhile Marian remained leaning back immovable in her deck chair for so long that even Miss Honoria's limbs, accustomed as they were to repose, began to feel cramped. As she looked out over the intensely blue water and marked the intensely white flashes which were probably flying fish, she was thinking of the evening when she had watched this same sight with Mr. Hibbert by her side. The thought that he was no longer of this earth moved her more than she would have believed possible. That man had loved her truly and deeply, of this she was certain—who knows? more deeply perhaps, than Bernard had loved Sybil. Why had she not been able to love him? Her common sense told her that she was not guilty of his death, and yet her fancy would not admit that she was quite innocent. It seemed to her that even on closing her eyes she could not help seeing before her the soaked and draggled figure of the District Magistrate lying dead in the fantastically twisted arms of the "Big Mamma." The question as to whether John Hibbert's life were a comedy or a tragedy was settled now at last beyond all manner of doubt.

When, after a prosperous voyage, St. Clara was reached, Miss McCrie was waiting to receive her favorite. This was exactly as Marian had expected, but what was not exactly according to her expectations was the little lady's expression of face and general manner of bearing herself. Considering that her father had been dead for scarcely two months, Marian had naturally looked for the element of condolence as chiefly coloring the moment of meeting; to her astonishment, however, when the first hurried phrases were over, nothing more was said about the captain, and no enquiries made about his illness. Miss McCrie even seemed to have some difficulty in maintaining an expression sober enough for the occasion, which was all the stranger considering how kind and sympathetic she had always been two years ago. During the voyage Marian had had visions of exceedingly confidential talks between her and Miss McCrie, but these visions began to fade. In face of this want of sympathy she would never have the courage to unclose her heart. She immediately resolved that not even Bernard's name should cross her lips if she could help it. Almost she began to repent having come to St. Clara. Once being here, however, there was no escaping from Miss McCrie. Though the ex-Registrar-General's iron-gray hair had grown sparer, and her sallow skin covered by a yet finer network of wrinkles, she had lost none of her energy and briskness; within an hour of having disembarked, aunt and niece had been packed into a buggy, by which means they reached Prospect that same evening.

Prospect was that same empty house beside the sea between whose bare walls Marian had first made the acquaintance of the former Jess Collins (now Mrs. Phillips, and the proud mother of two flourishing babies), amidst medicine bottles and pill boxes, and the peaky faces of her little brothers and sisters. The rooms now were not less bare than they had been then; rather they were barer still, owing to the absence of both the bottles and the boxes, for Miss McCrie required no medicines.

"And who lives now at Cane Hill?" enquired Marian when they had strolled into the garden after supper, and were leaning over the same bit of wall which she and Jess had leaned over side by side on the day when the picnic had been planned. Looking down, as she was now, upon the bright green creepers—bright enough to be distinguished even through the dusk as they trailed over the dark sand below, it almost seemed to her that all that lay between this moment and that other must be a dream.

"Tanner & Co. live at Cane Hill themselves," answered Miss McCrie. "At least, I believe so, but I never go near the place; I could not bear to see it so changed."

"There must be a good many things changed about the island," said Marian, thoughtfully; "even you are different from what I had expected."

"Am I really?" and Miss McCrie laughed light-heartedly. "Well, so are you, for the matter of that. I have a notion that to meet you at present would not further your cousin Bernard's peace of mind."

"What do you mean?" asked Marian, who in the uncertain light could not see that Miss McCrie's eyes were dancing with mischievous enjoyment.

"Oh, what I mean is very simple, only that things have once again taken their natural course. It is the old, old story of cross purposes:

'Ein Jungling liebt ein Madchen,
Die hat einen Anderen gewahlt.'

You used to be fond of your cousin, even very fond of him, as the registry books can witness, but that was in your obscure days, when you had seen nothing of the world. Now that you are surrounded with suitors, it would scarcely be fair to expect that his memory should still be green with you."

Marian looked at her companion reproachfully through the dusk, but Miss McCrie's face was half-turned aside, and her fingers busy with the scraps of mortar on the top of the wall. Was it possible that she should be misunderstood so cruelly, and by the very woman for whose sympathy she had yearned!

"Well, well," Miss McCrie went on talking, "there is no doubt it is easier to be philosophical when it is your friend, and not yourself, that is concerned. After all, Bernard is not the first young man, and will not be the last, who finds out his right mind too late."

"But what do you call his right mind?" asked Marian, a little uneasily.

Miss McCrie appeared not to have heard.

"I was pretty sure it would end that way," she continued, quickly. "I never cared for the sound of that big black-haired Sybil; I am sure she is all outside, and no inside, the sort of woman to go to a man's head, but not to keep possession of his heart. Poor Bernard reminds me rather of a child that has pricked open its top balloon to see what it is made of, and is left sitting with but a shrunken bladder in its hand."

"Then you do not think he has got over his disappointment?" asked Marian with a stormily beating heart. "Is he comforted? Is he fancy-free once more?"

"No," said Miss McCrie, boldly, "he is nothing of the sort."

"Then I don't understand——"

"Don't you? I think it is simple enough."

And suddenly, taking Marian's hand, she looked into her eyes as well as the dusk would allow. "Is it really you who ask me this?" she earnestly enquired. "Are you honest, or only counterfeiting?"

As Marian snatched away her hand she felt the hot blood coursing over neck and face.

"This is all nonsense," she said, unsteadily. "If he cared for me ever so little, why should he not say so? He found words enough for wooing Sybil."

"Oh, blessed innocence!" sighed Miss McCrie. "What! Say it now, and have the finger of scorn pointed at him, as at the man who waited to find out that he loved his cousin until that cousin had got his money, too? What man could be indifferent to such a suspicion as that? I tell you that, though he were dying for love of you, he would not open his lips so long as you are the mistress of Thornton. But that cannot make much difference to you, since you must have your suitors by the dozen now. You have not told me anything about them yet, by-the-by."

For a few moments Marian stared down in silence at the sands below, then she shook her head.

"It is not possible; it can never be."

"What can never be?"

"I can never marry Bernard."

"I know you cannot," readily assented Miss McCrie, to the disappointment of Marian, who had hoped to be contradicted. "I should consider it as violating the duties of friendship to urge upon you so wretchedly bad a match, having, as you have, the elite of England to choose from. Ever since you wrote to me about your success at the ball, I have given up all hopes of my poor protege. The only thing I should like to plead for is that if you chance to meet him, you would not snub the poor man more than you can help."

"Meet him?" said Marian, paling a little; "but I thought he was in South America, in the Bolivian army?"

"So he is—so he is; I forget what I am saying. Not that there is any excuse for my memory, seeing how the Bolivian war telegrams are coming to the fore again. They had one or two pretty serious skirmishes last week, and some rather heavy losses."

"And have you heard of Bernard since then?"

"No, I don't suppose he has much time for letter-writing just now; but even supposing there is a more serious reason for his silence, I am not sure that it would not in some ways be the best solution of the difficulty. You see, what between want of money and want of friends he is having rather a hard time of it altogether. But how have we got back on to this subject? I want to hear about England. Your not being married yet must mean that you are terribly difficult to please. A big heiress like you won't take anything under a duke, I suppose?"

"Do you think his life is very wretched?"

"Whose? Bernard's? What if it be? He will learn to live without either money or friends in time, no doubt; lots of people do. At any rate, it serves him quite right that you should have given him a successor in your heart. You must tell me more about the successor, but not to-night—to-morrow. It is bedtime for travellers."

"But I never said that I had——"

"Of course not; those sorts of things are generally betrayed without the help of anything so clumsy as words. I will hear all about it tomorrow, no doubt. Come along now, it is high time."

Marian followed without resistance, and without any further word except the final good-night spoken at the bedroom door. She was far too puzzled to think consecutively, far less to speak. Was Miss McCrie possessed of an evil spirit that she should so persistently misunderstand every word she said? And why should every one insist upon Bernard being fond of her? Could there possibly be a grain of truth? No, that way she dared not turn; the light was too dazzling to be looked at steadily.

Meanwhile Miss McCrie was descending the staircase somewhat hurriedly with her watch in her hand.

"I think she will do," she said to herself with a sigh of satisfaction. "Now, all ye match-making geniuses, stand by me to make as good a job of him. Nine o'clock; he must be at the gate by this time."

Pale Cheeked Women Told About Restoring A Rosy Complexion

A few years ago the girl with pale, drawn cheeks scarcely knew what to do in order to restore her fading appearance. At that time there was no blood-food medium made that really would put color and strength into systems that were more or less worn out.

To-day it's different. The blood can be quickly nourished, can be made rich, red, and healthy. All you have to do is take two Ferrozone Tablets with a sip or two of water after meals. The effect is almost magical.

Mothers, look at your children. Are they ruddy and strong—do they eat and sleep well, or are they pale, weak, and anaemic?

FERROZONE will rebuild them. Take your own case — is your blood strong and rich? Have you that old-time strength and vigor, or are you somewhat under the weather?

FERROZONE will supply the strengthening elements you require. It is a blood-forming, nourishing tonic that makes every ailing person well.

FERROZONE is a marvellous remedy, it contains in concentrated form certain rare qualities that especially fit it in cases of anaemia, poor color thin blood, tiredness, and loss of weight.

Every day you put off using FERROZONE you lose ground. Get it today, sold in 50 cent boxes by all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

A Song of Triumph.

Work:—
Thank God for the might of it,
The ardor, the urge, the delight of it—
Work that springs from the heart's desire,
Setting the brain and the soul on fire—
Oh, what is so good as the heat of it,
And what is so glad as the beat of it,
And what is so kind as the stern command,
Challenging brain and heart and hand?

Work!
Thank God for the pride of it,
For the beautiful, conquering tide of it,
Sweeping the life in its furious flood,
Thrilling the arteries, cleansing the blood,
Mastering stupor and dull despair,
Moving the dreamer to do and dare.
Oh, what is so good as the urge of it,
And what is so glad as the surge of it,
And what is so strong as the summons deep,
Rousing the torpid soul from sleep?

Work!
Thank God for the pace of it,
For the terrible, swift, keen race of it,
Fiery steeds in full control,
Nostrils aquiver to greet the goal.
Work, the Power that drives behind,
Guiding the purposes, taming the mind,
Holding the runaway wishes back,
Reining the will to one steady track,
Speeding the energies faster, faster,
Triumphing over disaster.
Oh, what is so good as the pain of it,
And what is so good as the gain of it?
And what is so kind as the cruel goad
Forcing us on through the rugged road?

Work!
Thank God for the swing of it,
For the clamoring, hammering ring of it,
Passion of labor daily hurled
On the mighty anvils of the world.
Oh, what is so fierce as the flame of it?
And what is so huge as the aim of it?
Thundering on through dearth and doubt
Calling the plan of the Maker out.
Work, the Titan; Work, the friend,
Shaking the earth to glorious end,
Draining the swamps and blasting the hills,
Doing whatever the Spirit wills—
Rendering a continent apart,
To answer the dream of the Master heart.
Thank God for a world where none may shirk—
Thank God for the splendor of work!

Spanking Doesn't Cure!

Don't think children can be cured of bed-wetting by spanking them. The trouble is constitutional, the child cannot help it. I will send FREE to any mother my successful home treatment, with full instructions. If your children trouble you in this way, send no money, but write me to-day. My treatment is highly recommended to adults troubled with urine difficulties by day or night. Address

Fooling the Boss.

Murphy was taking a day off, says an English weekly, and wishing to enjoy himself thoroughly, he walked round to watch "the boys." He was surprised to see his friend Kelly working as if carrying a hodful of mortar up and down a ladder was the only thing he took any real pleasure in.

"It's yourself that's working mighty hard to-day, Kelly!" expostulated Murphy.

"Whist! I'm just making a fool of the boss!" said Kelly, winking slyly.

"And how are you doing that, Kelly?"

"Sure, Murphy, it's as easy as kissing your hand. He sees me going up the ladder with my hod full of mortar and he thinks I'm working. But, Murphy, my boy, it's the same hodful I'm carting up and down all the time."—Youth's Companion.

WINTER HARD ON BABY

The winter season is a hard one on the baby. He is more or less confined to stuffy, badly ventilated rooms. It is so often stormy that the mother does not get him out in the fresh air as often as she should. He catches colds which rack his little system; his stomach and bowels get out of order and he becomes peevish and cross. To guard against this the mother should keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house. They regulate the stomach and bowels and break up colds. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Carlyle Declined the Honor.

Among the many distinguished men who have refused honors was Thomas Carlyle. Disraeli offered him in the queen's name the Grand Cross of the Bath, "a distinction," writes Froude, "never before conferred upon an English author, with a life income corresponding to such rank." Carlyle declined the honor, but he was deeply touched by the compliment, the more so as he had frequently attacked Disraeli in his writings. Most readers will probably agree with the verdict of the Chelsea bus conductor who said to Froude: "Very proper of the queen to offer it and more proper of him to say that he would have nothing to do with it. 'Tisn't they who can do honor to the likes of he."—London Standard.

Dwarf Fruit Trees.

Dwarf fruit trees are ornamental and easily cared for; they fruit much sooner than standard trees and are particularly suitable for small gardens. The quality of the fruit is equal to that of standard trees and with proper care will be superior.

Dwarf cherry trees will produce a crop of fruit in two or three years. The sweet varieties are the strongest growers and are as beautiful as any shrub when in flower.

Jutland Hero's Story.

The bluejacket had been in the battle off Jutland, and in the railway compartment every one addressed him respectfully. Incidentally he was the recipient of numerous fine cigars. He conducted himself with becoming dignity, and when the foreign-looking gentleman who had kept silent went out at a roadside station the audience settled down to hear the yarn. Nodding his head toward the dark stranger on the platform, the bluejacket remarked with a grin:

"'E thinks 'e 'as lost something 'e'd like to hear, 'e 'as. But all Hi saw of the bloody battle was coal—nothink but coal. Hi'm a stoker, you see, that's what Hi am."—"Argonaut."

Grand Complexion Improver! Better Than Cosmetics

When it's so easy to bring back the bloom of youth to faded cheeks, when skin disfigurements can be removed, isn't it foolish to plaster on cosmetics?

Go to the root of the trouble—remove the cause—correct the condition that keeps you from looking as you ought. Use Dr. Hamilton's Pills and very soon you'll have a complexion to be proud of. How much happier you'll feel — pimples gone, cheeks rosy again, eyes bright, spirits good, joyous health again returned. Never a failure with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, get a 25c box to-day.

Glad Discovery.

An Irishman went out to Australia seeking two brothers who had been out there for some years. They were known as Pat and Ted. While walking off the railway station he saw an engine with the word "Patented, 1899."

"Begorry," said he, "I have found them bhoys after all. They are boiler manufacturers—Pat-en-Ted, 1899—and it was the very year, begorra, they came out here."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Mine Gas Detector.

A new electric instrument to detect explosive gas in mines has just been patented. Such an instrument is necessary because of the greatly increased use of electric minelamps instead of the old-time Davy safety-lamps. The Davy lamp gave the miner warning of the presence of gas, but the electric lamp of course does not. The new detector consists of two glowing electric wires connected in series. One wire is treated so as to burn more brightly in gas-laden air than in pure air. In perfectly pure air the two wires glow with exactly the same brightness. By noting the difference in the brightness of the two indicators the miner cannot only detect the presence of dangerous gas, but can also tell almost exactly how much of it is present.

Foxy Hubby.

It was an ingenious husband who sent his wife shopping in a taxi the other day. A friend who happened to see him say good-bye to her from the curb, remarked on his apparent extravagance.

"It's economy, really," said the husband. "Whenever she's in a store she will be worried to death because the taxi is eating up money all the time, so she won't stay long enough to spend half as much as she would if she went on foot or in a street car."—New York Times.

His Great Scheme

"I have solved the crowded car problem!" exclaimed the jubilant street railway man.

"How?"

"We'll put a phonograph in each car and keep it playing 'The Star Spangled Banner.' Then everybody'll have to stand up."—Washington Star.

Hockey Game

The junior bunch of boys are playing great hockey. Friday night they took the Southampton juniors into camp to the tune of 8-2. The attendance was not very good, and those who were absent missed a bang-up good game of hockey with fast skating, good combination and no roughness.

The visitors played a steady game, and with one or two positions strengthened will make the Port boys go hard to win. For them Wilson was the star. He is a fast skater and a good shot, getting the only two goals for the visitors. The Port juniors are well balanced. Roy Wankel is a regular professional in goal, while Christian and Lawrence Schrank are cool defence men, breaking up the rushes and relieving nicely. Christian scored three of the goals by his lifting of the puck. These two play defence well by feeding the forwards and keeping them up the ice all the time. Walter Miller was the quickest lad on ice with his stick. He netted three goals. Billy McCullough as centre has speed and is a great check, by good combination with Lloyd Harmon and Norman Thomas he scored two goals. The forward line are the making of a great team in another season. They are swift have good staying power, and use lots of head in manoeuvring the puck toward the opposing goal.

M. Hang refereed the game. One penalty was given to McCullogh for shunting Mahon into the boards without cushions. Port—Wankel, Christian, Schrank, Miller, Thomas, McCullough, Harmon. Southampton—Mahon, Wilson, McVittie, Sparling, Grasser, Matheson, Baker.

Mrs. J. D. McIntosh is at Richmond Hill, where her mother is very seriously ill.

UNDERWOOD NEWS

The annual meeting of the Presbyterian church here, was held on Monday last, when a small crowd was present, Rev. McNabb presiding. The annual report and sheet was distributed to those present, by treasurer J. G. McKay, who explained the items appearing in it, and it was adopted. The church has enjoyed a fair year of success. Alex McKenzie was elected a manager in the place of G. Hood, and all the other members of the management were re-elected, also J. B. Struthers secretary, and J. G. McKay treas. It was also decided not to hold a tea-meeting this year, but to have a special collection. The Ladies Aid very kindly provided lunch.

Miss Tena McKay has returned to Toronto.

The sale of cattle at McLean's yard was attended by a good crowd of farmers, and good business was done by auctioneer Pearce. The prices ranged from $61 to $86.

Highest price paid for all kinds of hides at The Hardware.

(Intended for last week)

Mrs. W. A. Cole has returned home after a pleasant visit with her sister at Walkerville.

Miss Tena Wittig is visiting her friend Miss McKeeman at Glamis.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Shannon were at Seaforth last week.

Installation of officers took place in the I. O. O. F. lodge on Monday evening. At the close of the meeting an Oyster supper was enjoyed by all at Mr. Hugh McLean's.

Report to Council for term April 1st 1916, to December 31st, 1916.

A Draft of the 160th Now Fighting in France

It looks now as if some of the 160th were in France. Mrs. J. H. Kennedy has received a letter from Gourlay Black, in which he acknowledges a Christmas box, and says: "To-day January 10th, I was picked to go to France. Forty men have been drafted. I am one of them, we dare not leave camp, as we may be called any time. As we have to go some time it may as well be now."

Pte. Black did not give the names of any others of the forty.

Died at London

Pte. Harold Bancroft of the 1st Battalion, who spent Christmas week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Jenner, died in the Central Military Convalescent Hospital, Monday 22nd, from internal injuries received last June while serving with his battalion in France. The funeral was held with full military honors Tuesday afternoon. Pte. Bancroft took an active interest in Patriotic work and was expected to speak at St. Luke's Church, Broughdale, in the interests of the Red Cross work. He gave an address a couple of weeks ago at St. John's, Arva. A brother of Pte. Bancroft met death with Lord Kitchener when the late secretary of war and famous British Field Marshal was drowned from the Hampshire, a British auxiliary cruiser, off the coast of Scotland, while on his way to Petrograd. Bancroft's brother was one of the crew of the illfated vessel. His father was wounded while on active service in 1915.

John Henderson New President

Mr. John Henderson, of Port Elgin, is the new president of the North Bruce and Saugeen Agricultural Society. There was a fair attendance at the annual meeting which was presided over by Mr. Alex Lamont.

The financial report read by Treasurer Elliott showed that the finances were in good shape. The previous year the surplus of $150 was given to patriotic funds. Last year there was no surplus, but there is still a treasury containing $300.

The prize list was discussed. Messrs Scott and Christie pointed out the weakness of the prize list regarding cattle prizes, while Mr. J. J. George drew attention to the poultry prizes. W. A. Mitchell suggested that two prizes be given in horticulture instead of three.

A committee was appointed to look into prize list matters,

Alex Lamont was appointed a delegate to the Fairs Convention.

It was decided to hold a field crop competition in oats and potatoes.

The fair will be held Sept. 20 and 21.

On motion of Messrs G. Christie and J. Scott, the clerk was instructed to have a letter of condolence drafted and sent to the widow and family of the late Allan McKinnon.

The officers are: Pres., John Henderson; Vice Pres., J. H. Webster; Second Vice Pres. Neil Swinton.

Auditors—H. D. McLaren, C. Currier.

TURNER'S

The Red Cross Box Social held in No. 5 on Friday evening is considered to have been about the best and most successful entertainment held here for some time. Auctioneer Rankin wielded the hammer and seemed to have no trouble in inducing the young men to come out with their best bids. Shortly after 8 o'clock Trustee Jeffry called the meeting to order and introduced Mr. D. Muir, a former teacher, and asked him to take the chair. Mr. Muir said it was a great pleasure for him to act as chairman at a meeting for such a worthy cause as the Red Cross, and it gave him greater pleasure on account of the present teacher being one of his old pupils. There were 18 names on the Honor Roll of those who had attended No. 5. The program rendered was first class. The performance of the school children under the direction of their teacher, Miss A. E. Cairns, was especially worthy of mention. Miss Eva Bennet was accompanist. The play "Punkin Ridge" was well acted and brought roars of laughter. Those assisting in it were Arch Bell, Mr. and Mrs. George Osborne, Elmo Holtz, Edgar Hillis, Mary Jeffrey, Della Herron, Charley Nelson and Arch Cameron. Others assisting in the program were Mr. and Mrs. W. McKinney, Wm. Muir, Mary and Isabell Bell, Miss Kate Murray, Miller Wankel, and Smith from Port Elgin, John Schrank, Miss Young, teacher in Riley's school. Miss Alvina Kelly had the lucky number for the comforter and Mr. Archie Cameron got the highest priced box. The proceeds amounted to over $101.

Just try our chocolates. They are the best money can buy. McMurray

NEWS OF THE WEEK

Lawrence Schrank is very seriously ill.

Rev. Mr. Parke has returned and will occupy his pulpit here Sunday.

Mr. W. A. Mitchell is the new chairman of the public school board.

Miss Ruby Eidt is home recuperating after an operation at Kitchener hospital.

Rev. Dr. Ross, of Toronto, visited his sister, Mrs. R. Smythe, last week.

W. F. Bald has purchased a new Ford runabout. This is the Inspector's third new Ford.

The Conservative Candidate Sevigny, won in the Quebec by election by 214 majority.

A. J. Lowes now controls the draying of the town, having bought the good-will of W. Bannister, who will likely move to Toronto.

The patriotic society of S. S. No. 2 Saugeen, meets Friday at the home of Mrs. E. R. Doll. All ladies are asked to come at 2.30 p.m.

Jos. Vennard and family left for Findlater, Sask., on Tuesday. "Joe" came back from the west in 1915, but believes he can do better there. Many friends regret the removal of this family.

Miss Ada Chappell has donated some of her beautiful needle work to the White School Patriotic society. There is on view at Ebert's a handsome lunch cloth and serviettes. These will be drawn for at the White school box social, and tickets are being sold.

The members of the I. O. F. made a presentation of a fountain pen and an address to Mr. W. D. Bottrill, the Chief Ranger, on Tuesday night. During the evening there was a social time enjoyed. "Billy" is a good officer and the members appreciate his work.

Autos Painted

Wm. Bray has secured the shop above the Ford garage, and is ready to properly paint all automobiles. Also, anyone desiring painting of any description, please notify us. Prices very reasonable. Let us give you a figure. W. Bray, Port Elgin. 3-1t.

Tenders Wanted

Tenders will be received by the trustees of S. S. No. 5, Saugeen, for the erection of a brick woodshed up to February 1st. The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted. Plans and specifications can be seen at the residence of the secretary.

James McEwing Secretary, S. S. No.5,

News in General

Mrs. B. Zelkind is visiting in Toronto.

Rev. Mr. Hogg of Southampton Presbyterian church, has accepted a call to Clinton.

Let The Times transact all your newspaper business. We deal with all other newspapers.

Messrs. H. D. McLaren, A. Lymburner, N. Eidt and J. W. Pattison composed a rink of curlers which played in Walkerton, Friday. They won and lost.

Mrs. Busby was called to Toronto last week to attend the funeral of her father, who died Tuesday week. He was in his 89th year.

The marriage takes place this afternoon of Miss Viola McIntee, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. McIntee, to Mr. Elmo Holtz, of 2nd con. Saugeen. The young people are well-known in this district.

Writing from Keddleston Sask. Mr. John Hogan says: "Here's my $1.50 for The Times. I can't get along without The Times. We are having very cold weather here, not very much snow. Had a good crop last year, and everything prosperous. Best regards to my old friends."

We were pleased to receive a visit last Tuesday from Mr. John Rushton of North Bruce, who met with a serious injury in a fall in his barn last fall. A rugged constitution pulled him through, and while he shows the effect of his injuries, his many friends in Southampton were delighted that he was able to visit us again.—Beacon.

In reporting that Mr. Henry Crowe was in partnership with Mr. Hamilton in cattle buying The Times was misinformed. It should be for the buying of hogs. Mr. Crowe is still purchasing cattle himself. In connection with the high prices of hogs, Mr. Crowe informs us that Mr. Geo. Seiffert brought in six last week which were six months old, and which figured up to $198.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Duke have returned after a 3 month's holiday in Pittsburg. They look fine after their holiday, and many old friends are glad to see them. The Times asked Mr. Duke if there was plenty of coal at Pittsburg. "Why no" said he, "The place where you'd think they would have lots of it, people are getting it in sacks, and paying $10 a ton for it. One thing it is not very cold there."

Mr. D. M. Geddes, of Rosetown, Sask. who is visiting here, was in Owen Sound visiting his father, Mr. John Geddes, for a few days. Mr. Geddes went west several years ago, and is now a leading merchant in the thriving Rosetown. He says: "Business is good all through the farming sections of the west. The good crop of 1915, and fair crops in most sections this year, along with the high price of wheat, has made the farmer prosperous, and naturally when the farmer prospers, so do other people."

A report sent from England says 107 men of the 160th are suffering from mumps.

Duncan MacKenzie brought to town last week a load of hogs which figured up to $409.09.

The local Masons have a big gathering Thursday night when the D. D. G. M., Mayor Johnston, of Walkerton, visits the lodge.

Elmer Siefert, North Bruce, reported to The Times that crows were seen last week. With the past few weeks of weather no robin dare show his face.

The fact that The Times is frequently solicited to run liquor advertising in its columns, is proof that a great many of the newspapers in Canada must be running the booze ads. The latest in the field for business is a Michigan concern.

The coal situation remains serious. There is still a great shortage of cars. It may be that more passenger trains will be cut off. So far this section is being served by two passenger trains out and two in, but it may be that one of these will be cut off, as on other lines.

The L. O. L. men at their recent meeting held at Williscroft, decided to send to their members now at the front a suitable remembrance. The officers elected were: W. Master, C. H. Green, Southampton; D. Master, T. S. Peacock, Williscroft; Rec. Sec. A. Rushton, Williscroft; Chaplain, G. Watson, Southampton; Treas. E. Grant, Williscroft; Fin. Sec., H. McFadden, Williscroft; D of Ceremonies, M. Robertson, Port Elgin; Lecturer E. McArtney, Williscroft; Dep. Sec., C. Crawford, Williscroft. Refreshments were enjoyed at the close.

A Compliment To Our Reeve

Reeve Izzard of Port Elgin, was tendered a big compliment by the county council last week when they elected him warden by acclamation.

The names of Reeves Douglas, Case and Wilkinson were mentioned, but these gentlemen promptly withdrew and with hearty applause Mr. Izzard was made Warden of Bruce county.

Another compliment was paid him at Walkerton when John Rowland, the president of the Saugeen Electric Light Co., entertained the new Warden and his council to a fine banquet.

Immediately on accepting the chair Warden Izzard had big things to deal with.

The first thing was to provide money for the Patriotic Funds. The councillors rose to the occasion admirably and voted $100,000 for the year 1917.

The next big business was the good roads question. The Warden soon made it plain where he stood in the matter when he told them that his county had led in many movements but regretted that they had not led in good roads legislation. However, he believed that the d scussion would gradually win over those opposed. Then there was a battle royal. "Black Dan" MacDonald and Dennis Phalen seemed to be the fighters opposing the scheme. Of course, there were other township men opposed, but were evidently open to conviction. Reeve Johnson, of Bruce, while not opposing the scheme severely, thought it might be laid over till after the war. Peter Dobson concurred in this. Reeve Christie believed in the scheme and therefore voted with the majority.

The motion was by D. A. MacDonald of Kinloss, and Whitworth, of Tara, to lay the matter over till after the war.

This was defeated 11 to 19. Those voting to lay it over were Reeves Dobson, Doering, Filsinger, Jas. Johnston, D. A. MacDonald, Phalen, Rutledge Rowand, Whitworth, Wilkinson. Willoughby. Those voting to give the matter further consideration were Reeves, Bell, Case, Case, Christie, Craig, Douglas, Ferguson, Forbes, Hunter, Izzard, Jos Johnson R Johnson, Kastner, Mann, D. B. McDonald, Russell, Steele, Whicher.

A pleasant occasion during the council's sitting was the presentation, by the councillors of a handsome gold-headed cane to Mr. Norman Robertson, the esteemed County Treasurer

Rubber prices made a sharp advance this month. Also all woollens have made big advances. It keeps the merchant and business men generally busy watching their costs and securing goods.

In The Imperial Army

Port Elgin is represented in the Imperial Army by one of its prominent families. David Gordon Macdonald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Neil MacDonald. He enlisted in the 162nd battalion last year, and as a lieutenant was a recruiting officer. He took special courses and was counted a proficient officer. But to get to the war early was Dave's desire, and last December he resigned his commission, and in order to get into the fight went as a private. Three weeks ago he landed in England, and advices from Ottawa are to the effect that he has received a commission in the Imperial Army. He was educated in Port Elgin public and high schools. He was principal in Parry public school.

American Hotel to Close its Doors

The American hotel will be closed by the proprietor Mr. C. F. McPherson. He says that since Prohibition came the business has not been good, and as he has other interests, he will close up. Mr. and Mrs. McPherson will occupy their former residence.

The American is a well-known hostelry in this part of the province, and recognized as one of the best in these parts. It has been going for many years, and is a fine brick structure. It was erected by the late Henry Hilker.

Dunblane Church

The annual meeting of Dunblane church was held last week. The reports showed the progress the best for many years. The edifice is greatly improved, and the givings larger. Missions got $100, Belgian Relief $121, while other solicitations received $24. The officers are the same as last year. D. F. Christie and Wm. Young retiring managers were re-elected and John Wallace and James Bryce auditors.

Votes of thanks were tendered the Secy-treas, Mr. John Scott, and the appreciation of the splendid work of the women for patriotic purposes was shown. Recognition was also made for the gifts of two soldier boys, who had not forgotten the old-home church.

Another pleasant feature of the evening was the gift of $25 to Rev. Mr. Watt, the pastor.

Bargains in Meat

You haven,t heard that often. But it's true. Eaton, the butcher is offering special cut prices on large pieces of all meats, quarters, half-quarters. The best and choicest at our shop. We put the eat in meat.

Shot Attempting to Disarm Negro

Because he failed to run when a negro, Isaac Coffee, thrust a double barrelled gun at his stomach as he came out of a store at El Paso, Texas, recently, Corp. John A. Currie of the Michigan National Guards, a former resident of Vancouver, is dead.

The negro, before coming in contact with Currie, had run amok in the streets of El Paso and threatened the lives of several persons, but they fled and escaped injury. The former Vancouverite had a chance to flee when Coffee threatened to shoot, but he attempted to disarm the negro with the result that he received the contents of both barrels in the stomach and expired a few minutes later.

Corp. Currie was a nephew of Mr. J. C. Currie, Vancouver, and Capt. Geo. Currie, Port Elgin, and was born at Saugeen Tp. Bruce County, about thirty years ago. He was a plumber by profession and worked here for a time about five years ago—Province.

TOWN TOPICS

Mrs. Scanlan is in Toronto this week.

Mr. E. Vaupel has recovered from a serious attack of la grippe.

Mr. Henry Eckel, of Buffalo, spent a few days at Mr. Wm. Gray's.

Miss Sarah Cluley has returned after a month's visit at Rosebush, Mich.

Mr. Frank Bowen is in Guelph for a few days.

D. C. Cavin is in Owen Sound to-day conducting an auction sale.

Rev. Mr. McFarlane of Bayfield, spent the week end with Mr. H. D. McLaren.

Mr. Emil Wankel is very ill, and little hopes of his recovery. He is in his 66th year.

Mrs. (Dr.) Campbell, of Elmwood, was visiting her mother, Mrs. Wm. Geddes, last week.

Mr. R. S. Begg contemplates going to the west. He may settle there if the farming is attractive to him.

Mr. H. Katz leaves for Toronto this week having closed out his clothing store. He will likely go into business in Toronto.

Mr. Fred Holtz, of Sweetgrass, Montana, is visiting with his father and mother in Saugeen. Fred is hale and hearty and is doing well.

The train reaching here at night leaves Toronto at 4.15 p. m. now instead of 5. It is not due here until 10.25 p. m.

Gus. Smith had a narrow escape while assisting Aug. Thede in the bush. A limb fell, glancing Mr. Smith's forehead, and inflicting a nasty cut.

The Stevens-Hepner employes had a holiday Friday, owing to a break in the heating system which prepares water for the boilers.

Mr. J. B. Reinhart is offering his small farm of 15 acres for sale, and contemplates going to Southampton, where he has a good position waiting.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Thomas, of North Battleford, Sask, are visiting the latter's brother Mr. Ed. Roberts at Mount Hope. It is 19 years since Mrs. Thomas went west.

The Red Cross tea rooms continue to grow in favor. The ladies have been taking turns in keeping the place open on Saturdays, and receipts are increasing.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Lymburner leave for Owen Sound this week, where they will reside. Many friends here regret their departure. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lymburner were prominent in the social life of the town.

Rev. Mr. MacFarlane of Bayfield, preached an excellent sermon in the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening on "Preparedness." The music for the day was very enjoyable, Mr. Busch sang in the morning and Miss Webb and Mr. Busch a duet in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. David Esplen, of Peace River district, are visiting old friends here and in Woodstock. Mr. Esplen was a former schoolteacher, but left years ago for the west. He has not been here in twenty years, and notices many changes.

The Presbyterian Ladies' Aid celebrated Burns' Anniversary, Jan. 25th. The weather was very bad and as a result several on the program could not get to town. However a nice time was enjoyed. Refreshments were served, and and an entertainment was carried out with Rev. Mr. Mann as chairman. The proceeds amounted to $14.

The death occurred at the Military Base hospital Toronto, following an operation, of Pte. A. W. Fairweather of the Medical Corps. Pte. Fairweather is a brother of Mrs. J. S. Cameron, of Port Elgin. He was 33 years of age. Prior to enlistment he conducted a grain and hay business at Toronto. He was a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College, and a prominent young man.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson V. Feb. 4, 1917.

Jesus the Saviour of the World.—John 3: 1-21.

Commentary.—I. An earnest inquirer (vs. 1, 2). Thus early in Christ's public ministry his words and deeds were taking effect. Nicodemus was a prominent Jew and a member of the Sanhedrin. His interest in Jesus was so great that he sought an interview with him. His coming to him by night does not of necessity mean that he was fearful for his reputation, though he might have known that his fellow members of the Sanhedrin would look down upon him for countenancing him who had recently cleansed the temple by driving out from thence the traffickers in animals and money. It is not unlikely that he came by night, because either Jesus or he was busy during the day, and the only favorable time for an interview was at night. In his introductory remarks to Jesus, he did not declare his faith in him as the Messiah nor as a prophet, but as a divinely-commissioned teacher. He recognized that it was through the power of God that he was able to perform miracles. This visit to Jesus shows that Nicodemus was candid and earnest. Subsequent references to him show that he was favorable to Jesus (John 7: 50-52; 19: 39).

II. The new birth (v. 3-8). 3, 4. Although there is no record that Nicodemus asked Jesus to explain to him the way to salvation, the Master knew the desire of his heart, and at once gave utterance to one of the deep truths pertaining to the kingdom of God. No one, whether a ruler of the Jews or any other person, could enter the kingdom of God without being born from above. This statement was something new to Nicodemus, or, at least, he seems to have been unprepared for that truth. He was a leading Jew in Jerusalem, yet he did not know the essence of true religion. He did not know what it was to be made spiritually alive. 5. Verily, verily—This word, repeated for emphasis, is an announcement that the statement which follows is of great importance. I say unto thee—Jesus spoke with full authority. Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit—The Jews made use of the expression, "born again," to represent the acceptance, by a Gentile, of the Jewish faith, and the outer sign of that act was water baptism; but the words of Jesus to Nicodemus were to the effect that Jews as well as Gentiles must be born again. To be born of water was to be baptized with water as an external sign of the internal or heart renovation. To be born of the Spirit is to be created anew in Christ Jesus. By this operation old things pass away and all things become new (2 Cor. 5: 17). Training in the church or a profession of religion does not procure for one admission into the kingdom. A change of heart, or regeneration, is the essential condition, and in connection with that the regenerated ones are to declare to the world by the rite of baptism that they have been born again. "The meaning of the 'birth from above' is still further explained by an analogy. What a man inherits from his parents is a body with animal life and passions; what he receives from above is a spiritual nature with heavenly aspirations and capabilities. What is born of sinful, human flesh is sinful and human; what is born of the Holy Spirit is spiritual and divine."—Plummer. Cannot enter into the kingdom of God—What is the kingdom of heaven? It is that condition or state where God reigns as king, where he is the supreme object of love and service, where his will is the law, and men obey it as naturally as they breathe, and where all his subjects are formed in his holy image and inspired with his spiritual life. It is that for which we pray in the first petitions of the Lord's prayer.—Peloubet. Only those who have been born again, born anew, born from above, can enter that kingdom.

6. That which is born of the flesh is flesh—The child partakes of the nature of the parent. By nature man is sinful, and his offspring is sinful. Nicodemus asked about a man's being born a second time of his earthly mother. Even if that was possible, his moral and spiritual nature would not be improved thereby. That which is born of the spirit is spirit—"Is spiritual, like the Spirit, that is, holy, pure." He only who is born of God bears the image of God. He has the qualities that declare his parentage. He brings forth the fruits of the Spirit. 7. Marvel not—Wonder not. It is possible that Nicodemus in some way still expressed a doubt of the doctrine, and Jesus took occasion in a very striking manner to illustrate it.—Barnes. Because he was unable to comprehend the process it was not for him to think the new birth an impossibility. 8. The wind bloweth where it listeth—The power of the wind in nature is recognized, but its source is not understood. We hear the sound and see and feel its effects. We have no disposition to deny either its existence or force. So is every one that is born of the Spirit—such is the case of every one. He feels the spiritual influence, but finds it incomprehensible in its origin, which is from above, and in its end, which is eternal life.—Cam. Bib. While he can not explain the manner, he is conscious that a mighty change has been wrought. He not only realizes it from its fruits, but the Spirit bears witness to him that he has become a child of God.

III. The Master's authority (vs. 9-13). 9. How can these things be—Nicodemus did not deny the fact of the new birth, but he could not grasp the process. That he was honest in his questioning is shown from the full and careful answer Jesus gave him. 10. Art thou a master of Israel—"Art thou the teacher of Israel?"—R. V. Nicodemus knew much of Israel's history and was familiar with the law and the accepted interpretation of it, but he was largely in the dark regarding the spiritual import of the Old Testament scriptures. 11. We speak—Jesus changes from the singular to the plural in the remaining utterances of this verse. He may include with himself John the Baptist and others who were to declare the truths of the gospel. Another opinion is that he included the Father and the Spirit with himself. And we do know—We can not fully grasp the impressiveness with which Jesus uttered these words. He spoke with authority. The true minister speaks from definite, positive knowledge. He speaks with the unction of the Holy Spirit. Every one who is born of the Spirit has a positive testimony as to what has been done for him. Definite knowledge and definite testimony regarding the work of grace in the heart influence the world for good. Ye receive not our witness—The Jews had knowledge of the miracles that Jesus wrought, yet they were not willing to believe his teachings. 12. Earthly things—Jesus had told Nicodemus about the work of regeneration, which was accomplished on earth, and he did not receive his words with full faith. If he should speak to him of things pertaining to the divine government and to the atonement, much less would his faith grasp it. 13. No man hath ascended up to heaven—This does not mean that no one had gone to heaven yet, but that no one had gone there and had come back to earth to report. But that he that came down from heaven—Christ came from heaven to tell men about heavenly things. Son of man—This was a favorite title used by our Lord in speaking of himself. He identified himself with humanity. Which is in heaven—Heaven was the home of Jesus. "So far as heaven is a state and a character, Jesus was always in heaven."

IV. The basis of our salvation (vs. 14-21). 14. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness—The story is given in Num. 21. 4-9. So must the Son of man be lifted up—Jesus must be lifted up on the cross. This is a prophecy and a promise. 15. Believeth in Him—Only those who look to Jesus in faith as the world's Redeemer and their personal Saviour can be saved. Eternal life—This life begins with the new birth and is designed to last forever. 16. God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son—This expresses the measure of God's love for mankind. That love led Him to give His Son as a sacrifice for the sins of the world. Should not perish—God purposed to save men from eternal death. 17. Not....to condemn—The world was under sentence of death, but Jesus came to save it from the execution of that sentence. 18-21. While God has given His Son for our redemption, the responsibility is upon the individual to believe in Jesus to the saving of his soul. Those who love their sins shun the light of the gospel and persevere in their wicked ways.

Questions—Who came to Jesus for an interview? Give a description of him. Why may he have come by night? What great truth did Jesus declare to him? How did Nicodemus receive Christ's message? What illustration did Jesus use? Give the story in the life of Moses to which Jesus referred. What is the measure of Christ's love for the world? What responsibility rests upon us as individuals?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—The great Teacher.

I. Set at naught false theories.

II. Defined personal salvation.

I. Set at naught false theories. The impression made on the public mind by Christ's teaching and miracles was very great. Reports had reached the teachers and rulers concerning Christ which startled them. A man not educated in their schools, not sent forth with their authority, an obscure man of peasant origin, was preaching doctrines not included in their systems, and doing works to which they were not equal. Nicodemus, one of the rulers, came to Christ personally to inquire as to these things. The opening remark made by Nicodemus, implied that he and his people had little to learn. He came expecting to discuss with Jesus things concerning the Jewish church as they related to Christ's miracles. Jesus returned an answer which apparently had no bearing on the subject of miracles. He showed incidentally the true position and value of his mighty works. At a single stroke Jesus laid low all the renowned greatness to which Nicodemus made claim and swept away the fondest of his race. Jesus spoke at once to the point and undeceived him in regard to the basis on which he and his countrymen were building their hopes. Nicodemus was an independent thinker and claimed the right to private judgment. His large mental capacity had been cultured to appreciate evidence and to weigh words. Consequently Jesus revealed to him advanced truths. Nicodemus learned that he must submit to a revolution in his ideas of the Messiah as a condition of instruction. He did not deny the doctrine of the new birth. He merely introduced a difficulty. A call from outward circumstances to the deepest experiences of the soul naturally suggested the question, "How can these things be?" Nicodemus was taught not to deny results because he could not understand processes. The new birth implied a new relation, no longer servants but sons. The term had a peculiar significance to a Jew inasmuch as all his privileges were secured to him by birth. It was well that Nicodemus should know that, however far he might be inclined to go in his acknowledgment of Jesus, nothing short of personal trust in him as his Messiah would suffice. The spiritual teaching of Jesus was that there should be a change in the condition of the Jewish people. It was not sufficient for them to do the works of the law. They must experience the new birth. The old rites would pass away.

II. Defined personal salvation. Jesus marked the new birth as the starting-point of a new spiritual experience. His teachings awakened the conscience, enlightened the understanding and stirred the heart of Nicodemus. His principles were broad and generous, having universal application to the physical, social and spiritual needs of man. The new birth is described as entering a kingdom of which God is king, as being born into the family of which God is Father as coming into the divine realm, into the spiritual kingdom, into right relations with God and heaven through Jesus Christ. When Nicodemus staggered at this, Jesus made plain how it was possible through the incarnation. The whole system of types betokened that in the fulness of time God would give His Son to make atonement for man. All through the ages God's love governed the world with a view to its final redemption. The brightest and fullest manifestation of God's love is in the mission of Jesus to the world to save sinners. The life and death of Jesus were but the working out of the love of God. Nicodemus was taught that he who apprehends believingly the work of Christ as the ground of his justification, will not fail to experience it as a regenerating power, a restoration in the soul of what has been lost through sin. Jesus brought the responsibility of men's perdition home to themselves. Unbelief is made the ground of condemnation because it involves the rejection of the only begotten Son of God and a willingness to remain in sin. In this interview resulted the first fruits of Jesus' direct ministry. The occasion was most solemn, the theme most momentous, the hearer a ruler in Israel, the speaker the great Teacher sent from God.

Chaldean Tablets.

The clay tablets of Chaldea, probably the very earliest writing materials used by man, were of different sizes, the largest being flat and measuring 9 by 6½ inches, while the smallest were slightly convex and in some cases not more than an inch long. In the same place with the tablets have been found the glass lenses which were used by their readers. The writing was done while the tablets were still soft by a little iron tracer, not pointed, but triangular at the end. The tablets, having been inscribed on both sides and accurately numbered, were baked in ovens and stored away in the state libraries.

HOME PORK BARREL FOR EVERY FARMER

How Uncle Dave Cured the Pork That Made His Reputation and How You May Do as Well—The Equipment and Methods That Are Required.

Uncle Dave Ramsey, of Ramsey's Corners, is the champion home-pork maker in our end of the county. Because of this little notoriety he has come to be his own packer. When the neighbors found out that a better brand of pork was being turned out right at home than the big abattoirs would supply at double the price, they weren't slow in patronizing the local industry. So it came about that hog-killing times at the Ramsey farm were "red letter" days. Along in January, when the weather had settled zerowards and promised to stay there, one might look any morning to see a wreath of smoke ascending from Uncle Dave's killing house. This was a signal that everything was in readiness and was sure to be be responded to by half a dozen stalwarts—with visions of real country sausage and spare ribs—ready to lend a hand.

DON'T DEPEND ON MOON.

"Is there any best time for this business, uncle?" I enquired, as several of the stalwarts rounded up a 200-pound cross of Berkshire and Tamworth.

"Well, I don't pay any attention to the moon, not being much on astronomy, if that's what you mean," he laughed. "I do look to the marketing end, though, and this seems a good time from that standpoint. People like beef and poultry during the holidays, then they want a change, and there is a call for pork. I try to have my hogs ready when the demand is likely to be the greatest."

By this time hog number one was ready for scalding, the killing having been done carefully and with no unnecessary excitement. A gambrel stick, uniting its hind legs, was then inserted for convenience in lifting the carcass to the scalding platform. Uncle David's method of handling was unique. Instead of all hands expending their last ounce of strength in sousing two hundred weight of dead hog he had planned to make the job almost child's play, and perhaps that was the reason helpers were always plentiful. An old-fashioned sweep-pole, that I suppose did duty in the days of "the old oaken bucket," was fastened by means of a swivel joint to the top of an upright post. By attaching the gambrel to the short end, the carcass was easily lifted from platform to scalding vat and back again; later, the same contrivance carried it to a horizontal pole to which it was hung up.

While another victim was being captured and put through the scalding vat, Uncle Dave proceeded to dress the one string on the pole. First, it was thoroughly washed down with warm water, carefully scraped with a knife and then rinsed off with cold water. Next came the opening process. Here considerable caution was exercised in order not to cut or rupture the intestines. Then, with the removal of the entrails, more fresh, clean water was used, and the carcass washed on the inside. Everywhere cleanliness was the first consideration. "There," said he, "putting the finishing touches to his work, "that one will be all drained out and ready for cutting up in the morning."

VARIOUS CUTS EXPLAINED.

Well, that job was finished at last, but the moon was beginning to show itself when Uncle Dave doused the last pail of water on the fire and sang out: "Hurrah boys, for supper." Glancing back at the long row of clean, white carcasses stretching clear and cold toward the ground, I could appreciate to the full the real beauty of the hog. Then, getting a whiff from the kitchen, I was ready to agree with Dr. Henry van Dyke that "the course of empire was greased with the bacon fried on the way."

The First Requisite is the Right Kind of Hog. These Fellows are "Right" —They Beat Out Everything Else at the Guelph Winter Fair.

The following morning I was on hand to help with the cutting. With the help of the sweep-pole we got the first carcass down on the chopping bench, square on his back.

"Now, the first thing we've got to do is to take off the head," remarked Uncle Dave, making a cut just back of the ears and thence down through the sticking hole to the throat. "By taking the bone out, the jowl will go as a pretty fair piece of bacon, and the pate worked up into head-cheese will make a dish fit for a house of lords."

The backbone was then split down through the middle with a saw, after which the hams were cut off about 2 inches forward of the pelvic bone, slicing at nearly right angles to the foot. "If you cut square across the carcass," he explained, "the ham will be pointed and will have to be trimmed more, which means waste. On the other hand, if cut exactly at right angles to the foot, while the ham will be square, the bacon will have a sharp corner needing to be trimmed extra. You see I'm trying to compromise between the two extremes."

Inserting a knife between the third and fourth ribs the shoulders were soon cut off. "Hams and shoulders take quite a good deal of trimming, no matter how you manage it," he went on, "that is, if one does the job right. We have to have them well rounded, not so much because they look better, but too much fat prevents the meat from curing properly. By exposing the lean meat as much as possible, it takes the pickle more readily, and for that reason there is less danger from spoiling. Of course, the trimmings are turned into lard and sausages, as the case may be.

BRINE PICKLING BEST.

"Now, then, for the spare ribs. You have to be a little careful or they're too spare or too generous." In performing this operation the cutting was done from the back side toward the belly, the knife being held flat to avoid gouging the bacon.

The foregoing manoeuvres were carried out as many times as there were carcasses to cut up. After a pretty steady spell of cutting, sawing and chopping, intermingled with sundry explanations by Uncle Dave, the pieces of cut meat began to accumulate. So between the dissection acts, I was kept tolerably busy carrying them to the smoke house. Finally, the scene and the nature of our activities shifted. A number of barrels that had been airing outside after a thorough scrubbing, were brought in to serve as containers for the meat during the curing process.

"Which is it to be, uncle?" I inquired, "dry cure or brine pickling?"

"Oh, the brine," he replied, "it takes less labor, and there isn't the risk if the weather don't stay cold. I've seen a good deal of dry-cured pork spoil during a muggy spell."

Accordingly, we prepared a brine sufficient for each one hundred pounds of meat, consisting of eight pounds of salt, two pounds of brown sugar, two ounces of saltpetre and one ounce of red pepper. These ingredients were stirred into four gallons of hot water mixed until dissolved, after which the mixture was allowed to cool.

"A little saltpetre helps to keep the natural color of the meat," observes Uncle Dave, "but it has the drawback of making it dry and woodlike. Sugar is good for the color and at the same time gives tenderness, so I like to use more of it and less of the saltpetre than most people do."

In packing the meat in the barrels salt was used in the bottom and between each succeeding layer, after which a well-cooled brine was poured over it and the whole weighted down with a large stone.

"Well, that job's done," I remarked casually, as the last barrel was finished and finally weighted down.

"For the present, yes, but it's a case you can't hurry," was the rejoinder. "In about a week that meat will al have to come out and be reversed, that is, the top pieces will go in the bottom and the lower ones on top. Ten days later the overhauling has to be repeated. It takes from four to six weeks altogether for a thorough curing. Then, if freezing weather is over it is hung up in the smoke house and a smudge kept going for two or three weeks, after which it goes into sacks until sold.

"Of course," added Uncle Dave, "some of my customers get their supply as soon as it is cured, and a few don't even wait for that, but on the whole that smoked meat is ready for delivery about the time the demand is keenest."

SUNDAY AT HOME

AN APPEAL.

"Father, to us Thy children, humbly kneeling
Conscious of weakness, ignorance, sin and shame,
Give such a force of holy thought and feeling
That we may live to glorify Thy name.

"That we may conquer base desire and passion,
That we may rise from selfish thought and will,
O'ercome the world's allurement, threat, and fashion,
Walk humbly, gently, leaning on Thee still.

"Let all Thy goodness by our minds be seen,
Let all Thy mercy on our souls be sealed;
Lord, if thou wilt, Thy power can make us clean;
Oh, speak the word, Thy servants shall be healed!"

INTERCESSION FOR THE SAINTS.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, He will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in My name; ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full.—Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit.

This is the confidence that we have in Him, that, if we ask any thing according to His will, He heareth us; and if we know that He hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of Him.—This is the will of God, even your sanctification.

God hath .. called us .. unto holiness .. who hath also given unto us His Holy Spirit.

Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. Quench not the Spirit.

CONTEMPLATION.

I am a star in the firmament of God. The pendulum that measures my time swings from pole to pole; the light of ten thousand suns makes me glad; my shires are washed by the pure waves of delight and fringed with the laughing beauty of the Most High. My attitude is sublime, but warm; clouds never thicken into gloom, hostile fleets are strangers to my shores. I look ahead, but do not forbode disaster, my watch tower is high, my horizon wide, my leisure large, my companions many, my visions are the visions of God, unfolding, enlarging, increasing. I study the past of God, rather than the future of man; my hearing is sensitive and the whispers come like the song of summer birds.

I can say I am because I live. Life is great, it is greater than having, greater than doing, greater than having done. An author says: "Life is not action, but contemplation, not what we have, nor what we do, but it is the quiet omnipotence of what we are."

I can look up. I can say all things are mine! Heaven, light, laws, distances, beings, [illegible], alive. I rise to command, because I am commanded; all the beings are related, the saints in their ranks, the angels in their order, my companions, my servants.

I look in. What expansiveness [illegible]! It enlarges me. I receive the grandeur of God. I am not overwhelmed, because when He comes He makes the place wide and ample. The kingdom is [illegible] is within. Mr. Bremond says of Newman: "He can lay his head on his pillow at night and own in God's sight, with overflowing heart, that he wants nothing, that he is full and abounding, and that nothing is not his which God could give him." The man of contemplation looks forward. Man never is, but always to be, blest; it is better on before. When I look with steady gaze, the softened gaze of reverence at the things that are not seen, I survey the real estate of God. The cup of ancient worthies is not completed until I join their festivity and song.

The man of contemplation looks down. The kingdom which is in you has an expanding power, it has also an expulsive power. It turns out, lets go and says good-by to old tyrannies, old idols, old snares, dark, dreary, deadly, past redemption, never to know a resurrection morning.

"Now where do you want your speech to come?"

"Put me on before the celery is served. Two hundred people eating celery in unison make it very difficult to be heard."

The little folks in the first grade were reading about a dandelion, and the teacher asked who had seen one. Up went Ben's hand and the teacher asked, "Where did you see a dandelion?" "In the circus!" was the confident reply.—The Christian Herald enjoying it."—Washington Star.

AN EVIL HERITAGE

CHAPTER XXXIX.

When Miss McCrie had seen Marian to her bedroom her work for the day was not yet over. Any one who had caught a glimpse of the slight woman's figure stealing along the garden path and down towards the gate would have suspected a lover's tryst, and would have been sure of it when out of the shadow of the wall on the other side of the gate there stepped a tall young man, in a somewhat badly creased linen suit, and with a rather battered but not the less romantic-looking straw hat shading his sunburnt face.

The tall young man seemed a little out of humor.

"Is that you? By Jove, I thought you were not coming. And now, Miss McCrie, unless there is any insuperable objection, would you mind telling me what particular good is gained by my slinking about in this fashion, like a thief with the detective on his heels? I have obeyed your message, but be so kind as to tell me why you could not receive me in the house, like a respectable Christian, and for what possible or impossible reason this interview had to take place at the garden gate."

"I wished to save you from an unpleasant surprise. Do you see the light burning in that window? It is the light in Marian's room."

The young man started violently. "Marian? My cousin Marian?"

"Exactly. She landed from the mail this afternoon in the company of her aunt Honoria."

"Why did you not tell me of this? You must have known she was coming."

"I had a notion of it certainly, but why should I tell you? There is no need for your meeting; indeed, it would be far better if it could be avoided, since it would only distress you to see her. I imagine it must be very painful to behold yourself loved so truly and be unable to requite it."

The stranger in the wide-brimmed hat had taken a turn across the road and back again. Now he stood still, and asked in a voice which shook with some sort of suppressed excitement:

"Do you mean that she cares for me still?"

"Yes, that is what I mean. But there is no need to look so solemn; I shall talk her out of it yet, never fear. It is for her best, you know, that she should be talked out of it."

"Yes, I suppose it would be for her best," he agreed, a shade more solemnly, "if I could help you in any way, I would, for my debt to Marian can never be cancelled."

"Except by the one thing which you are not willing to give."

The young man made a gesture of annoyance.

"Miss Mercury, Miss Mercury, you are an incorrigible old matchmaker. We have spoken of this in our letters. Anyone who knows the world, ever so little would tell you that since I would have none of Marian when she was a poor little nobody, I cannot possibly make her my wife now that it is my turn to be the nobody."

"That may be, but, you see, I don't know the world, and I am stupid enough to suppose that when two people are fond of each other it doesn't much matter on which side the money and the position happen to be. But I am glad you have spoken so plainly; it simplifies matters. I shall lose no further time in setting upon Marian."

The young man moved a little uneasily from one foot to the other.

"Do you not think it would be wiser to leave that sort of thing to Nature and time?"

"No, I do not. I have no wish to see my beloved Marian eating out her heart for love of a man who, on his side, is eating out his heart for love of Sybil Durrant."

"Sybil Durrant," he repeated, with a rather dreary laugh; "Sybil Durrant is dead for me—dead and buried in a green meadow, and I have planted a cowslip upon her grave."

"And are you quite sure that you have not buried your heart in it?"

"I tried to do so, and I wish I had, but I do not think I have succeeded. Tell me, Miss McCrie, do you believe in the existence of such a thing as second love?"

"Second love? That's a point to discuss some day at leisure. But, in the meantime, it was not to speak about either first or second love that I have come down to the gate; it was to tell you that I have sent a message to Lizzie Silkworth, as I told you I would do yesterday, and she has promised to be in until after six to-morrow evening. You had better not put it off even for a day, for Lizzie is the merest bird of passage. When I wrote to you that she had turned up on St. Clara, I never expected her to remain here until you had arrived. And now, good-night, Mr. Berrincott. But stop, another word: I don't know whether you care about my opinion, but I can't resist telling you that I find your present self a vast improvement upon your former self. You may think I am joking, but, upon my soul, I am serious when I tell you that these two years in the Bolivian army have been the best finisher to your education, and the most satisfactory means of working off some of that superfluous energy through whose mere existence you were bound to make yourself into a universal nuisance, whether you wanted to or no. Your anxiety to improve the world used to be so great that you were not able to look on when you saw a child ill-managed, or furniture ill-placed; but since you have had to fight your own battle, I verily believe that you could behold a boiling kettle blistering all the polish of a drawing room table without necessarily interfering, unless it was your special business to do so."

"How long is she going to stay in the island?"

"Lizzie Silkworth? Marian? I really cannot say. But to return to the subject of to-morrow—I shall lie in wait for you on your return from Periwinkle Hut in order to hear the news. There is a depression in the beginning of the hills, which goes by the name of the Old Provision-ground; you will find me waiting for you there beside the watch-hut."

"But what will you do with Marian during the time?" he enquired, a little anxiously.

"I shall dispose of her somehow, never fear. Of course, a meeting between you two must be avoided by every means."

"I suppose it must. But don't forget that if there is anything I can do——"

"The only thing you could do would be to help me to find a suitable husband for your cousin."

"I cannot possibly do that," returned the young man, almost snappishly. "I have never studied match-making."

"Oh, yes, you can do it, if you try, and it stands to reason that, of all the people in the world, you ought to be the most anxious to see Marian happily settled. It cannot be such a hard task either, for your cousin has vastly improved in looks during these last two years, as perhaps it may interest you to hear. She used to be a sort of outline sketch, neither filled in nor finished, whereas now she is a completed picture. I am glad of it, for the more adorers she has the more easily will she get over her first childish romance."

"Ye-es, so I imagine," acquiesced the young man, somewhat gloomily, whereupon there soon followed "good-night," and some more minute directions as to the time and place of meeting next day.

"He is pretty mad, too," was Miss McCrie's reflection, as she returned to the house. "I have done all that it lies in human nature to do; the surroundings must do the rest."

She was distinctly hopeful, and she would have been more hopeful still had she known that, for more than an hour after she parted with him, Bernard was haunting the roads and paths around Prospect, and clambering over the rocks in hopes of refreshing himself by a glimpse of the light in Marian's window. It was not until the house had sunk into unresponsive darkness that he stole away among the shadows.

To see her without being seen, that was all the wish he was aware of. But how was the thing to be done? There was a question weighing on his mind, to which one sight of his cousin's face would be an answer. That he esteemed her as the first and foremost among women, and thanked her with a species of awe-struck gratitude for the affection she had wasted upon him he had long known. And yet without seeing her again he could not dare to say what she was to him, whether a goddess to be distantly adored, or a woman to be loved with human ardor. Not that hope could ever grow out of that one moment—it must be a farewell glimpse.

To confide in Miss McCrie seemed to be the only chance, and Miss McCrie was to meet him at the Old Provision ground on his way back from Lizzie Silkworth's lodging. It is scarcely too much to say that when, on the following afternoon Bernard set out for the Periwinkle Hut, his mind was at least as much taken up with that he was going to say to Miss McCrie on the way back, as with the questions he was meaning to put to Joseph Silkworth's widow.

The Periwinkle Hut stood within the forest upon a space of ground that had been cleared years ago, but whose irrepressible vegetation was forever creeping back again to the spot from which it had been ousted. Here Lizzie Silkworth was enjoying the hospitality of a distant kinswoman, and here it was that Bernard found himself confronted by a dishevelled, grizzly-haired woman, draped in gaudy rags, with haggard black eyes and a yellow, fever-stricken face. At sight of him she staggered to her feet, and stood there decked with glass beads and paper flowers, the most pitiable wreck of a light woman that had ever met his eyes.

"Is't your fortune you've come after being told?" she asked, clutching at a table for support. "Or maybe you're the gen'leman as wanted to ask me some questions? You'll excuse my sitting down, won't you?" And she collapsed on to a chair, being either too weak or not quite sober enough to maintain the perpendicular for longer at a time.

Bernard explained the reason of his coming as briefly as was consistent with clearness.

"Mrs. Simon!" repeated Lizzie, with a drunken yawn. "Lor', what a time it seems since I've even heard her name! No, sure enough she wasn't dead when Joseph and I got married. It was Joseph's idea to have her carried over to the Little House before the wedding, and a first-class idea it was, for it couldn't make any difference to her in which of the houses she died, while to us it made all the difference in the world in which of the houses we got settled."

"All this does not explain what motive your husband had in falsifying Mrs. Simon's death."

"Oh, yes, it does!" and Lizzie laughed tipsily, and with her shaking fingers adjusted another paper rose among her grizzled locks. "You see, we had barely been married a week or two when there comes a letter from Mr. Simon, written in a great hurry like, and insisting on knowing the exact date on which Mrs. Simon had died. Joseph was regular taken aback, not being used to Mr. Simon troubling his thoughts about Mrs. Simon. If he had known about the second marriage then, no doubt matters would have become a bit plainer, but the news of that did not come to the island till some time later, and all the explanation Joseph could think of was that Mr. Simon had an eye upon him for having turned Mrs. Simon out of the Big House in spite of his having been forbidden to do so, and that's why he thought it safer to put her down as having died on June 18, instead of June 30, when we were not married yet and when the Big House was entirely at her disposal. As Joseph said, it wasn't likely that Mr. Simon would enquire into the matter, and neither he did."

"Did your husband realize that my father's second marriage was invalid?"

"That's more than I can tell you. The news of the marriage did not come to the island till a couple of months later, and there were jokes made about the shortness of the mourning; but whether Joseph or anyone else, took the trouble to enquire into the exact dates I cannot say. Since it was nobody's special interest to do so I suppose it wasn't done."

Lizzie had now reached the end of her wisdom, as was proved by a few more questions; and when Bernard presently turned his back upon the Periwinkle Hut, it was with the conviction in his mind that the question of the Big and the Little House at Lot 13 had in truth underlain the whole question of Mrs. Simon's date of death, and consequently of his own illegitimacy.

"After this I should like to see a fellow trying to make out to me that thirteen is not the unluckiest number ever invented," was Bernard's reflection, as he tramped after his small, dusky guide along the weed-grown path which led to the Old Provision ground.

Famous Trees of History.

Which are the most famous trees of history? Shakespeare's mulberry, with its innumerable posterity, is one; and surely, says the Pall Mall Gazette, a high place belongs to the apple tree from Sir Isaac Newton's garden, a log from which is in the possession of the Royal Astronomical Society. The story of the famous apple, like that of the dog Diamond, is probably more than half legend. It is traceable to Voltaire ("Philosophie de Newton"), who had it from Newton's niece, Catharine Barton. The incident is alleged to have happened at Woolsthorpe in the autumn of 1665, and the tree consecrated by tradition lasted till 1820, when, owing to decay, it was cut down.

Dangerous Throat Troubles Prevented by Nerviline

IT ENDS MISERY OF COLDS QUICKLY.

Don't wait till night.

Get after your cold now—this very minute, before it grows dangerous you should apply old-time "Nerviline."

Rub your chest and throat, rub them thoroughly with Nerviline. Relief will be immediate.

Nerviline will save you from lying awake to-night, coughing, choking and suffering from congestion in the chest and acute pain in the throat.

Nerviline will break up that dull neuralgic headache—will kill the cold and chill at its very beginning—will save you from perhaps a serious illness.

To take away hoarseness, to break up a grippy cold, to cure a sore throat or bad cold in the chest, you can use nothing so speedy and effective as Nerviline. For forty years it has been the most largely used family remedy in the Dominion. Time has proved its merit, so can you by keeping a bottle handy on the shelf. Sold by any dealer anywhere at 25c. per bottle.

RETIRED BURGLAR.

Crying Babies Gave Him Two Shocks in One Night.

"Of course in my business, same as in any other," said the retired burglar, "you learn by experience. One of the first things I learned in that way was to avoid houses where they had young children, infants.

"Grown folks may sleep right through thunderstorms, windstorms, things falling down in the house, 'most any sort of racket, but you never can tell what an infant will do. And those same grown up folks that will sleep right through anything else will wake up sharp at the smallest peep from an infant. They seem to be tuned that way. But I had to learn this by experience.

"One night when I was new in the business I went into what seemed to me a promising looking house in the suburban districts. Got in by the easy cellar window and padded upstairs to the second storey front room with no trouble at all and went straight to the bureau. I opened the top drawer gently, without a squeak, and when I turned in my light the very first thing I saw was a diamond ring that I guess must have made my eyes sparkle as much as the ring did. It was a big stone. I should think two or three carats.

"It was a man's ring, and instead of slipping it straight into my pocket as I should have done I put it on my finger for just a moment to look at it. At that same instant I heard a baby begin to cry.

"I had seen two persons in a bed in this room, but I had not observed a crib over on the other side of the bed. But the instant that baby cried one of the figures in the bed raised up on its elbow with its back toward me and looked over into the crib at the child, and I didn't need to have anybody tell me that it was time for me to go, which I did, without those two persons in the bed knowing that I had been there at all.

"When I got back into the street it was still within what you might call my business working hours. I hadn't been in that house ten minutes and I thought I still had plenty of time for another.

"In this second house I had just exactly the same experience as in the first, with one thing added that I will tell you about. In this house there was a crib which I saw, and that ought to have been enough for me, but sometimes, you know, we have to have our experience rubbed in.

"I went to the bureau here just the same as in the first house and opened the top drawer and was pawing around in it with one hand and holding the lamp with the other when the baby here fairly screamed—nightmare, I suppose. Two persons in the bed jumped as if they'd been blown out of bed, one on the side toward the crib and the other on the side toward me, but I got out and got away.

"I hadn't much more than got settled down and started on the road for home when I began to feel as if something was wrong, as if I had missed something or lost something, and then it struck me all of a sudden that I had lost my diamond ring! I must have clenched my hand on it when that first baby cried, for I know I still had it on my finger when I reached into the bureau drawer in that second house, but there I must have left it. That second baby's sharp cry was really startling, and when it struck me I must have let go of myself for just an instant, let my hands open, and in that instant the ring slipped off my finger.

"Those two experiences, being scared out of two houses by infants and losing a valuable diamond ring all in one night, were enough to teach me the lesson, and from that on as long as I was in active business whenever I went through a town prospecting by day I always left out of my calculations all houses around which I saw a baby carriage."

Ate 'Em All Herself.

A girl was required to write a brief sketch of Queen Elizabeth, says the Literary Digest. Her paper contained this sentence:

"Elizabeth was so dishonest that she stole her soldiers' food."

The teacher was puzzled, and called the girl.

"Where did you get that notion?"

"Why, that's what it says in the history."

The book was sent for, and the passage was found. It read:

"Elizabeth was so parsimonious that she even pinched her soldiers' rations."

GUARD THE BABY AGAINST COLDS

To guard the baby against colds nothing can equal Baby's Own Tablets. The Tablets are a mild laxative that will keep the little one's stomach and bowels working regularly. The Mark of Him.

Miss D— was giving an elaborate description of a blacksmith, preparatory to teaching Longfellow's poem, relates the New York Post.

"Now, children, we are going to learn a poem to-day about some one who works very hard every day, all the year round. He is very large and strong, and has great arms that lift such heavy things! His face is blackened with soot that comes from his fire. And he wears a leather apron, and he has a fire that glows red, and whenever one makes anything he puts the iron into his fire and then he lifts his hairy arms and pounds and pounds with a great hammer, which makes a clanging noise and sends showers of sparks flying around. Now, who can tell me what I have been describing?"

A little maid who had listened to these vivid details with eyes twice their natural size, leaned forward and gasped, in an awed whisper: "The devil!"

Why Not a Garden Pool?

As to the garden pool—why not have one? It may be ever so simply done, and often the more simple it is the more charming. Or it may be very elaborate and artificial, like those in the tiny toy gardens of those masters of artifice, the Japanese. No other garden feature offers greater possibilities for diversity of form or for originality than the pool. I know a city garden with high walls about it, rather a cramped garden because of the nearness of other dwellings. But under a small tree in that garden is a bit of a basin with water that is always fresh, set there in the sod to invite the birds for a daily bath. And where birds are there is the spirit of the woodland and meadowland, no matter how high skyscrapers tower round about.—Bertha H. Smith, in Country Life Magazine.

Wonder if the Grand Trunk could be induced to beautify its station yard? An agitation was kept up for many years regarding a new station, and we finally got an improved building, but not a new one. A little work in grading and placing cinders, along with a sidewalk, would improve the yards a great deal and make it much more convenient for those who travel. Of course, it will be easy to say "why don't the council get after the railway," but that is saddling everything on the councillors. A citizen's committee would be of great assistance to the council and our town generally.

The Bruce Preparedness League develops strength steadily. Recent branches organized have selected some very prominent and active citizens as officers. One of the first things the League will have to decide upon, with the growing tendency in Canada toward conscription, will be whether or not men should be taken from the land in Bruce county. What the League has to say about this, will have considerable effect upon a compulsory board.

* * *

When a number of those who have been shouting conscription find out that the present-day conscription does not take every eligible man, their ardor, which was fired mainly because of a desire to see a certain few young men forced to enlist, will cool. Those who desire conscription in Canada should want it because it will help the Empire, and not because of some personal satisfaction. Men working on farms, in mines, steel industries or in factories making munitions, will be exempt. Those working in factories, which are making their usual lines, will be within the compulsion law should one be adopted, and we are getting nearer to that time daily.

The Provincial government counts on getting a million dollars from auto licenses this year. It also counts on spending a lot of this money on good roads in the counties which take advantage of the Good Roads scheme of the government. Bruce should not wait too long. At the present people of Bruce are paying for the other counties' roads. It costs us, whether we join in the movement or not. Then why are we not in it? Bruce county council has a big responsibility in this matter.

* * *

The scarcity of fuel is being felt in town. The dealers are doing what they can to tide over. The shortage is due to cars not to coal. Wonder how many of our citizens have thought of whether there was coal at the power house? If coal gave out there, Port Elgin would be in a mighty serious position for water, and in case of fire. Thanks to a thoughtful reeve and council they have provided enough to tide over the worst.

* * *

John Rowland, the power king of Bruce, is taking a lot of pleasure out of entertainment these days. He has been prominent in giving the soldier boys many a good time, and has entertained at a number of little affairs. Last week he dined the county council. Possibly John didn't know that all the editors of Bruce were holidaying in the county town last Thursday. However, we'll take it next time, when The Telescope man is out of town.

* * *

An event of particular interest was the presentation of a gold-headed cane to Mr. Norman Robertson, the county treasurer, by the county council. It was very fitting that Mr. Robertson should be remembered, as he has just finished his thirtieth year as treasurer. Not only has he rendered great service to his county in this responsible position, but in many other ways he has contributed in keeping his county to the front. He is a very worthy citizen, and many men throughout Bruce would have been glad to participate in the presentation. Those who had the affair in charge are to be commended for their thoughtfulness. Too often do we forget the faithful men who carry much responsibility for very small remuneration. Let every municipality in Bruce look around. There are many faithful servants, and their work merits appreciation.

* * *

The President of the Soldiers' Friend Club has drawn our attention to the editorial in last week's issue headed "When Jack Comes Back," as likely questioning the girls' organization. As a matter of fact, the article referred to was written before the club was organized, and has no reference to it, so far as we are concerned. Our argument is that every municipality should give a civic welcome, not necessarily on the entertainment plan, to every soldier who returns. As The Times circulates in seven municipalities in this immediate district the article does not apply to one more than another. The Soldiers' Friend Club is needed. The girls can, and will, do a lot of good, and they will be all the better for their organization. They will no doubt have some hindrances in their work, as all organizations do, but the girls have only to keep in mind worthy ideals, and they will accomplish much. Perhaps a word might be said concerning the forming of the club a week or so ago. Under the direction of their honorary president, Mrs. Busby, the young people expect to contribute in many ways to the comfort of the boys in training and in the trenches. There are many things soldiers need and often ask for. By having the energies of this band of girls properly directed much good work will be done. The fine success they made of their carnival last night is only one evidence of the things which can be accomplished.

Honoring the Warden

Port Elgin is honored in having its reeve as Warden of the county. Many congratulations are being extended and The Times joins with many people in the county in congratulating Mr. Izzard.

He will fill the position gracefully, and with the knowledge he possesses of county affairs, Bruce will be well served.

Port Elgin citizens have usually banquetted the reeve who was successful in bringing the chief honor to this town, and it is understood that the matter is under way for honoring the present Warden.

There are many prominent men in the surrounding townships and in the county generally who would like to participate in an event of this kind.

Leaving the Liberal Party

Hugh Clark, M. P. in his paper, The Kincardine Review, says that Liberal editors cannot support their party because the attitude of the leaders since the war has been repugnant to them.

It is interesting to note how Ross Munro, a former editor of The Times, has changed his politics, according to The Review, which says:—"Although the commercial phase of the amalgamation of the two Ottawa newspapers was the one featured in the news reports of it, there is another that deserves more than passing attention. The amalgamation was brought about largely because the editors of the Free Press had found it impossible to continue it as a Liberal newspaper. Messrs. E. Norman Smith and Ross Munro had been strong Liberals and had received their training in the Toronto Globe office. But they are both stout Britishers and the attitude of the Liberal party since the war began has become repugnant to them. The last straw was Sir Wilfrid's refusal to join with the Prime Minister in an appeal for national service. Mr. Smith wrote an open letter to Sir Wilfrid expressing his regret that he should have taken such a course. The new morning and evening journal will be avowedly Conservative and the editors will support the Borden Government conscientiously believing they could take no other course.

"While Liberal lieutenants are shouting for an election they might bear in mind what is happening in the capital city, where intelligent and patriotic Liberals have the best chance to size up the situation as between the Government and the opposition. These two Liberal editors will be found supporting the Government because during the past two years the conduct of the Liberal leaders has estranged them by failure to join in prosecuting "the only thing worth while"."

War Orders

The present industrial activity is due largely to war orders. These, however, will cease with the close of the war. A period of readjustment and retrenchment will probably follow. The prudent man will guard against this now by saving a substantial part of his present earnings or increased income.

Another Raise in Paper

The paper condition has been serious for months, and every kind of paper has doubled in price. But the most serious blow of all came last week when The Times was notified of another raise of a straight 65 per cent. in the cost of its newsprint. This is a most serious state of affairs, and unless the government comes to the relief of the publishers, it is certain that many newspapers will have to cease publication. It seems peculiar, to say the least, that in a country with such pulpwood areas as Canada has, the mill owners should be allowed to do as they like in the matter of regulating paper prices. The last increase makes the new subscription price of $1.50 of little more use to the publisher than the old dollar rate.

Many Thanks

Miss Marion McArthur, president of the Red, White and Blue club of Bruce Tp. has received letters from Ptes. J. A. Robinson and J. P. Brown thanking the club for fine Christmas boxes. The latter says; 'I think if any of the 160th are well looked after, it's No. 13 platoon. Your Christmas box arrived just the day before Christmas and seemed to bring all the Underwood boys together, and also to appreciate how the folk at home are making it easy for us. I sincerely hope that by another Christmas we shall be back enjoying the company of the Red, White and Blue girls again.'

Traitors Three

Judas and Arnold and Kaiser Bill
Sat and talked on a brimstone hill.
"I," said Judas, "I sold my Lord,
To murderers for a cash reward."
"And I" said Arnold, "betrayed my men;
Everyone talked of my deed then."
The Kaiser spoke, "Why, boys, I broke
A sacred treaty with peaceful folk;
"Betrayed them, man and woman and child,
To be shot and massacred and defiled.
"The remnant I work in my armament town
At shells to shoot their brothers down."
An envious thrill through the dead hearts flew.
"What a traitor you are!" said the other two. —Life.

North Bruce and St. Andrew's Have Successful Year

The annual meeting of the united congregations of North Bruce and St. Andrew's Presbyterian churches was held in the St. Andrew's church on Tuesday, the 25th at 2 p. m. Owing to unfavorable weather only those interested in the work were present.

As the charge has been without a pastor during the past seven months, the meeting was presided over by the senior Elder, Mr. Alex McGillivray, ex-reeve of Bruce, while Mr. Neil McGillivray acted as secretary. The financial statement having been printed and distributed on the previous Sabbath, the treasurer's report simply drew attention to some of the main features in the printed statement.

There were 64 paying families connected with the congregation from which total receipts amounting to $2,462 were collected during the year.

An average of $40 per family. Of this amount, $950 went to the mission work of the church, an average of $15 per family for church work outside their own congregation. The total expenditure for the year was a little over $2,000 which leaves a balance in the treasuries of a little over $400.

One of the distinguishing characteristics of this pastoral charge is its marked liberality in contributing to the support of mission work. So noticeable has this become that the mission work in connection with the church, is now recognized as being more than the work of man. That the families that are being used in this work are receiving a blessing is also a recognized fact. To the men of the world this may seem foolish, but there are always some who prefer to follow the wise rather than the foolish. "Five of them were wise, five were foolish."

Kindly reference was made to the fact that the late Mr. Allan McKinnon, one of the leaders in all good work in connection with the congregations, had been called to his reward during the year. Mr. McKinnon was one of the Elders, the Sec'y treas. for the Finance board, Superintendent of the St. Andrew's Sabbath school, the friend and counsellor of all. His call came while the harness was still on; a warning to us who are left. "Be ye also ready."

A discussion arose as to what had best be done in the event of the Rev. Peter W. Currie declining the call that had lately been forwarded to him. It was decided to hear supply until April first and then to hear candidates with the object of securing another pastor in the spring. The re-election of all the old officers brought a very harmonious and profitable review of the work done during the year 1916 to a close.

Rural congregations often have difficulty in securing pastors and in such places the church members should rally to the support of their pastor by taking an interest in the church work and by regular attendance at the services. The indifference and lack of sympathy of some church members makes the work of a country pastor particularly difficult.

Passports to Canada Refused to Useful People.

London, Jan. 13.—Applications for passports for Canada, as for other places are being scrutinized here closely now. Persons between sixteen and sixty years of both sexes, who are likely to be of use in munition making or any other form of national service, have little chance of obtaining permission to proceed to other parts of the Empire. Many applications for passports for women wanting to go to Canada for domestic service have recently been turned down. Immigration and steamship agents who get a commission naturally are much perturbed, but the official reply to protestants is that the national emergency is of such a character that it is impossible to allow anybody who might possibly be useful to leave the country.

Women as Brave As the Men

THEIR STRUGGLE SHOWS A REMARKABLE SPIRIT.

Talk of the bravery of men, but where can you find a finer spirit than among the half-sick women who are fighting and struggling to do their duty against the terrible odds of ill-health, and who will not give up.

One woman in every three is struggling against weakness. Most of them are not exactly sick, but oh, how miserable!

The burden and misery of it all has its foundation in the blood which is thin and watery. The red cells are too few. The very stream of life is reduced in vitality. Weakness and inevitable ill-health are the certain result.

Every ailing or weak woman can quickly regain her health in this very simple way. By filling the system with the nutrition that comes from rich red blood, a quick change for the better will result. To accomplish this, take two chocolate-coated Ferrozone Tablets after each meal. You'll feel better immediately for the simple reason that Ferrozone renews the blood. It gives pep, vim, vigor, endurance, restores a tired, worn-out system very quickly.

You'll feel like new all over once you get Ferrozone working through your blood. It puts color into faded cheeks, brightens the eye, quickens the step, brings back that wonderful feeling of youth.

One of the finest things Ferrozone does is to make you eat lots and digest it as well. With keen appetite, sound sleep, strong nerves and lots of nourishing blood you're bound to regain robust health. Any sickly girl or ailing woman that Ferrozone won't make well must be incurable. There is a secret power in Ferrozone and it is worth a trial at all events. Fifty cents per box, six for $2.50. At all dealers in medicine, or by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

A New Game Region.

Our mighty hunters who are looking for new fields to conquer, after exhausting the possibilities of Africa and South America, may turn their eyes eastward to the country of the Soyotes. This is an almost unknown territory in Asia in the upper valley of the Yenisei river, lying partly in China and partly in Siberia. In July, 1914, a Norwegian expedition, led by Orjan Olsen, undertook the exploration of this region. It comprises an extent of more than 150,000 square kilometers inhabited by some fifty or seventy thousand Soyotes. These are individuals belonging to the Finno-Ugrian race, i. e., to the same race as the Finns, the Lapps, the Samoyeds, and the Ostiaks, though residing thousands of miles distant from these. They live mainly by raising cattle or reindeer. The expedition referred to above has recently returned to Europe and published an account of its explorations, a resume of which is given by Mr. Rabot in the "Bulletin de la Societe de Geographie." It is stated that the Soyote country has remarkable extremes of temperature. Fish and game are very abundant, and the fur-bearing animals particularly will doubtlessly attract many trappers, as in Siberia and the northern portion of the American continent.—"Literary Digest."

WOLVES OF THE SEA.

Killer Whales Travel in Packs and Are Ferocious.

The killer whale usually travels and hunts in "schools" or packs of from three to a dozen or more individuals. Unlike most whales, the members of these schools do not travel in a straggling party, but swim side by side, their movements as regularly timed as those of sailors. A regularly spaced row of advancing long black fins swiftly cutting the undulating surface of the sea produces a singular sinister effect. The evil impression is well justified, says the National Geographic Magazine, since killers are the most savage and remorseless of whales. The jaws are armed with rows of effective teeth, with which the animals attack and devour seals and porpoises and even destroy some of the larger whales.

Killers are like giant wolves of the sea, and their ferocity strikes terror to other warm-blooded inhabitants of the deep. The Eskimos of the Alaskan coast of Bering Sea consider killers as actual wolves in sea form. They believe that in the early days, when the world was young and men and animals could change their form at will, land wolves often went to the edge of the shore ice and changed to killer whales, and the killers returned to the edge of the ice and came out as wolves, to go raveling over the land. Some of the natives assure us that even today certain wolves and killers are still endowed with this power, and, on account of their malignant character, are much feared by hunters.

Killers are known to swallow small seals and porpoises entire and attack large whales by tearing away their fleshy lips and tongues. When attacking large prey they work in packs, with all the unity and fierceness of so many wolves.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED WHERE DOCTORS FAILED.

Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer, After Years of Suffering, Found the Remedy They Sought in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Capreol, Ont., Feb. 1.—(Special)—Firm believers in Dodd's Kidney Pills are Mr. and Mrs. Adolphe Sawyer, of this place. They have their reasons and are quite willing to make them public.

"I was a complete wreck when I started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mr. Sawyer says. "I had suffered for ten years. I tried five doctors altogether. Some said it was rheumatism. Others called it lumbago, but none could give me any permanent relief. Dodd's Kidney Pills made a new man of me.

"My wife got the same good results from them. She also had been to several doctors. A specialist from Sault Ste. Marie advised her to stay in bed for month. But she tried Dodd's Kidney Pills instead with splendid results.

"Do you wonder that we both praise Dodd's Kidney Pills? No one can speak too highly of them."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are purely and simply a kidney remedy. If the disease is of the kidneys or from the kidneys they will cure it.

Aluminum in Guinana.

In the past year there has been considerable excitement in Dutch Guiana, due to the discovery of large deposits of bauxite on the Surinam river, some four hours' journey from Paramaribo. It is from this clay-like aluminum ferric hydroxid that aluminum is made, and the discovery of the rich fields of clay has stirred up many prospectors.

One company has taken possession of the hill deposits, but engineers hold that the clay is probably located at various depths. It can be easily transported, as several broad, navigable rivers run near this district, which will probably be developed rapidly. The government is very careful in issuing authorizations to prospect, and these rights are reserved for Netherlanders, Surinamers or companies established in the Netherlands or in Surinam.—New York "Sun."

Monster Coins.

It is understood that the largest gold coin in circulation is the gold "tcof" of Anam, the French colony in eastern Asia. It is a flat round piece, with £65 English money. The next size to this unwieldy coin is the Japanese "obang," which weighs more than two and a half ounces and is about equal to ten English sovereigns. —London Opinion.

SPOILED HIS SYSTEM.

He Thought It Couldn't Be Done, But He is Wiser Now.

I know man who wears his shirts in chronological order—that is, if he buys a new shirt he tags it with his initials, numbers it and places it at the bottom of the pile. And, no matter how much he likes it, he does not wear it until it comes out at the top of the pile. He went into wordy detail about the economy of his system, and he added that he arranged his socks and underwear in the same manner.

I told him that he would meet the woman of his dreams some fine day and that she would knock the spots out of his system. I told him that she would admire a particular shirt, caress its delicate stripes lovingly and ask why he didn't wear it oftener. And then he would send it to the laundry as soon as it was soiled and wear it as soon as it got back, and he would buy other shirts like it, and he would forget his system.

"Don't you believe it!" he said. "The person doesn't live who could upset my system!"

"But I met him a few days ago—for the first time in a year. He was hurrying to catch a car so I had only time to ask him how he was and how things were going. And he didn't have time to explain. He only shouted over his shoulder jubilantly, "I'm wearing 'em every which way!"

And I hadn't even heard he was married.

INSECT STRENGTH.

Many Misconceptions, Says a French Investigator.

At intervals there appear accounts setting forth the prodigious strength of insects. Their muscular force is usually compared with their size by stating, for example, that a flea can leap so many times its own length and that an ant can drag so many times its own weight. Then it is stated that man, if he were strong in the same proportion, could jump so many rods or lift so many tons. These comparisons, according to the French investigator, Leo Robida, are misleading, to say the least.

He states that it is interesting to consider, solely from a mechanical point of view, these comparisons between the muscular strength of man and that of insects. Strictly from this standpoint they are by no means extraordinary and are only one of the forms of what has been called "the conflict of squares and cubes." The law is well known—volumes decrease in more rapid ratios than surfaces.

The force that a muscle can exert depends on its section—that is, on a surface—although its capacity for doing work depends on its volume, as is logical. Here is the explanation of the astonishing strength of insects, as example, compare two muscles, that of a man and that of an insect, the latter 100 times shorter than the former. It is evident that the insect's muscle will be 1,000,000 times lighter than the man's, while it's section, and consequently the force it can exert, will be only 10,000 times less. The conclusion is that since a man can lift 65 pounds the insect will lift 10,000 times less, or 154 grains, and one gets the impressive spectacle of an insect lifting more than 100 times its weight. In fact, the smaller the insect is the more it will astonish us by an appearance of extraordinary strength.

But it is no longer the same if one examines the mechanical work effected. The muscle of the insect, supposed to be one one-hundredth of a man's in linear dimensions, furnishes, when it contracts, a force 10,000 times less than the human muscle exerted through a space 100 times smaller; the work produced will thus be 1,000,000 times smaller, which re-establishes the proportion between weight and strength.

Moreover, it seems just as with machines, where the smaller are proportionally weaker as if the insect's muscle, instead of surpassing man's infinitely, is notably inferior to it in quality. Take the flea's jump, for instance. By its muscular contraction it gives to its mass a movement capable of raising it twelve inches. Man can raise his own weight about five feet by leaping. For equal weight the human muscle thus furnishes five times more work than that of the flea in a single contraction, since the work is the product of the weight by the height to which it is raised.—Washington Star.

QUEBEC GIVES A MILLION DOLLARS

The grant of one million dollars to the Canadian Patriotic Fund for 1917 by the Quebec Legislature is a most cheering indication of the value placed on the work of the Fund by the Government of Sir Lomer Gouin, and may be taken as an evidence also of the growing realization in the province of what demands the war is making on our wealth in money. The Ontario Legislature is making a grant of the same size, and there is a tendency on the part of all the Provincial Governments to aid this meritorious work.

Quebec raised more money in 1916 than was needed to make provision for her own families, and the surplus was devoted to the Western Provinces, where enlistments were above the average. It is probable that a similar condition will arise in 1917.

Mother Eyes.

Could some famed scientists but analyze
The occult power that rests in Mother Eyes;
Could he equip each mortal with this sight
That looks through all the wrong and sees the right—

Perhaps the world would find that many a knave
Beneath his rascal's skin is true and brave,
And many a scoundrel, hated and reviled,
To this strange sight is but an errant child.

Oh, gentle reader, Mother Eyes that dimly scan
A vacillating wreck—and see a man,
If this be blindness, then your God is true,
For all your pain he is rewarding you.

HOW TO CURE STOMACH TROUBLE

The Common Cause is Lack of Blood, Therefore You Must Build Up the Blood.

There is the most intimate relation between the condition of the blood and the activity of the stomach. The blood depends upon the stomach for a large part of its nourishment; while the food enters the stomach and is assimilated by the blood needs plenty of pure well-oxidized blood. The muscles, glands and nerves of the stomach work only according to the quality of the blood.

The most common cause of indigestion is lack of rich, red blood. Not only does impure blood weaken the muscles of the stomach, but it lessens the product of the glands of the intestines and stomach, which furnish the digestive fluids. Nothing will more promptly cure indigestion than plenty of pure blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the safest and most certain blood-builder. A thorough trial of these pills gives a hearty appetite, perfect digestion, strength and health. Here is proof of the value of these pills in cases of indigestion. Mr. Daniel Dexter, Liverpool, N. S., says: "For several years I was a great sufferer from indigestion. I was greatly troubled with gas on the stomach, which caused disagreeable sensations. I was also frequently troubled with nausea and vomiting, which were very distressing. As a result of my trouble my appetite almost completely failed, and what I did eat caused me constant pain. I was continually doctoring but did not get any benefit, and had about made up my mind that I would suffer for life. One day a friend asked me why I did not try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and while I had not much hope of a cure I decided to do so. I had only taken a few boxes, however, when I found they were helping me. Very gladly, then, I continued the use of the pills, and in less than three months I was as well as I ever had been, able to eat a hearty meal and to feel that life was again worth living. I had also been troubled from time to time with attacks of rheumatism, and the use of the pills cured this as well as the indigestion. It is now over a year since I took the pills, and in that time I have had no return of the trouble."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, or may be had by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

UNION BANK ASSETS INCREASED 20% IN 1916

GROWTH IN ONE YEAR EXCEEDS EIGHTEEN MILLION DOLLARS—BANK ASSISTS FINANCING OF IMPERIAL MUNITION BUSINESS

The fifty-second annual statement of the Union Bank of Canada, covering the year ending November 30, 1916, shows a remarkable growth and strengthening of the Bank's position, and at the same time indicates large cash resources both in private and business accounts throughout the Dominion.

The Union Bank, with headquarters in Winnipeg and 200 branches in the West, as well as a splendid old established system of branches in the East, is in close touch with every part of Canada, and its surprising growth for the year reflects the financial recovery of both East and West, and the increasing savings of the people.

Interest-bearing deposits amount now to $60,144,240 against $53,046,304 a year ago, while deposits not bearing interest have reached $29,122,387, compared with $21,993,532 shown in the previous year's statement. The assets, which a year ago were $90,542,045, showed an increase of eighteen and a half millions, bringing them up to $109,010,228. This 20 per cent. advance is the more remarkable as it follows an increase of over nine millions, or 11 per cent., in 1915, making an increase for the two years of $27,500,000, or 32 per cent. From these figures it is clear that Canadians are saving as well as making money and that the Union Bank of Canada enjoys a large measure of their confidence.

Similar strengthening of the financial position of businesses generally, through the liquidation of bank indebtedness from cash profits has prevented much expansion of current loans and discounts in Canada, which stand practically the same as in the previous year. The new funds at the disposal of the Bank are invested chiefly in liquid assets and cash, of which the Bank holds $56,587,826, compared with $39,138,385 at the end of 1915. This increase of seventeen and a half millions follows an increase of nearly thirteen million dollars during the previous year and constitutes an extremely strong reserve, readily convertible into cash.

It is interesting to note that of this reserve $13,546,248 is invested in Dominion and Provincial Government Securities, Canadian Municipal Securities and British, Foreign and Colonial Public Securities other than Canadian, whereas a year ago the amount similarly invested was but little over one million dollars. By far the greater proportion of this sixteen million item consists of securities of the Imperial Government issued for the financing of munition business in Canada.

The note issue of the Bank has increased over a million dollars, to $8,815,117, with a corresponding increase in the War Tax on Bank Note Circulation to $56,000.

Profits for the year were about the same as last year, amounting to $651,183. After deducting the War Tax, $150,000 transferred to Contingent Account, $10,000 appropriated for the Pension Fund, $5,000 donated to the British Sailors' Relief Fund, and $456,000 for the usual 8 per cent. dividend and 1 per cent. bonus, the sum of $31,160, was carried forward to the credit of Profit and Loss Account. It is worthy of note that the Bank has maintained its dividend and bonus and met all charges for depreciation and contingencies throughout the war out of its annual profits and has now a larger profit balance than at the end of 1913. The immense increase in the scope of its business during these years, and the great strengthening of its position, holds out the prospect of greatly increased earnings upon the return of normal conditions.

BONAR LAW MAKES REPLY TO WILSON'S LATEST TALK

Says Allies Share U. S. President's Aims, and Are Working to Win Them.

No Neutral Has Made Protest Against All Hun Barbarities.

Bristol Cable.——Addressing a meeting to-night in connection with the war loan campaign, Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and member of the British War Council, made the following reply to President Wilson's speech to the United States Senate:

"The end of the war is peace. The Germans made us what they have called an offer of peace. It received from the Allied Governments the reply which is deserved—the only possible reply.

"Most of you have, however, I presume, read the speech by President Wilson, which appeared in yesterday's papers. It is a frank speech, and it is right that any member of one of the Allied Governments who refers to it should speak with equal frankness. It is impossible that he and we can look on it from the same point of view.

"The head of a great neutral nation, whatever his private views may be—and I know as little as any of you what they are—must adopt a neutral attitude. America is very far removed from the horrors of this war. We are in the midst of them. America is neutral, we are not neutral. We believe that the issue of this conflict is a question which is as old as time—the difference between right and wrong. We believe we know that this is a war of naked [illegible], that crimes which have accompanied the conduct of the war, which have been unknown in the world for centuries, are small in comparison with the initial crime of plunging the world into war by cold-blooded calculation, because those responsible thought it would pay.

NOT ALTOGETHER UTOPIAN.

"President Wilson's speech had this aim—to gain peace now and to secure peace for the future. That is our aim, and our only aim. He hopes to secure this by a league of peace, and he not only spoke in favor of such a league, but he is trying to induce the American Senate to take the steps necessary to give effect to it. It would not be right to regard this proposal as something altogether utopian.

"You know that almost up to our own day duelling continued, and just as the settling of private disputes by the sword has now become unthinkable, so, I think, we may hope that the time will come when all the nations of the world will play the part which Cromwell described as his life work—to act as constable and keep peace. That time will come, I hope.

"But this whole subject is not an abstract question for the future. It is a question of life and death now. In judging whether the result can be secured by his methods it is not possible for us to forget the past. For generations humane men, men of good will among all nations, have striven by the Hague convention, by peace conferences, and by all other means to make war impossible, or at least to mitigate [illegible]. By what means can these barriers built up against barbarism be made effective? They cannot be effective [illegible] the belligerents, if any of them choose to ignore them. It is only from neutral states that effective sanction can be given to them.

SWEPT ASIDE EVERY BARRIER.

"What happened? At the very outbreak of the war the Germans swept aside every one of these barriers. They tore up treaties which they had themselves solemnly signed, they strewed mines in the open sea; they committed every atrocity on sea and land against the Hague convention which they had themselves signed. They made war on women and children; they destroyed neutrals as ruthlessly as they did their enemies. They are at this moment driving the populations of conquered territories into slavery and, worse even than that, they are making some of the subject peoples take up arms against their own country.

"All this has been done, and no neutral power, indeed, has made any protest against it. We must then take other means to secure the future peace of the world.

"We have rejected the German offer to enter into negotiations, not from lust of conquest or desire for shining victories. We have rejected it, not from a spirit of vindictiveness or a desire for revenge, but because peace now would mean a peace not based on victory. It would be a peace which would leave the military machine unbroken, with the halo of success surrounding it. It would leave the control of that machine in the hands of the same men who for a generation prepared for war, who would make the same preparation again and who would choose their own time to plunge the world into the horrors which we are now enduring.

"Our aim is the same as President Wilson's. What he is longing for we are fighting for, our sons and brothers are risking their lives for, and we mean to secure it. The hearts of the people of this country are longing for peace; we are praying for peace, for a peace which will bring back to us in safety those who are fighting our battles, and a peace which will mean that those who will not come back have not laid down their lives in vain."

PRESIDENT'S MISCALCULATION.

Commenting editorially on Andrew Bonar Law's speech, the Daily Chronicle says:

"Mr. Bonar Law has made a prompt and pertinent reply to President Wilson's address and has indicated with great clearness the main differences between the President's viewpoint and our own.

"In the practical world we cannot safely shape our plans for the future without reference to the past and the present, and Mr. Bonar Law is justified in his reminder that for that past and the present the United States has a share of the responsibility. We are bound to ask ourselves what sort of value the concurrence of the United States in international agreements has been to their maintenance in the past and present, and the answer is that under President Wilson's own administration it has proved valueless.

"We still think that the President has made a miscalculation under this head. He has acted on the reckoning that if he stood so far outside the struggle as never to protest except against direct infringement of American interests, he would be able to intervene with greater acceptance at the end of the war. That might conceivably have happened if a drawn ending of the war were likely. But that being, in the nature of things, nearly impossible, his reckoning was an error which is bound to diminish and not increase the influence he might exercise over the final settlement."

HUNS BLUNDERED AGAINST HINDUS

Plots to Foment Trouble Were Dismal Failures.

Sanity of Great Indian Public the Cause.

Simla, India, Cable.——Correspondence of The Associated Press.——From a time early in the war right up to the present moment Germany has never ceased attempts to stir the Indian Empire to revolt, according to Sir Charles Cleveland, Director of Criminal Intelligence in this country, who made this statement to a correspondent of The Associated Press. Sir Charles characterized the plots as "clumsy, belated, too theoretical, and based on a misunderstanding of Indian character," and declared that the scheme failed chiefly because of "the sanity of the great Indian public, which has withheld its support."

Sir Charles is reputed to know more about those to whom the Secret Service naturally would be interested more than any other man in India. For years he has made a study of that class which favors the darkness of night for its comings and its goings, and now as head of the Secret Service, the government relies upon him to check untoward occurrences in any section before they have grown into a serious menace.

"There has been some trouble in India," said Sir Charles, "but it has fallen very far short both of the picture drawn in enemy publications and of the enemy's desire. The state of India all through the war seems to have exposed a very big miscalculation on the part of the Germans.

"It would be interesting to examine how far this miscalculation was due to a misunderstanding of normal Indian affairs and how far to a miscarriage of plans for causing trouble in India and among Indians outside India during the war. My own impression is that Germany thought India would need very little extraneous prompting and assistance to rise against the British if the latter were in serious embarrassment owing to a big continental war, and that therefore not very much attention was paid by the German government to instigation in India before the war. Where and how did the German government get that idea? Was it conveyed to them by secret unknown agents, or by their consular officers in India or by some over confident Indian extremist or by British panic mongers? It is difficult to say for certain, but I remember that some years ago an Indian extremist leader used the following words to me:

"'We shall certainly try to embarrass you actively in India if you have a war with a continental power other than Afghanistan; our feelings are firm on that point, unless, indeed, self-interest or some special reason dictates a passive attitude to some or all of us. But never again will you find such positive assistance as we gave you at the time of the Boer war.'

"My extremist friend went on to tell me that we were foolish to think we could count on the Indian army. At the time I thought my friend's attitude was pathetic in its self-delusion, and time has shown that I was right.

"After the war broke out the German Government showed a willingness to spend money lavishly on Indian trouble, but there was no sign of 'financing' of troublesome schemes or individuals before the war. In 1912 and 1914 a German viewing the situation in India with patriotic anti-British eyes would have observed the following phenomena: A rapprochement between a section of Indian Mohammedans and the Young Turk party in Europe; the anarchical revolutionary movement in Bengal with some ramifications in the north of India; a latent movement of extreme nationalism in the Bombay Presidency and some other places; an unrestrained 'Ghadr' movement among Indians in the United States and Canada, and a certain amount of Moslem dissatisfaction in the north of India and along the northwest frontier. I think it was beyond the power of any German to decide whether these phenomena were the signs of a deep and widespread unrest or merely local surface disturbances, and I feel sure that in order to interpret them the Germans consulted exiled and partisan Indians, who were out of touch with India as a whole, and who therefore magnified their own views and feelings and those of their friends and associates out of all reasonable proportion.

"For the first few months of the war the Germans waited for the Indian storm to come of itself, as they had been led to believe that it would come. To begin with, our enemies based extravagant hopes on Turkey's intervention, but the Indian Mohammedans, as a whole, took this with extraordinary calm and resignation. Then came the Ghadr invasion from the United States, Canada and the Far East, but that broke itself hopelessly on the good sense and feeling of the Punjab public, and on the resourceful administration of that province.

"Disappointed by these failures of the Indian trouble to arrive automatically, the Germans realized that they must attempt direct assistance, and turned their attention to the Bengal revolutionary party. After six months or so of the war the Germans had established a regular bureau of disaffected Indians in Germany itself, among them were included some leading members of most of the disturbing movements already mentioned. Under their advice grandiose schemes were evolved for the supply of arms, ammunition, money and even German soldiers and sailors to the revolutionaries in Bengal and to the disaffected Moslem fanatics in the north of India.

"The schemes all miscarried hopelessly; [illegible] has a way of getting intercepted by the wrong people; ships on secret German errands kept knocking up against the Allied warships, and last, but perhaps not least, most of the moves in the plots were promptly reported to us all along by our own agents. These plots are still continuing, but there is little sting in them, and I am afraid the Germans themselves do not believe in them very strongly.

"I should like to be able to say that the frustration of the plots has been due to the Indian Police and to the branch of that service under me, but I gladly admit that it has been chiefly due to the sanity of the great Indian public, which has withheld its support. Plots and conspiracies are very severely handicapped when the public environment is unsympathetic or hostile to the conspirator. At the moment we of the Secret Service are feeling very comfortable but professionally we are disappointed with the German plots for India. We had hoped to learn a great deal from their system and methods, but they seem to us to have been clumsy, belated, too theoretical, and based on a misunderstanding of Indian character. At the same time, I believe the British Empire owes a great debt to the Indian Police in all its branches for its unswerving loyalty and zeal during the great war."

ENEMY EXPECTS A GREAT DRIVE

Sees Both Sides Jockeying for the Start

To Come at First Favorable Opportunity.

Berlin Cable.——Heavy snowfalls followed by bitterly cold weather on all the battle fronts have helped rather than hindered the fighting. During the past 48 hours the weather man seemingly has been entirely impartial, for the cold snap which, in the northeast, has enabled the Russians to cross the swamps between Riga and Dvinsk and to attack the German positions, also has made it possible for the Germans in Roumania to approach Galatz which, ordinarily, is protected by swamps.

In the West intensely cold weather has been accompanied only partly by a clear atmosphere, enabling the fliers to resume their activity. Artillery duels have increased at frequent intervals all along the line from the coast to the Swiss border.

Exceptionally active patrolling by the Entente forces has not prevented the Germans from discovering that the French troops have withdrawn to a large extent from their old positions on the Somme front as far south as Peronne, and that they have been replaced by British troops presumably in order to give the French divisions an opportunity to rest in preparation for a gigantic test of strength which is expected by every one at the first favorable opportunity.

The impression gained from a visit to any part of the front is that both sides expect an unprecedented offensive before long, and that the present artillery and patrol activity to which the fighting now is limited is more or less a kind of jockeying for the start, to enable one opponent to gain the advantage by being the first to assume the offensive.

In the east the cold weather is holding up operations considerably, but is not preventing the Russians in eastern Carpathians from making desperate efforts to save themselves from being forced backward to such an extent that their positions on the upper Sereth River will be flanked and taken.

CALONNE RAID BY CANADIAN

Graphic Description of Very Successful Assault.

Very Heavy Losses Inflicted On Enemy.

British Army in the Field, Cable.——Full accounts of the raid by the Canadians on the German lines at Calonne on January 17th, serve to show that the raid, though soon over, gets much care from the staff officers and men who carry it out. Canadian lads were set learning the German language. They acquired only phrases which it was hoped the Germans would recognize as a signal to come out. Also another German phrase explaining if they stayed down they must expect the worst immediately. Our men hate the necessity of bombing the deep dugouts full of the scared enemy, but the time is short and bombing is necessary if the orders are not at once obeyed.

A modest Canadian officer said he called down one dugout six times. "I didn't want to bomb it," he said. "I knew there were a number down below. Every time I shouted, a voice replied in English, 'Yes.' At last, out came the German company commander, sergeant major and four others. He apologized for delaying, and said he had been burning the battalion orders; he only had just time though."

Three men were detailed to stay behind when the German wire was reached and cut paths. It happened our guns made a beautiful mess of that wire. Nevertheless, these three [illegible] short lengths of tape. [illegible] and the boys went over at eight o'clock in the morning. After an active walk of four minutes the first wave of raiders was in the first line and in 10 minutes the second line was reached. The affair moved with unaltering precision. The enemy's front line had been strengthened, and the assembly trenches manned with supports. Their losses were heavier in consequence. The judgments of the Canadian officers were formed on guesswork from aeroplane photographs, and what scouts may learn from prolonged watching at a distance. All proved right. Each Canadian consulting his watch on recognizing each particular German trench, and did his appointed work all the way over. A friendly snowstorm masked the homeward journey, which began one hour after the start. Said the German non-commissioned officer with sadness, "If you had only come the day before you would have captured the corps commander."

The prisoners surrendered readily. There were many Silesians. Two small and one large ammunition dump were blown up. Besides, the death roll inflicted was as high as 200, including, it is thought, a battalion commander. We took 100 prisoners, several machine guns, and a trench mortar. Our casualties were light.

BRITISH LABOR PARTY MEETING

Big Section Cheered Name of U. S. President.

Big Majority Supports Hon. Mr. Henderson.

Manchester Cable.——At the opening session of the annual meeting of the Labor party here to-day there was enthusiasm when George J. Wardle, labor member of the House and President of the party, mentioned President Wilson's name in connection with peace. The speaker was interrupted several times during his speech by cries from delegates of "What about Ireland?" and "What about Russia?"

"Recently," said Mr. Wardle in his speech, "there were put forward overtures for peace, but the Germans used the language of victors and assumed the role of dictators. Since then President Wilson——" (At this point many of the delegates rose and waved hats and handkerchiefs and cheered President Wilson.)

"We shall know better before the end of the conference what this means," continued Mr. Wardle. "We are fighting for the free development of the peoples. (Cries of 'What about [illegible]') [illegible] (A voice: "What about [illegible]") and until she does peace is impossible."

A small section of the socialists made an attack on Arthur Henderson, member of the War Council, and other Labor men for joining the Cabinet.

Philip Snowden, member of the House of Commons from Blackburn, said the Government had passed legislation [illegible] which was without parallel in legislative history.

Mr. Henderson said all he was concerned with was "the most expeditious way in which we can bring the war to an end."

The action of the Labor representatives in joining the Cabinet was supported by an overwhelming majority.

There were three factors which combined to make the meeting of intense interest throughout Britain. First, the party was expected to go on record as to the peace propaganda. Secondly, it was to decide whether to grant support to its Parliamentary leaders in joining the Lloyd-George Government. Thirdly, the party was scheduled to make sweeping announcements on various post war problems.

Great Britain expects Labor, in its official party, to favor a fight to a finish and to defeat by a large majority the plans of any pacifist who may be backing the resolutions urging negotiations.

470 SHIPS SUNK BY HUN SUBS. WITHIN THE LAST NINETY DAYS

Germany's U-Boats Multiply and Grow Increasingly Powerful.

London Cable.——The Daily News gives special prominence to an article by its naval correspondent, who calls attention to the gravity of German submarine activity. The writer says he fears the real seriousness of the German campaign against merchant shipping is not realized by a majority of the British people, and adds:

"The daily record of ships sent to the bottom has become so regular a feature in the newspapers that no particular notice is taken of it unless some unusual atrocity attends the incident."

The correspondent recalls that when Germany's submarine blockade began in February, 1915, the British Admiralty issued weekly statements of losses, but says that after a period of thirty-five weeks this was discontinued. During that period the weekly average loss was five vessels, but during the past three months the rate of losses has nearly trebled. The writer gives statistics showing that during ninety days 470 ships were sunk, of which 187 were British. He contends that although neutral boats sunk considerably outnumbered the British, the loss of Great Britain was only slightly less than if they had been British ships, because virtually in every case the cargo was either British or destined for Great Britain.

Remarking that the submarine menace has become firmly rooted, the writer dwells on the rapid multiplication of U-boats, their striking development in power, and their cruising radius, which, he says, has completely changed the problems since the underwater boats started operations.

"We are confronted with the most serious menace that ever threatened us," the correspondent says, and he contends that it is imperative for the people to cut down their consumption of tobacco and other imported luxuries, and live in homelier fashion, and thus free tonnage for essentials. He adds that the question will be raised in the House of Commons when Parliament meets.

BULGARS HAD TO ABANDON NORTH SIDE OF DANUBE SOUTH ESTUARY

Berlin Admits That New Move in Roumania Was Given Up.

Berlin Cable via Sayville.——The War Office report to-day reads:

"Western front: The weather was frosty and exceptionally bright yesterday. Over most of the front the fighting was moderately active. Aviators took advantage of favorable conditions for observation. In the course of numerous aerial engagements and as a result of our defensive fire the enemy lost six airplanes.

"Eastern front: Front of Prince Leopold: On both sides of the River Aa, and south of Riga, engagements developed which took a course favorable to us.

"Roumanian front: Front of Archduke Joseph: During the severe cold prevailing there have been only local lively artillery and advance guard engagements.

"Army group of Field Marshal von Mackensen: North bank of the southern arm north of Tultcha has again been abandoned."

The statement reports the situation on the Macedonian front unchanged.

BLUE OUTLOOK FOR HAMBURG

Food Crisis Hits Great German City Terribly.

Hunger is Doing Its Work On the Army.

Milan Cable.——An Italian gentleman who lived for 15 years in Hamburg, has arrived in Milan. When he left Hamburg a week ago, he states the food crisis had become an obsession, and all excepting the wealthy classes were feeling the pinch of hunger. So far as Hamburg is concerned, he states, the English blockade has already won the war. Butter, coffee, sugar and fats cannot be had at any price. Bread is absolutely unpalatable, and is growing scarce. One egg a week is permitted. The principal food now is vegetable soup. Even potatoes are scarce. Marmalade and jam had helped until recently, when the Government ordered the requisition of all fruits fresh preserved for the army. Many food riots have taken place in Hamburg, especially at Christmas, when the shops offering fowls, game and geese at £5 were everywhere rifled. The police were unable to do anything. He states that every sort and condition of man is now accepted for the army. The last straw was the disillusion of the peace proposals. The city, which had been bellicose and hopeful, sunk into grim melancholy, which was not broken when he left. He adds, as one who watched the change during 30 months of the war, maintain that there is no comparison between the population to-day and that of three months ago. Hunger is doing it."

RUSS DESTROYED BULGAR FORCE

Petrograd Cable, via London.——A Bulgarian detachment crossing a branch of the Danube opposite Tultcha, was attacked by Russian troops and destroyed, the War Office announced today. Prisoners to the number of 222 and four machine guns were taken. The statement reads:

"Roumanian front: On the Danube front scouting reconnaissances and infantry firing are proceeding.

"On the Danube, opposite Tultcha, the Bulgarians, about a battalion strong, taking advantage of the fog, crossed the Georgiev branch in the morning. Our detachments by a nocturnal surprise attack destroyed without opening fire the detachment which was crossing, taking prisoner five officers and 222 men and capturing four machine guns. Our detachments lost one officer and 11 men in wounded, and one man killed."

This is the force which the German War Office to-day announced had recrossed the southern estuary of the Danube, giving up the ground they had taken.

"Remember," said the man who takes life seriously, "that riches have wings." "Well," replied Mr. Dustin Stax, "the fact that a fried chicken has wings doesn't prevent me from

FRENCH TROOPS IN GOOD RAIDS

Several Successful Attacks Along Western Front.

British Naval Fliers Bomb Hun Steel Works.

Paris Cable says——French troops made several successful raids last night near Chilly, south of the Somme, and in the Woevre district, the War Office announces. Patrols were unusually active in the Seille region, near the eastern end of the front.

The announcement follows:

"Last night we carried out several surprise attacks south of Chilly, on the Somme, in which we were successful, in the Woevre district, in the vicinity of Regneville, and in the Seille district. there has been considerable activity on the part of our patrols. The night passed quietly on the remainder of the front.

"Yesterday Lieut. Guynemer brought down his twenty-sixth German airplane, which fell in flames near [illegible], in the Verdun region. Two other machines also were brought to earth, one near Samogneux, and the other in Spincourt forest.

"It has been confirmed that on Jan. 22 a German airplane, damaged by the fire of our special airplane guns, crashed to the ground at a point north of Louvemont. During the same day sixteen airplanes of the British naval aviation forces bombarded the blast furnaces of Burbach, in the valley of the Saar, which apparently suffered considerable damage.

"One of our airplanes during the night of Jan. 23-24 threw down projectiles upon the railroad station at Dun-Sur-Meuse. The northern part of the building was struck."

ALLY SOLDIERS ANSWER WILSON

Paris Cable.——President Wilson's note to the belligerents inviting them to state their war aims has been discussed extensively by soldiers at the front, the Excelsior says. At one point near the junction of the French and British lines, at a place in the Argonne, and at a point in Alsace, according to this newspaper, soldiers decided to send letters to President Wilson, each signed by 300 of them, thanking him for his generous intervention in favor of peace, and inviting him to "dream no longer of the chimera of peace until victory is gained."

DEUTSCHLAND HAD NICKEL.

London, Cable.——The Foreign [illegible] informs the Canadian Associated Press to-day that on her first voyage the Deutschland carried one small cargo, not necessarily Canadian nickel. This got through owing to a breach of faith by an American firm. No Canadian firm is involved in this breach, and steps have been taken which ensure against repetition.

"His profits are all on paper." "Why, I thought he was a shrewd investor." "He is; he bought stock in a paper mill with timber rights a couple of years ago."—Buffalo Express.

Fine Beef

We purchased Monday the finest beef ever brought to Port Elgin. It cost $109. Leave your order. I do not believe in letting the best go to Toronto. I want my customers to get some of the good things. L. Hamilton.

The coming year is going to be marked by high prices for all farm produce. It will be in your interest to watch the markets closely. The Farmer's Sun, Toronto, as a farm market paper has no equal. It has saved its readers many dollars by keeping them posted as to the trend of prices. There never was a time when this information was of such value to the farmers of the Province as now. Those who read The Sun regularly find it a business proposition that means money to them. Your subscription for The Sun can be left at this office.

BURCOYNE AND DISTRICT

Roads have been so full lately that rural mail carriers were unable to make the round trip on several occasions. If any government servant earns his pay it is the rural mail carrier, especially when it is away after dark before he gets within miles of home and roads at most impassable.

The afternoon being very stormy few were able to attend the church annual meeting, Thursday. The women's Patriotic League were to meet the same day but there were no ladies out. However, it was decided to proceed with the church business, Rev. W. J. Watt presided. Reports from the various organizations showed the year had been fully as successful as any previous year. 10 had been added to the church membership during the year. There were 3 removals, leaving a gain of 7.

The Sunday school attendance was 37 and the money receipts $104. $10 was given to missions and an amount towards replenishing the library.

The young people's society had attendance of 16 and gave $12 to missions. There was an increased membership in the Women's Missionary Society. $78 in cash and $17 worth of clothing had been contributed during the year.

The church accounts showed, that although no effort had been made to raise special funds the yearly payment had been made on the shed, another payment of $100 will clear off the debt. There was also considerable extra outlay in reshingling the old sheds and other repairs. Mission funds were larger than on any previous year, being $474 for church missions, $55 for Dominion Alliance, and $54 for Bible Society. The total receipts for all purposes, outside of patriotic funds, amounted to over $1900. It was also learned that the new subscription list for 1917 was considerably larger than the old list. In the election of officers Messrs. Robt. Cunningham and Jas. Esplen were appointed in place of Messrs. A. Gammie and John Stanbie, the retiring managers. Hearty expressions were given in regard to the happy progress in all branches of the church's work under the leadership of their esteemed pastor, Rev. W. J. Watt.

Mr. Lester Dick is rather ill again with his former trouble. He had just returned home from visiting distant friends.

Mr. Alex McCannel's son Archie, has recovered from an attack of pneumonia.

Mr. Robt Stewart is able to be about again though still feeling rather sore at times.

The Patriotic League have had to postpone their meeting on three successive occasions on account of stormy weather.

The Sunday School officials have made a selection of new books for the library and expect to have them ready for circulation in a few weeks.

The Presbyterian congregation decided at their annual meeting, to have anniversary services in the spring, consequently there will be no soiree this winter again.

Mr. Cunningham, Sr., was visiting friends at Walkerton last week.

THE CARNIVAL

The social event of the season was the carnival last night. The Girl's club scored a great success. The rink was packed with spectators, while the ice was almost crowded with those in costume. There was every conceivable make-up, and the merry skaters and maskers were good to watch, by those who did not skate, and of course the carnival was much enjoyed by the maskers.

A great array of fine prizes brought many competitors before the judges who had a hard time to decide. Everybody had a good time, while the club made a goodly sum, for the prizes were donated, as was also some cash.

The rink was nicely decorated with flags and bunting, and the whole scene was a very pretty one.

The judges were Messrs C. Currier, R. C. Crawford and J. W. Pattison. Their task was hard, but their awards were well made.

There were Charley Chaplins, merry widows, milkmaids, clowns, Scotch, Irish and Indian characters, knights, colored folk, dudes, devils, tramps, angels, and a bride and groom, aged men and women, and effective patriotic costumes.

W. Bray with his outfit of Sherwin-Williams paint was quite a feature.

The officers who had charge of the big success are: President, Chrissie Cassidy; L. Thornburn, Nellie Ayle, Winnie George and L. Wells. The President informs The Times the proceeds amounted to $110.

Some citizens gave cash in lieu of prizes, and this cash amount was $25, a total of $135 on the event. The expense is merely that of rink, advertising and printing about $11. The biggest financial success held here in a long time.

Winners please call at Busby's Jewelry store for your prizes.

Promoted On Battlefield

Pte. W. Northgrave son of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Northgrave, of Port Elgin, has been promoted to be lieutenant.

The promotion was made by the chief officer for bravery, and for his splendid example before the troops.

It is not often that a private rises to an officer's position in one jump. Along with the promotion goes $250 for uniform and equipment. Many friends here rejoice at the valor of one of the old town boys.

Lieut. Northgrave is with a machine gun section.

This makes the second Port Elgin man with a machine gun to win honor, Corp. Art Christian receiving the Military Medal for bravery.

Everything Ready For the Banquet

Tickets have been taken up rapidly by the citizens for the banquet to Warden Izzard. As announced last week, the banquet was to be open to town people up to Tuesday noon. After that any seats available would go to anyone desirous of attending.

As there are still a number of places available, those will be disposed of to anyone. The affair begins at 9 p. m. sharp, at the Arlington hotel on Friday night.

87--and Still Going

Dr. Robert McClure strode into The Times office last Wednesday afternoon and remarked "To-day is my 87th birthday, and I'm still sober."

Many friends are glad to see the venerable doctor in such good health and able to go about sprightly.

It is true the doctor is still sober, and there can be no danger of him going astray now. For, if he has gone through all those years when the booze flowed freely, he can hardly fall now that we have prohibition. But jokes aside, The Times joins with hosts of friends in extending the "glad hand" to Robert McClure, Irish to the core.

Interesting School Statistics Provided by Principal Shaw

Principal Shaw has provided Times with some interesting figures concerning the public school which will be appreciated by our readers.

For 1916 the school was open for 187 days, an epidemic of measles coming along last March which closed it for 10 days.

The average attendance for the year was:

January	201
February	192
March	180
April	164
May	200
June	213
September	206
October	202
November	198
December	196

The above shows, along with the year 1915, two of the largest attendances in the history of our school. It is noted that the month of April was low because of measles.

The average attendance by years is:

1916	196
1915	208
1914	191
1913	172
1912	163

The enrollment for 1917 by departments is: I—56; II—42; III—39; IV—39; V—49, or a total enrollment of 206.

The principal reports the classes in all departments well up in their work, and his staff working hard for the June exams. Parents and townspeople generally are always welcome to the school.

News in General

Mr. Theo. Holtz is very seriously ill.

The Lion's Head News has ceased publication.

Mrs. Andrew Crawford, con. 5 Arran Tp., died last week aged 80 years.

Judge and Mrs. Klein are spending the winter at Miami, Florida.

The June session of the County Council will be in Chesley on the 13th.

Bruce County papers generally eulogize Reeve Izzard on his election as Warden.

Southampton began its campaign for the Patriotic Fund on Monday and continues to the 10th.

The British authorities announce that after February 1st, there will be no use sending parcels of foodstuffs to prisoners in Germany.

Reeve Christie of Saugeen and Reeve Johnson of Bruce were appointed delegates to attend the good roads Convention at Toronto by the County Council.

Neil A. McCannel of Regina in renewing The Times, says he is having a good time curling at Moosejaw, at the big bonspiel. He wishes to be remembered to his old friends here.

There was a great crowd at D. H. Chappel's sale on Thursday. The list was a large one, and good prices were realized, sheep going especially well. D. C. Cavin was auctioneer.

North Bruce Conservatives will meet in March to select a candidate to oppose Wm. MacDonald, M. P. P. Dr. Foster of Wiarton, H. A. Vandusen of Tara, Reeve Brown of Chesley are mentioned.

Bigger than ever are the receipts for the S. S. No. 5 box social. Instead of $160 the proceeds mounted to $170. In the program last week "Sandy" Brunton's name was inadvertently omitted. Of course, "Sandy" didn't mind, but we hear he sang so well.

Noah Haug of Browning, Sask, says: "Find enclosed order for $1.50 for Times. We look for it every week. It's like a letter from home. We are having a fine winter, about nine inches of snow. I met Charlie Sang on the train when I was going to Lethbridge, to see my sister, Mrs R. F. Sang and family. I had a real nice visit with Charlie. Best wishes to all the old friends."

Death came suddenly to Mr. James McLaren at Owen Sound last Monday January 29th. He was in his 74th year. Deceased was for many years a well known resident of Southampton. Interment took place in Southampton cemetery on Wednesday last. Besides his widow he leaves five children:—David and Gordon, Mrs. R. E. Smith, Port Elgin; Mrs. W. Field and Mamie of Owen Sound. A brother, Mr. Geo. W. McLaren lives at Eldred, Sask.—Beacon.

The elections for Chief and Council at the Saugeen Indian Reserve took place last Saturday, and the result was that all the members of the old Council with one exception were turned out. Jesse Root was elected Chief over Tom Solomon Mandowonb, who has been Chief for many years by a majority of one. Andrew Ritchie was re-elected to the Council, and the new members are James John, Hiram Abyabin and Sol. E. James. The new council will hold office for three years.—Beacon.

The Wiarton Echo says:—If something does not develop very soon the plant of the Crown Portland Cement Co. will be scrapped. This was what the representatives of the Toronto Trust Co. told The Echo last week. He says the Trust Company is not a charitable institution, that it has carried this plant for a long time, has never received a dollar, and has paid out a good many, the taxes alone amounted to $800 per year and the Trust Co. does not intend to get stung, so unless some one buys it the whole institution will be scrapped. The plant cost at one time and another about one million dollars, and a Wiarton junk dealer says it is worth $3000. Will this be the end of the cement plant?

The Old Bear Sees His Shadow

On Friday noon the old bear came out from his warm nest, looked about, sniffed a bit of the frost and snow, saw a great big shadow of himself and trotted back to his snug old nest where he will stay for six weeks, while mankind shivers. No sooner had he got back to his resting place after seeing his shadow when one of the fiercest snowstorms, which had been brewing, broke over this district, which continued in fury all night, blocking roads, railway traffic and things generally.

On Friday night no train came up this line, and not until Saturday morning at 8 o'clock did it manage to get here.

The morning train did not leave Southampton. The roads in the country were blocked with drifts

The Grand Trunk managed to get one train through Saturday and one Sunday. On Monday there was one train out and one in.

ONE OF THE 160TH MEN

PTE. AMBROSE HILL

The above is a potrait of Pte. Ambrose Hill, one of the sturdy chaps who went from Port Elgin with the 160th. He enlisted early last year and trained here and in London. Ambrose is 39 years of age and has a wife and family of two boys and two girls.

Principal Shaw Gets Appointment

Principal Shaw, of the public school, has received the appointment to become principal of the Barker street school at Niagara Falls at a salary, to begin with, of $1300 per year.

Mr. Shaw has resigned to the Port Elgin school board, he to leave first of March.

The principal was receiving $850 here, so the increase of $450 will come very acceptable.

Mr. Shaw deserves this promotion. He has proven a most capable head, and has built up a proficient system. That fact of salary has not always been his concern otherwise Port Elgin could not have kept him the past four years.

Principal Shaw is a public-spirited gentleman. He assisted in every public cause. In church and Sunday school he was active and in the literary and athletic organizations of the young people he was always willing to help. In fact in anything for the cause of his pupils, his church, or his town, the citizens could always count on his assistance.

Chairman Mitchell called a meeting of his board Monday noon, and while regretting extremely Principal Shaw's removal, the board were proud that the position offered to their principal was important and the salary much larger. Under the circumstances the resignation was accepted, and a teacher is being advertised for.

Mrs. Scanlan has returned from Toronto.

Lawrence Schrank is improving slowly.

Freight is not moving, and stock was not shipped Tuesday.

20 per cent off in war time ought to attract buyers to B. Hilker's.

TOWN TOPICS

Well, February came in like a donkey, and it's kicking ever since.

Miss Sadie Martin is home after an extended visit in Cincinnati.

Mr. Lintonschmidt, of Mildmay, visited a few days with friends here.

Mr. Robert Strong is very seriously ill.

Bad roads held up Times correspondence from our rural reporters.

Cecil McMurray was home on last leave this week.

Arthur Curtis was home from Galt over Sunday.

Col. Hugh Clark is to get $6000 a year as secretary for internal affairs.

School reports will appear next week, also interesting letters from the front.

Mrs. Duncan Currie, who has been on the sick list, is improving.

Thos. Rankin was in Paisley on Monday.

The Coming Events and Buyers' Guide columns are interesting this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Holtz returned this week to their home in Sweetgrass, Mont. after visiting relatives here.

Although the roads were bad and the storm still raging on Sunday, there were fair congregations at the churches.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Theaker, of Webb, Sask., are visiting the former's sister, Mrs. W. A. Mitchell, of Lakeview Farm.

Lt Col. Hugh Clark, secretary of internal affairs, and his family, have taken up their permanent residence in Ottawa.

Mr. Jos. Thomson sang very acceptably in the Presbyterian church Sunday night, the solo "Remember Me, O Mighty One".

The Times prints ladies' and misses' calling cards. We have neat type, and also the small envelopes to match the cards.

The county council has made a grant of $200 to repair the road opposite the Indian Reserve, between Arran and Amabel. This is good news.

Mr. Hugh McLaren is one of the County Auditors, and Mr. H. H. Stevens, High School trustee. These were recommended by Port Elgin council and approved by the county council.

Some good logs continue to be brought into town. Ten years ago it was said the logging was done in these parts, but if one took a look at the yard of the Stevens Hepner Co. one would not think so.

Mr. M. Krauth has purchased Mr. Burgess' residence, and takes possession in March. Mr. Krauth is one of the men who has faith in his town, and does considerable buying and selling of real estate.

The people of town and country will be glad to have an opportunity of seeing the play "Punkin Ridge", to be given here. Tuesday Feb'y 13th in the town hall. The young people of Saugeen do some splendid acting in this play, and when given in the school could not accommodate all who wanted to see it.

Sympathy will be extended to Mr. and Mrs P. J. Collins in the death of their infant daughter Bernice, who died on Thursday night. The little one was sick only a week, and died from the effects of pneumonia. The funeral was held on Saturday to Port Elgin cemetery Rev. Dr. Scanlan officiating.

The third bereavement in the family of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McCulloch was announced on Monday when Mrs McCullough received the sad news of the death of her brother at Duluth. The funeral will be under Masonic auspices at Kincardine Thursday, at 2 p.m.

That old chestnut is still being worked off in some quarters that soldiers had to buy Red Cross socks. President Mrs. R. M Lowry wrote to President Marshall at Toronto, who, in a letter, says the report to be a deliberate lie and usually circulated by German sympathizers. He also says he would like to see some of the letters reported as having been sent by soldiers from the front. Mr. Marshall also points out that there is still a prize of $100 open to anyone who can show where the Red Cross ever sold a pair of socks.

W. H. Baker was charged with assaulting Mr. Arza Lymburner at the residence of Mrs. Baker, mother of the defendant, last night, and with doing grievous bodily harm. He appeared in the police court this morning and was remanded under $1000.00 bail provided by his solicitor Mr. C. S. Cameron. Baker is an American soldier and his furlough was up on Jan. 5th, but he is still here. His uniform is at his home and he is in civilian clothes. The assault is believed to be an old sore and was of a very severe nature. Mr. Lymburner was under the care of two doctors last night and was not able to appear against Baker this morning.—Owen Sound Sun.

DUNBLANE

Mr. and Mrs. Deight Potter entertained their friends one night last week, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Underwood, of Swift Current.

The Port Elgin hockey team is pie for our players.

E. Grant is suffering from a sprained ankle.

Miss J. J. Allan will be in Port Elgin Saturday, February 10th. One day only at Arlington hotel.

Keeping the Home Fires Burning

Just as the big storm began on Friday two cars of coal arrived at the station here.

Now don't get excited and rush off to Gib. McLaren, expecting to get several tons. It can't be got for love or money.

On Friday Josh Bell did heroic work for his firm by delivering five tons of coal in 500 lb. lots, just arriving in nick of time at many houses where the coal was just done.

McLaren's deserve credit for the manner in which they have handled the coal situation. Not only have they been able to see everyone through a very critical time, but they have also helped out the school authorities at Southampton. The storm will hold things up for another delay in the coal problem.

Scarcely any wood is coming to town, although the price is high.

The situation is critical. Gib. McLaren had a phone message from Buffalo, Tuesday offering no hope for more coal for some time. Mr. McLaren asks all those who have more than will see them through to notify him, and he will have it taken out, weighed and paid for.

Mr. Heller received one of the cars, being one of an order from away back last fall.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON VI.

February 11, 1917.—Jesus and the Woman of Samaria—John 4: 1-29

Commentary—I. On the way to Galilee (vs. 1-6). 1-4. The reason given for the Lord's departure from Judea is that the Pharisees heard that more disciples were being baptized through the ministry of Jesus than through that of John the Baptist. They had been displeased with John's ministry, and they would be more displeased with that of Jesus, because of its greater effectiveness; consequently their opposition would be correspondingly greater. Jesus proceeded to take himself beyond their jurisdiction. He was finishing his first Judean ministry and the first year of his public labors. His route lay northward and he must go through Samaria, unless he chose to go eastward across the Jordan, as many Jews were accustomed to do to avoid the Samaritans, with whom they had no dealings. 5. Samaria—The name given to the region lying between Judea and Galilee. Sychar—A town between Mount Ebal and Mount Gerizim, forty miles north of Jerusalem on the direct route from Jerusalem to Nazareth. The more ancient name of the place was Shechem and the modern name is Nablus. Jacob gave to his son Joseph—This parcel of ground had an interesting history. Jacob bought it of Hamor and gave it to Joseph, and the bones of Joseph were buried there, after having been brought up from Egypt by the children of Israel on their journey from the land of their enslavement to their own Canaan.

6. Jacob's well was there—It was probably called Jacob's well from its being in the region of the "parcel of ground" just mentioned. There is still a well there and there is no reason to doubt its being the one by which the Saviour sat. It is now seventy-five feet deep, but was formerly much deeper, as it had been partially filled with rubbish. The well is nine feet in diameter and hewn out of the solid rock, the wall being regular and smooth. The place is now owned by the Greek church and is covered by a chapel. Priests are in attendance who let down a small bucket by means of a windlass and rope and draw water for visitors. Being wearied with his journey—It was noon, and Jesus with his disciples had probably been walking since early morning. Jesus rested there while his disciples were gone to the town to buy food (v. 8). His weariness declares to us the truth that He was human as well as divine. He got not only weary, but he also became hungry and thirsty. Sat thus on the well—Under the circumstances of his weariness and of the absence of his disciples, he sat resting on or by the low stone curb of the well.

II. The water of life (vs. 7-15.) 7. There cometh a woman of Samaria—The task of carrying water in the East rests largely upon the women. The usual time for drawing water was in the early morning or in the evening. At noon there would be few coming and going, hence the woman was alone there to receive the instruction of Jesus. This woman lived in one of the villages close by, undoubtedly Sychar, in the district called Samaria. She was a Samaritan and not a Jew. Give me to drink—Jesus was thirsty and he made this request because she had the utensils necessary for drawing water from the deep (v. 11) well. The request would very naturally open the way for the marvelous discourse on the living water, which he delivered to this one woman. 8. Unto the city. The present city Nablus, is a mile and a half from the well. The ancient Sychar may have extended much further to the east. Meat—Articles of food.

9. How is it that thou, being a Jew, etc.—The Jews claimed for themselves to be God's peculiar people and considered all others as of small value. They had Jerusalem and the temple and they accepted the law and the prophets including the Old Testament writings as their sacred scriptures. The Samaritans held that Mount Gerizim was their religious centre and they held the writings of Moses to be the only inspired scriptures. The Samaritans retain their identity still, but number less than two hundred persons. They intermarry with none outside their own people. They are poor and ignorant, but are now being aided educationally by Christians in America. They sacredly guard a copy of the Pentateuch, which they claim was made by a grandson or a great-grandson of Aaron, but this claim can scarcely be credited. The Samaritans are still objects of contempt to the Jews. 10. If thou knewest the gift of God—Jesus does not at once declare to the woman of Samaria his Messiahship, but gradually prepares her mind for the reception of this great truth. He would have given thee living water—She had as yet no idea of the nature and office of the traveler who was resting by the well, and she did not grasp the thought that Jesus was speaking of the salvation of the soul under the figure of water. 11. Whence ... that living water—The woman's mind was on the well and the water it contained. The speaker had nothing with which to draw water and she did not apprehend the force of his statement, yet she began to suspect that there was a hidden meaning in his words. 12. Art thou greater than our father Jacob—The Samaritans claim to be descendants of Jacob through Joseph, but they were a mixed race, a few Israelites being joined with idolators after the activity of Israel (2 Kings 17: 22-41.) The woman considered that the offer of Jesus was folly, for he could not possibly furnish a better well or better water than could Jacob. Gave us the well—The Samaritans had a tradition, which was probably without foundation, that Jacob dug the well. Drank thereof himself—To her there could be no better proof of the excellence of the water than that Jacob and his household and his cattle drank of it.

13. Shall thirst again—One needs to drink water often or he will suffer from thirst. This is especially true in a warm climate. The woman understood that statement very well. 14. Shall never thirst—A strong and striking contrast is drawn between the water of Jacob's well and the water Jesus offered his hearer. A well of water springing up—This is a reason why thirst shall not recur. The living water is from a fountain implanted in the soul, fed by the fountain of all life, grace and goodness, and the soul's desires are fully and constantly met. 15. Even then the woman of Samaria did not comprehend the deep meaning of the words of Jesus.

III. True worship (vs. 16-24). 16-19. The request of Jesus that the woman call her husband, brought forth from her a partial statement of her guilt, which led to an acknowledgment on her part of the prophetic power of Jesus. 20-22. She was inclined to uphold her religion as against that of the Jews, and brought up the question of the proper place for worship, but Jesus showed her that, with the coming of the new kingdom, places for worship would not count. Wherever there was a heart to love and adore God, there would be a place to offer acceptable worship. 24. God is a Spirit—In his very nature God is absolutely spirit. There is nothing material about him; and that which comes to him from us as acceptable worship must come from the spiritual nature. "A pure, a holy, a spiritual worship, therefore, is such as he seeks, the offering of the soul rather than the formal offering of the body, the homage of the heart rather than that of the lips."—Barnes.

IV. Jesus the Messiah (vs. 25-29). 25. I know that Messiah cometh—The Samaritans found the promise of the Messiah in the writings of Moses. They now expect him to come within the present century. He will tell us all things—Jesus had told her some things, and she was inclined to believe them, but she was not quite ready to declare her faith in him as the Christ. 26. I ... am he—Jesus revealed to the woman of Samaria some of the deepest truths of the kingdom. This was his first public declaration of his Messiahship. 27-29. At this point the disciples returned and the woman, wondering and trustful, went to tell her friends what she had heard.

QUESTIONS.—What ministry had Jesus just finished? What reason had he for going to Galilee? Where did Jesus stop to rest on his journey? What was the subject of Christ's discourse to the woman? Who were the Samaritans? What did Jesus say about worship? What great announcement did Jesus make to the woman?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic—A spiritual awakening.

I. Conviction for sin.

II. A Redeemer accepted.

I. Conviction for sin. The prudence of the Master at the first sign of hostility was evidenced in his retirement from Judea. To the eye of man Jesus appeared to be fleeing from persecution. To the eye of God the visit to Samaria was a part of a plan by which the glory of the divine government was to be revealed. To the eye of faith it offers an illustration in which the purpose of God was fulfilled. Jesus sought to remove the prejudices of his disciples by personal contact with the despised Samaritans. He offered to the Samaritan the privileges of his kingdom. He must needs pass through the abode of fallen humanity on his way to the throne of his kingdom. His own sovereign love laid the necessity upon himself. The providence of God brought the woman to Jacob's well. Events apparently trivial and unimportant changed her whole future. Jesus suited his method to individual character and circumstances. He began conversation by asking a favor of the women, thus putting himself under obligation, that he might speak to her one of the most sublime discourses of his ministry. The desire to bless was strong, constant and spontaneous with Jesus. He had no national animosity, no sectarian bigotry, no self-righteous loathing as the Jews had. There is a contrast here between the narrowness of religious prejudice and the generosity of Christian grace. The utterance of the woman's natural surprise gave Jesus the opportunity to teach her great spiritual truths. He made no mention of enmity between the races. He would not enter upon the old controversy which she began. He would not stir anger in the soul he was seeking to save. She had seemingly set herself in antagonism against him, but Jesus answered her by putting his power of supply over against her need. In a way he accepted her challenge, though very differently from what she expected. He did not disguise himself, but boldly announced the majesty of his nature and the glory of his work. Tenderly, gently and with compassion Jesus charged her with ignorance and brought home to her the sad fact that she had never truly worshipped. She had no belief that she had to do with the eternal, loving God or that he desired to communicate to her deep and lasting blessedness. She was ignorant of the Messiah. She saw the Jew, but not the Son of God; the weary man, but not the rest for weary souls; the thirsty traveller, but not one who could quench her thirst. She saw one who had sent for food, not one whose meat and drink was to do his Father's will. He touched her conscience and pointed out her sin. He told her the exact state of her case and drew her to admit it. A tender solicitude unlocked her heart and encouraged confession.

II. A Redeemer accepted. In her attempt at evasion the woman had not been able to shake off her conviction that she stood before the Supreme Being. The crisis of her life had come. The command of Jesus to her to go and call her husband was the first stroke to break up her calm exterior and reveal the life beneath. Jesus required a complete surrender of the old life in order that he might confer life eternal. His object was to bring the woman to seek salvation through him, as the fulfilment of hopes as old as the race. Upon his knowledge of her secret life she based her belief in Jesus as the Messiah, she put it into her proclamation to her neighbors. Jesus here reached the community through an individual first educated to the truth and the knowledge of the truth. The woman came to Jacob's well a prejudiced Samaritan, and departed a happy believing Christian. She came a sinner, and departed with full faith in Jesus. She came absorbed in the temporalities of life, and departed engrossed with eternal solemnities. The Saviour's mercy was remarkable. His wisdom was displayed in his dealing with a sinful soul. His patience was perfect in bearing with her ignorance until she was taught. His power was manifest in her conversion. Short as the interview was, Jesus effectually gained her heart, and through her published the glad tidings of salvation to others.

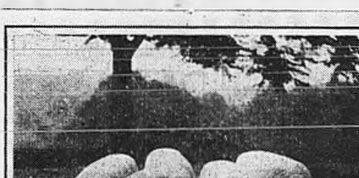
WHAT THE MARKET DEMANDS IN MUTTON CARCASSES

The Light-weight, Early Maturing, Well-finished Lamb is the Kind the Select Trade Hunts Out and Pays for

Some years ago a Scottish member of Parliament, on his daily walk to the House of Commons, had occasion to pass a butcher's shop which catered to an aristocratic class of customers. One day he observed a large placard in the window announcing that "Best Scottish mutton from the Isle of Bass" was for sale within. Now as this gentleman was the owner of the Island of Bass, this information caused him a satisfactory thrill over and above that felt by a good Scot, in the recognition of a fact of which he is intensely aware that Scots mutton was the best procurable. In the good Scot's opinion most things Scottish are believed to be the best. Still he is gratified at seeing taht other people think so, too. As week after week passed and Bass mutton was still on sale, the gentleman thought he would like to interview the seller. "Yes, sir," said the manager of the store most politely, "we have secured a supply of the famous Bass mutton for the season.

"But," said the M. P., "I am the proprietor of the Bass Park and I know that there are only some twenty-five sheep grazing on it, so how can it supply a trade like yours?" But in spite of this interview the sale of mutton from the Isel of Bass continued. We may say for the benefit of our readers who have not been in Scotland, that this island is a lonely rock in the Frith of Forth, about a mile in circumference, and its inhabitants are mostly sea birds, and the above-mentioned score of sheep.



Sheep of this Type and Conformation are Profitable on Any Man's Farm—They produce Offspring Which Bring Home the "Kale."

The moral of this little story is that the best way for a farmer to find out the kind of sheep he should keep is to see what is sold, or is advertised for sale, by the men doing the best trade in his neighborhood.

What kind of sheep should a farmer breed and feed to secure the highest price in the Canadian market at present? Just to hand comes the following paragraph, not an advertisement, in a Canadian newspaper of very large circulation, dated November 3rd: "Big purchase of spring lambs—have just received 1,500 Southdown lambs from the Ottawa Valley. These lambs are considered the best quality raised in Canada."

CUSTOMERS INSIST UPON SMALL LAMBS.

No doubt they are, and the people of the surrounding district must be congratulated on having so large a supply of the highest class of lamb within reach. The Government of Canada, which we hear has been taking the sheep industry under its fostering care, must be gratified at this speedy result of its labors. We like to see well-directed effort getting so speedy a reward. But a certain part of our population's less fortunate buyers of sheep who, we understand, have—to borrow a forcible if not very refined expression from our American neighbors—been raking Canada with a fine comb fr sheep, and have not been able to find them—what must their feelings be? Something akin, we should judge, to those onlookers who saw the miraculous draught of fishes and themselves drew empty nets. For the altruistic spirit, though we hope it is growing, is not yet strong enough developed in most of us to make us rejoice in so great a success with the fullest sympathy.

This, however, is a digression. What we wish to point out and to emphasize is that the Southdown is the type of mutton in demand by the best Canadian trade. Therefore we should do our best to produce as large a supply as possible of mutton of this type—not necessarily pure-bred Southdowns—which is practically out of the question—as a source of supply of mutton and lamb for the meat market. If every pure-bred Southdown in Canada were slaughtered there would hardly be enough mutton to supply the city of Toronto alone for any length of time. What is said of the Southdown applies also to the Shropshire. Each breed has its admirers. Yet the Southdown has, and we consider justly, a pre-eminence over all the other down breeds. It is the oldest and here is always a strong presumption that if any race of men or beasts have attained a high standard and kept it up for generations, there is something especially good in that race.

The Southdown sheep is certainly the little aristocrat of its kind. In the first place it is of pure blood. Its native habitat was the chalky downs of the South of England. The grass which grows there is fine, never grows coarse and tussocky, and the climate is, comparatively speaking, mild, with little frost and fine fresh salt-bearing breezes from the English Channel. There the Southdown lived for years pretty much in its natural state. It could never inspire same feeling as the more intelligent-looking mountain breeds which have to work hard for their living, and gain an alertness which the Southdown has not got. His is a feeling of calm superiority. It pays to feed him; therefore he is fed and he seemed to know it well. He looks and is mutton all over—a good thing for a sheep to be.

The high merits of the breed were not widely known until the time of George IV. The "first gentleman in Europe" spent much of his time and money at Brighton, whither perhaps the most epicurean and self-indulgent society in the world flocked in consequence. A man of genius who farmed land in that neighborhod saw an outlet for mutton of a high-class quality in catering to the requirements of these fashionable people. Having a good foundation in the native breed of sheep, he improved and developed it. He had an unerring insight into the proper type to be aimed at, and through his wise salvation sent Southdown were evolved. Since then science has come to the aid of genius, and the Southdown of to-day has become an almost perfect type of what a sheep should be. This opinion is proved by the block tests at the International and ther fat stock shows.

DOWN BREEDS FILL THE BILL.

It may be mentioned that most of the Down breeds have been produced by the introduction of Southdown blood into the native breeds of various districts. The Shropshires, as already noted, are very nearly related to the Southdowns. A more glance at a pen of each in the show-yard or a glance at a good picture will prove this. The Southdown and Cotswold cross has produced the Oxford, another fine sheep; and the Suffolk, which have many admirers, are the product of the Southdown ram and the ancient horned Norfolk ewe. All these fine sheep have the qualities their admirers claim for them.

What is wanted as the best type of mutton sheep is one that has the largest proportion of flesh of the best quality and the least waste, and flesh of a poorer quality. We all know that certain portions of a carcass of either beef or mutton are more valuable as food than others, therefore we should select an animal with a good broad back, where the most valuable part of the mutton is located. It should have a well developed chest, which shows a sound constitution.

We have purposely left out of the question the larger long-wooled breeds as at present there does not seem to be a very great demand for the mutton they produce. But these breeds have their uses as producers of lamb and mutton, and where a large market for lamb is convenient something may be done by crossing the large breeds with, for instance, the Southdown. In this way lambs weighing from 30 to 50 pounds may be ready for the butcher in a very few months. The larger breeds grow fast, but do not fatten so readily. The market for Christmas lamb is easily supplied in Canada, but where that out of season luxury is demanded it is well paid for, and its existence is the cause of the measure of popularity the Dorsets enjoy. Again the cross between a Southdown or Shropshire ram and a Dorset ewe is superior to a full-bred Dorset for early marketing. The produce of a Dorset grows rapidly, but does not lay on flesh as does the cross-bred lamb.

The subject of crossing pure breeds is not of practical interest to the ordinary Canadian farmer, nor is it, in our opinion, a subject to be taken up by a periodical. A text book written by an expert, who has had time and opportunity to experiment, may be of use, but there is something surer, though more expensive, namely, experience. So far experiments in this country on farms kept by colleges for this purpose tend to prove that as a sire for grade ewes and for the Western range ewes, which have more or less Merino blood, the Southdown ram is without an equal.

This is easily accounted for. The Southdown is a pure breed, while the other down breeds are the product of a mixed parentage, and everyone who has had the slightest experience in breeding stock knows that it is common enough for the progeny of mixed breeds to throw back and show characteristics not in evidence in either parent. Who among us, for instance, would desire to produce a flock, or even individuals in our flock, resembling the Norfolk horned sheep. At the present state of the sheep industry in Canada, the problem before us is to produce as much lamb and mutton of good quality as we possibly can. This, in our opinion, can be done best by taking the ewes already on hand and, by judicious mating, producing food for the people, or, by keeping a herd of pure-bred sheep of the kind we think most suitable for our locality and surroundings, our soil and climate and the market demands of the community in which we live.

—CANADIAN COUNTRYMAN.

SUNDAY AT HOME

AWAKE, MY SPIRIT.

If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain,
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain—
Lord, Thy most pointed pleasure take,
And stab my spirit broad awake.

R. L. Stevenson.

PRAY ALWAYS.

I love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice and my supplication. Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live.

When ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.—The Spirit ... helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting.—Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints.

If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

GLORY.

The prophet asks, "And where will ye leave your glory?" This is asked of those who decreed unrighteous decrees, who turn the needy from judgments and take away the right of the poor.

There are degrees of glory, and much men must leave behind; all corporeal things, the firmament, the stars, the earth and its kingdoms. There is a glory in these for the carnal mind, the gold, the glitter, the tinsel, the rank, the uniform, the title, the wealth, the ease, the luxury. There is the glory of discovery, of mental power, invention of the steam engine, the sewing machine, the talking machine. But there is a higher glory, the glory of a mind in contact with God, on speaking terms with God, interchange of thought with God. Oh! the transcendent magnificence, the pomp, the inner glory of the refined radiance of the revealing Jehovah!

From all bodies taken together we could not evolve one little thought; of all bodies and spirits we could not extract a simple motion of true charity. This is impossible, because it belongs to another order—the supernatural. Men make a fortune; they leave it. Men make a great name; it is vanity. Men walk abroad in the earth, clothed in the spoils of death, and then they die. "Where will ye leave your glory?" child of God. This high, essential glory we shall never leave, nor will it leave us. It is our endowment, our atmosphere in which we live, vital, perfect, lasting. We move on this earth as princes of God, never unattended, not by lackeys in uniform made by the tailor, but by the highest order of beings; we engage their services, their love, their study; they are our bodyguard; we are their wonder, their attraction, their joy. They do not look at what we have, nor what we do, but upon our relation. We are of the blood royal, children of the true Abraham. We wear the garments of light, in spiritual grace, and beauty, and honor. We walk in light, for we are worthy, and our worth is drawn from the centre, as flowers get their beauty from the sun. This glory ever increases; it does not blind with excessive light, but softens and soothes the eyes of the beholder, whose verdict is, "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee."

H. T. Miller.

Pillows Too High for Sleep.

"Of all the thousands of patients I have seen in bed I have never met with one who arranged his pillows hygienically," said an eminent doctor.

"All too high, far too high. High pillows curve the spine, bend the neck, and thus prevent the free circulation of blood in the brain. You can never get the full value of a night's sleep unless you fix your pillows so low that the head and neck are just in a level line with the spine."—Pittsburgh Press.

"Do you think women ought to take an active part in politics?" "Yes," replied Senator Sorghum. "But I'm afraid that a girl who sacrifices her life to politics is going to have something like the customary experience of a girl who marries a man to reform him."—Washington Star.

PALE, FEEBLE GIRLS

Weakness Generally Comes On [illegible] Womanhood Approaches.

Girls upon the threshold of womanhood often drift into a decline in spite of all care and attention. How often one sees girls who have been strong and lively become suddenly weak, depressed, irritable and listless. It is the dawn of womanhood—a crisis in the life of every girl—and prompt measures should be taken to keep the blood pure and rich with the red tint of health. If the blood is not healthy at this critical stage the body is weakened and grave disorders follow. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have saved thousands of young girls from what might have been lifelong invalidism or an early death. They are a blood-builder of unequalled richness, strengthening weak nerves and producing a liberal supply of red, healthy blood which every girl needs to sustain her strength. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have proved their great value over and over again to young women whose health was failing. Miss A. Sternburg, Haileybury Road, New Liskeard, Ont., says: "I have much reason to be grateful to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as they restored me to health, if, indeed, they did not save my life. In 1914 I began to feel run down, and the doctor who was called in said that mine was a bad case of anaemia. I lost flesh, always felt tired, and I got so nervous that I could scarcely hold a cup to take a drink. My heart would flutter alarmingly. The doctor did not seem to be able to help me at all and my family and friends all thought that I was in a decline and could not recover. I was in bed for some weeks when an aunt came to see me and urged that I try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My father got a supply, and by the time I had taken three boxes there was a noticeable improvement, and from that on I steadily progressed toward recovery. I continued using the pills for some time longer, and they restored me to my old time health and strength. I shall never cease to praise this medicine, and to urge all weak run down girls to give it a fair trial as I have proved in my own case their great merit."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, or you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

AN EVIL HERITAGE

CHAPTER X.

When, on the day after her arrival at St. Clara, Miss McCrie suggested to Marian an afternoon ride, the idea was met with a certain degree of coolness. How was it that people never could remain where they were, even for one single day, Marian wanted to know? And, besides, she was not half rested from the journey; she would much prefer having the rocking-chair placed in the garden and spending the afternoon there in the shade of the purple-wreath tree.

"And leaving me to take my ride in my own society! As if it was not bad enough to have to ride a base mule in place of my beloved Mosquito, but you must needs condemn me to solitude as well!"

"But why can't you stay at home?"

"Because I have some very urgent business up beside the Old Provision ground."

"Very well," said Marian, resignedly, "so be it."

She had quickly reflected that if Miss McCrie would not stay at home, there was no alternative but to go with her. During the whole of the forenoon she had been trying to summon courage to ask more questions about those Bolivian skirmishes, which Miss McCrie had touched upon in her talk yesterday. It was strange that she should have seen nothing at all relating to Bolivia in the war telegrams before leaving home; but of course all sorts of things might have happened in a fortnight, and there was no denying that all sorts of things were always happening in Bolivia. By accompanying Miss McCrie on this afternoon ride she would be sure to find out some more details, quite casually, as it were.

Nevertheless, it was not until the hills had been reached, and the mules abandoned to the charge of an opportune negro, that she ventured to approach the subject. They had just picked their way across a stream whose water, clear as glass, tinkled deliciously among the stepping-stones, when Marian began to realize that she was wasting her opportunities. They had entered the forest now, as was proclaimed by the tops of the tree-ferns, on which they could look down as on an eternally-moving green carpet from the steep bank along which ran the path.

"You have never told me, by-the-by, with whom the Bolivians are fighting," began Marian abruptly, just as they emerged upon this path. She had meant to lead up to the subject more skilfully than this, but in critical junctures her diplomacy was apt to fail her. "Is it with one of their neighbors, or have they been deposing another President?"

The path was narrow, and Miss McCrie had been rather inexplicably anxious for Marian to take the lead so that the latter was not able to note the expression of her companion's face, else the flash of merriment called forth by this apparently simple question might not improbably have aroused some suspicions.

"The Bolivians? Why, to tell the truth, I have not been studying the papers, but neither is it necessary to do that in order to know that the Bolivians have got each other by the throat all round in their usual manner."

"But I always hoped that sort of fighting was not so very dangerous."

"Did you? Well, I dare say it is a few degrees more harmless than European warfare—that is to say for the sensible, cool-headed people who are properly furnished with the better part of valor; but as for any of your hot-blooded young scatter-brains or a man, for instance, who has got no particular object to live for, I doubt whether he could play at any more dangerous sort of a game than a Bolivian revolution."

Marian made no further remark, but relapsed into anxious silence as she slowly toiled upwards, with the skirt of her linen riding-habit flung over one arm, and her light straw hat slung like a basket from the other, leaving uncovered her soft brown hair, which every stray sunbeam turned into gold.

Soon the path had died away to a track, while with every step the vegetation was growing thicker, leafy curtains growing in on every side, gradually but surely. Leaves in various stages of decay and the torn sheaves of palm-trees littered the ground. At one spot Marian all but stumbled over a big sheaf that lay across the track like a smooth brown trough more than half filled with water. Denser and ever more densely was the green network drawing together, the fine spun threads growing more and more closely knit, when, just as it seemed as though further progress must of necessity become impossible, the path suddenly opened out at the same time as it reached the level.

It was a deeply secluded spot which they had now entered on, a sort of cauldron in the hills, which neither sunshine nor wind were able to invade, because of the tall dark trees standing as jealously on guard all around, with an almost palpable sense of oppression hung in the air. In the farther [illegible] monstrous palms towered calmly, monstrous ferns loomed indistinctly through the wonderfully-tinted gloom where here and there in the [illegible] of the luxuriant green, fed by [illegible] vapors, the orange and crimson [illegible] of the wild plantains burned like [illegible] tongues of flame. Close beside the path a pine apple [illegible] run wild [illegible] rearing its pink crests on the [illegible] where a few yellow pumpkins [illegible] and the white flowers of a stray arrowroot plant still marked the [illegible] what had once been a "Provision ground," but these, too, drooped their sickly and overfed [illegible] under the universal oppression, and their very stalks were clammy with moisture. An old watch-hut—that is, four sticks and a piece of palm-matting—occupied the centre of the open space, and beside it a broken copper kettle half full of rain water helped to proclaim a human presence of long ago. Of very long ago, surely—such was Marian's first impression as she stepped out on to the open space and felt herself taken possession of by the seclusion and silence of the spot, as by some living and tangible power. She was about to turn to to her companion with a question, when something moved in the green shadow—something that was neither green nor a shadow—and she became aware of a man leaning with folded arms against the stem of a thick old mango tree.

His back was partly turned to her, and both the dress and the wide-brimmed straw hat were unfamiliar, and yet there was something either in the attitude or the curve of the shoulders which made her press forward with an undefinable sense of expectation. At sound of her steps breaking the dead silence of the place he turned.

"Bernard!" was all she could say, standing still with hands outstretched and eyes that filled suddenly with tears. Despite the new-grown beard and the broad shadow of the hat-brim, she had not hesitated for a moment.

Bernard's sunburnt face flushed angrily. His first impulse was to look beyond Marian and to say, "You have done this!" for in one instant he had caught sight of the trap into which he had been so simple-minded as to stumble. But how was this? To look beyond Marian was easy enough, but in the same moment his eyes returned to her of necessity, seeing that there was nothing to be gazed upon but plantains and arrowroot, not a trace of any such personage as Miss Mercury. The two cousins were alone in the Old Provision ground and Marian was laughing and crying and repenting incoherently:

"Oh, Bernard, is it really you? Oh, Bernard, thank Heavens that you are safe!"

"It is I," repeated Bernard, still keeping his head in the air, though at the sight of the blue eyes full of happy tears everything, including the future and the object of existence, had become marvellously and irresistibly clear. "It is I, but this is not my doing. I never intended to meet you here."

"Nor I either. I will go away again if you like; but only tell me first that it is all right; are you quite sure you are not wounded? Oh, Bernard, I was so frightened——"

In discussing the day's events later on, neither of the two cousins could quite distinctly remember what exactly had happened at this juncture. Marian had a hazy recollection of having made an unsteady step forward, and Bernard fancied that he must have put out his arm. However provoked he might be feeling with Miss Mercury for her underhand conduct in the matter, he could not well do less than save his cousin from falling.

It was not until a full minute had passed that Marian came to her senses sufficiently to realize that she was sobbing in Bernard's arms. With a sense of shame she quickly raised her head.

"No," she stammered, "that is not it; I had forgotten. Let me go, Bernard—I am only your cousin; let me go." But even as she said it her eye was caught by the the threadbare spot on the elbow of his sleeve and the battered brim of his old straw hat, and, with the recollection of Miss McCrie's words of last night, "He will learn to live without money and without friends," such an overwhelming sense of pity came over her that pride and reserve and shame itself fell before it.

"No, no," she said in the same breath, "do not let me go; hold me fast—I am yours, Bernard, if you will have me."

* * * *

"Oh, yes," Miss McCrie frankly confessed that evening after supper, when a council was being held in the sitting-room of Prospect, "oh, yes, I plead guilty to everything, and, what is more, I am quite untouched by any such feeling as remorse. Just consider the situation dispassionately, if you can. On one side, this young man sitting on his high horse and saying, 'What, I make an offer of marriage to my cousin, now that she has got enough to live upon? Death would be infinitely preferable to such degradation.' And, on the other hand, this young lady throwing up her hands and declaring, in a voice choked with sobs, that no bribe on earth could induce her to press herself upon the notice of a man whose affections have once upon a time been otherwise engaged, and all the time both of them breaking their hearts after the most approved fashion. It was clearly a case in which it required an unscrupulous old hand like me to push them straight into each other's arms. I am not generally approve of [illegible], but in this case I saw no harm even in inventing the Bolivian revolution, which, as I calculated, would supply that sudden element of anxiety so much needed—when followed by the removal of relief to overthrow the restrictions of conventional prudence. And now my confession is made, and I bow my head in preparation for the bolts of your righteous wrath."

Before she had done speaking, Marian's arms were about her neck.

"You shall come with us to Thornton," was whispered in her ear, "and you shall stay with me until I am married. That is to be your punishment."

Marian and Bernard have been married now for so many years that it sometimes seems to him as a dream that he should ever have loved any other woman.

It was on the eve of their wedding day that Bernard said to his bride:

"I used to be angry with the people who write verses and plays, for I thought it was not fair to raise a man's expectations regarding the state that is called 'being in love.' But I have changed my mind about that. Do you know, Marian, I am actually beginning to think that the poet fellows are right after all."

The young couple spent most of their time at Thornton, but there seldom passes an entire year without a trip being made to St. Clara, where, despite her tender attachment to "home," the ex-registrar-general feels more in place in the warm shadow of cocoa-nut palms than beneath the chilly shades of English oaks.

Messrs. Tanner & Co. still reign supreme at Cane Hill, and still keep their eye upon Lot 13, but have not yet succeeded in adding this last-named sugar plantation to their present property. Nor is it likely that they will have their wish, for neither Bernard nor Marian are inclined to part with the estate.

"It may not be a mine of wealth," Marian once said, laughingly, "but have you realized, Bernard, that it was at Lot 13 that we found each other? If it had not been for that so-called unlucky number, you would now be the husband of Sybil Durrant, and I your little cousin as before."

"I have realized it," said Bernard, taking her into his arms, "which comes to the same as realizing that the spell of Number Thirteen is broken for ever and aye."

Feathered Surgeons.

Snipe and woodcock have often been taken with a mass of feathers on one of the legs. This mass when examined has always been found to cover a broken bone. The feathers have been carefully and neatly twisted round the part where the limb was fractured in such a way as to prove that they had been put on intentionally as a bandage or splint, and the repairs have been made quite as skillful as if performed by a qualified surgeon.

A well-known naturalist actually watched a woodcock through his glasses drag a broken leg to the margin of a stream. There the bird took some clay and, after working it into a paste with his beak, smeared it round the leg in layer after layer, adding a number of downy feathers, which it plucked from its own back and breast. When the operation was finished the bird stood still for more than an hour, no doubt to give the plaster time to set.

Wounds on other parts of the body have also been found plastered in the same way.—London Answers.

Joint and Muscle Pains
Banished by Nerviline

IT CURES RHEUMATISM.

Thousands of people, chock full of the joy of living—happy, glad, bright people, that Nerviline has cured of their pains, all tell the same wonderful story of its power to drive out the aches and tortures of rheumatism and kindred ills.

"My goodness, but Nerviline is a miracle worker," writes Mrs. Charlotte Chapman, a member of a well-known family residing at Mount Pleasant. "Last month I was so crippled up with sciatica and muscular rheumatism as to be almost unable to do a bit of housework. My joints were so stiff and the muscles so frightfully sore that I even cried at times with the pain. For years we have used Nerviline in our family and I just got busy with this wonderful, good old liniment. Lots of rubbing with Nerviline soon relieved my misery and I was in a real short time about my work as usual."

No matter where the ache is, no matter how distressing the pain, you can rub it away with Nerviline. For forty years it has been curing lumbago, sciatica, backache, colds, chest trouble and all sorts of winter ills. Keep a bottle handy and you'll be saved [illegible] and have smaller doctor bills. Sold by dealers everywhere.

Better Off.

The second officer of the brig was in the act of upbraiding the able seaman, Aaron Tappin, for his weakness for rum. Said the second officer:

"Tappin, you might have been a second officer like me, instead of a sailor before the mast."

"Stow that stuff," answered the able seaman. "When I'm drunk I'm an admiral."—London Opinion.

A Recipe for Success.

"If I were obliged to pack a lot of advice into a few words," says Congressman Edward J. King of Illinois, in the American Magazine, "for the benefit of poor boys I would tell them to decide as early in life as possible what they intend to do. There is nothing so helpful to a tired traveler as a destination. This thing of not knowing where you're going but being merely on your way, is a delusion and a folly."

A Bull in the Pulpit.

"I am requested to say," said the young dominie, who was acting as a substitute, "that there will be no meeting of the Ladies' Sewing guild this week as usual, owing to the fact that all the ladies of the guild will be out of town. Should any others wish to take up the work they may do so."

Then he paused, but it was too late.

BIRD'S 3-ROOM HOUSE.

A Hammerhead's Nest Has Three Rooms, All Big and Strong.

No single room apartment satisfies the hammerhead. When he builds his nest he divides it into three rooms—a reception hall, a drawing-room, and a bedroom.

The entire structure is built of sticks, dome shape, and sometimes six feet in diameter. The bird is so good a carpenter and engineer that the nest will bear the weight of a man.

In appearance the bird looks always as if he needed a haircut. His long locks, hanging down his neck, have given him his name, hammerhead.

The entrance to this domelike nest is small and on the concealed side. The first room is the hall, where the hammer head lives when he fears attack. Behind this is the drawing-room, the home of the young birds when they outgrow the bedroom.

The bedroom is higher than the rest and safe from floods. Here the female bird deposits eggs on a nest of leaves, and both parents take turns at keeping them warm.

The hammerhead lives in Africa, usually builds his nest near a stream and eats fish, frogs, lizards and small snakes.

THE BREAD TO EAT.

Homemade is Best—Some Pointers On Making It.

Digestible bread is what we should aim to eat. Properly made home-made bread is the best of all breads for our digestion and health. Most housekeepers claim to have "no time" to make bread. This may or may not be true. The true woman who goes out to a business to earn money to buy her bread properly has no time to make bread. But where there is a will there is always a way, and a good manager contrives to find time to do what she wants to do. It's lack of inclination that prevents people from making home-made bread, and for the sake of their health they should overcome this and cultivate the breadmaking habit.

Home-made bread is the most appetizing and wholesome when well made and is less expensive than bought bread. It is always easy to have most excellent bread if the right kind of flour and good fresh yeast is used and care is taken to bake the bread properly.

The best bread flour is made from spring wheat, and pastry flour from winter wheat. The spring wheat contains more gluten and less starch, so that less of the bread flour is needed to produce a dough of a given consistency. The presence of gluten makes wheat the favorite flour for yeast dough. The more gluten a flour holds the more water it can be made to take up in dough, and the greater will be the yield in bread from a given amount of flour. The proportion of gluten in a flour determines the amount of bread it will yield. Flours are classified as weak or strong, according to the proportion of gluten they contain. Gluten is a protein which is easily digested and it has a high nutritive value.

To select a good bread flour notice its color, which should be cream white. The texture should be rather granular, so that it will fall apart even after being squeezed in the hand.

The yeast must be fresh and sweet to make good bread. Compressed yeast is easier to procure and it can be bought every day or any day in perfectly fresh condition. Never use a yeast cake that has brown spots on it. Throw it away.

To bake bread properly requires a little practice to learn how to manage the oven. The oven must not be too hot, nor too slow. The heat of the oven should be a steadily decreasing heat, quite hot at first to throw up the bread, then slower to cook the bread to the centre without baking a hard crust outside.

All cook books give excellent recipes for making home-made bread and with good flour, good yeast and a good oven, failure need never occur.

Bread can be set at night and baked early in the morning without consuming much time, and any one who tries it will be fully repaid for her trouble in having a delicious bread to eat and an improved condition of health resulting from it. Once the habit of eating home-made bread is acquired, no other kind of bread will be so acceptable to the palate, and a feeling of well-being from the change in bread will be constant, for well-made home-made bread does not give any one attacks of indigestion.

Housekeeping Helps.

There is a fork with curved blades for cutting the shortening into the flour when making pie-crust, much quicker and more satisfactory than a knife.

A little metal contrivance that slips on the clothesline takes up the slack of the line, so that it is tight and does not sag.

A small and convenient gas lighter consists of a wire frame holding an iron file and a cylinder of composition which emits sparks which pass across the face of the file. It does away with the danger of throwing matches where they may cause a fire.

A row of neat glass containers for salt, coffee, tea, soda and spices make the bride's kitchen shelf a temptation to cook. The jars have fluted sides and dust proof covers.

Tiger Superstitions.

The people of India have some very curious superstitions concerning the tiger. One of these is that the ghost of a man killed by a tiger rides on the head of the beast that slew him to warn him of danger and to guide him to new victims. It is declared that Providence provides for the tiger's daily wants to the amount of one rupee (two shillings) a day; that is to say, if a tiger kills a calf worth six rupees he will not be allowed another victim for five days. Eating the flesh of a tiger is supposed to give one great courage and alertness, but the whiskers must first be singed off the beast, or his spirit will haunt the man who fed off him, and he is likely to be turned into a tiger in the next world.—Exchange.

The Lavish Jenkins.

In October, 1686, a religiously minded Buckinghamshire farmer named Jenkins brought his firstborn to the parish church to be christened, and this was to be the name: Abel Benjamin Caleb Daniel Ezra Felix Gabriel Haggai Isaac Jacob Kish Levi Manoah Nehemiah Obadiah Peter Quartus Rechab Samuel Tobiah Uzziel Vaniah Word Xystus Zechariah. It will be observed that the names are all arranged in alphabetical order and are as far as possible selected from Scripture. It was only with the very greatest difficulty that the clergyman dissuaded Mr. Jenkins, but eventually it was decided to christen the baby simply Abel.—Chambers' Journal.

STORMY WEATHER
HARD ON BABY

The stormy, blustery weather which we have during February and March is extremely hard on children. Conditions make it necessary for the mother to keep them in the house. They are often confined to overheated, badly ventilated rooms and catch colds which rack the whole system. To guard against this a box of Baby's Own Tablets should be kept in the house and an occasional dose given the baby to keep his stomach and bowels working regularly. This will not fail to break up colds and keep the health of the baby in good condition till the brighter days come along. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Insect Luminosity.

Luminosity is normal in the well-known luminous beetles, including the various fireflies and glowworms, and results normally from the excitation of some organic secretion. Other insects are luminous in rare instances. Rev. J. Holroyd, vicar of [illegible], England, lately noted luminous moth larvae, similar to those observed once or twice previously, and the chironomous—a kind of gnat—and the "lantern beetles" of South America are among the creatures sometimes lighted up. The occasional luminosity has been attributed to disease or decomposition from bacterial infection.

Napoleon On Horseback.

Extraordinary were the precautions taken that Napoleon should never appear at a disadvantage on horseback. The emperor was not a first-class horseman, and his horses were always thoroughly broken in. Here is a description of the methods employed: "They were trained to remain perfectly steady under tortures of every description; to receive blows about the head; drums were beaten, pistols and crackers fired, flags were waved before their eyes, clumsy packages and sometimes even sheep and pigs were thrown between their legs. None of the animals were deemed sufficiently trained till the emperor could without the least difficulty pull them up short at full gallop, which was his favorite pace."—London Chronicle.

- Prices -

IT is generally known by anyone who is doing any buying that prices on almost everything of Dry Goods, have advanced and are advancing steadily. Cotton goods as well as woollen have advanced from 33⅓ to 50 per cent.

At present we find ourselves fortunate to have on hand 1000 yards of flannelette bought some time ago, these goods to-day are worth from 15 to 25c per yard.

We are selling our stock at from 12½ cents to 20 cents per yard.

Also about 500 yards, (Mill Ends) of white flannelette, selling while they last 10 cents and 12 cents per yard.

We predict it is very good business to buy your supply at our present prices.

The past weeks it has been the privilege of The Times to print reports of annual meetings of churches. In most cases the givings have been good, and the work has been progressing. There is one thing, however, which church officers and church members generally have overlooked, and that is the pastor's salary. How many pastors in this district were given an increase in salary sufficient to meet the rise he must pay for all the things he and his family require to live by?

There were 300 country weekly newspapers suspended publication in the United States in 1916, owing to the advance in price of newsprint. Canadian weeklies are now experiencing hardships, as the advances have struck hard here. If country weeklies cannot make things go in the U. S., where times are good and money plentiful, what will happen to the average Canadian weekly publisher? The weeklies in this country saw the trouble coming and advanced to $1.50, but already the papermakers have gobbled up the extra profit.

Treat All Alike

Some time ago The Times pointed out that the range of fines in the new Liquor Act was too great. Giving any justice of the peace the privilege of fining a man for infractions from $10 to $100 is dangerous.

Awhile ago two Bruce township men were fined $100 and costs, and their fines were reduced. Later a Hepworth man was fined $300 and costs and it was reduced to $50. Last week a Southampton man was fined $200 and he is seeking a return, and likely to get it, for how can the commissioners refuse when others have had theirs returned, on all sorts of excuses.

But where injustice comes in is pointed to in the following from The Bruce Herald, which says: "A poor working man residing in Port Elgin was heavily fined for getting astray on the booze game, but want of funds, probably, kept the poor man from engaging legal talent, with the result that no law office appeal reached the Department for him, and this horny-handed son had to come across with the full pound of flesh, and only the other day succeeded in cashing in the last instalment of his fine from his slim weekly pay. Must the poor cash up while their more wealthy brethren who are able to enlist the services of lawyer, be handed rebates? If refunds are going to be passed out they should go all around regardless of whether it's a rich man's son or a nobody's darling that gets next. Nor should the location of the trial cut any figure in the deal, for if those convicted in Toronto have to finance their fines in in full why should the Commission play Santa Claus with Bruce and pass the liquor offenders here back something on a plate?"

Why?

A Times reader wants to know why we didn't publish a letter sent to us by a Saugeen resident, also asks why, if it was fit for The Globe, it was not fit for The Times?

The enquiry is a sincere one, but the enquirer is laboring under a wrong impression.

The facts are these: The letter sent to The Times was acceptable to us, with certain erasures. This was not acceptable to the writer, and he sent the letter to the Toronto daily. After waiting a month and sending other follow-up letters, the articles did not appear and the lame excuse was handed out that "the letters must have been lost in the mails."

On Wednesday week the daily gave Mr. James Clark the credit of having written asking why "the majesty of the law was vindicated at the expense of $10 to one man and $100 to another."

The above substance appeared in The Times after the trial of the men here, and The Times suggested that the power to grade the fines be taken from the magistrates and even went so far as to suggest district police magistrates to try these cases.

Nothing is gained by publishing any letter which is designed to hurt, rather than to seek, or to give information, and The Times' position has been strengthened by having the letter sent to a Toronto editor, who could not use it any more than we.

While The Globe gives Mr Clark publicity to two or three lines of his letter it also slaps Mr. Chapman, the magistrate, on the back in the following lines;

"One of the Magistrates apparently feels that the rough edges of justice should be smoothed. The defendants who paid $100 announce that after he had obtained the true facts of the case, which were not brought out at the trial through the fault of the defendants themselves, the magistrate has taken steps to have the fines reduced to $25."

As editor of The Times, we have fearlessly explained our reasons for not publishing many letters, and have never yet used subterfuges to explain away the non-appearance of any article entrusted to us.

Mr. Clark is quite honest with us. His intentions were for the best interests of the community as he saw them. We have given publicity to this matter because several prominent men in the district think The Times might have printed the letter, but they were not acquainted with all the circumstances.

Publishers at Walkerton

Thursday the publishers of Bruce met at Walkerton. The object was to compare and discuss the prices the papermakers were charging. All are experiencing raises from 75 to 90 per cent. The meeting advocated the discussion of local affairs editorially, hoping that every weekly would develop the editorial side. At 1 o'clock Mayor Johnston and his council, on behalf of the town of Walkerton, entertained the editors at lunch. The Mayor solicited the aid of the press in an endeavor to boost Bruce county. Councillors Sanderson, McArthur, and McKinnon, also presented some advantages which Bruce has as a good place to live and work in.

Those responding to toasts on the newspaper side were J. J. Hunter, W. MacDonald M. P. P., D. McKenzie, J. Johnson and E. R. Bayles.

It was very thoughtful of the mayor and council, and the publishers have very pleasant recollections of the hospitality of Walkerton.

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday last at the home of the bride's parents, at North Bruce, when Viola Willina, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. T. McIntee, was united in marriage to Charles Elmo Holtz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Theo Holtz, 2nd. Con Saugeen. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a becoming gown of maize satin, veil and orange blossoms. She carried a boquet of carnations and narcissus and wore the groom's gift, a gold bracelet. The ceremony was performed under an arch of evergreens and white roses, by the Rev. M. D Hallman. During the signing of the register Mrs. Fred Holtz sang very sweetly. "Because", Miss Pearl Nicholson played the wedding music. After the ceremony about sixty guests partook of a sumptuous wedding dinner. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts, a fine rocking chair being the gift from the choir, of which the bride was a member. Mr. and Mrs. Holtz will reside on the 2nd Con., Saugeen. Many friends will wish the young couple a long and happy wedded life.

Those Liquor Cases

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir: I do not like newspaper controversies, but I read an item in last week's Times over the nom-de-guerre, of "Saugeen Observer", which has led me to give you the following in connection therewith, having reference to the late liquor cases here, to which "Observer" relate.

Now as to the investigation he says that the inspector made in the matter, all I know is that he came to me and asked me if I would send copies of all the evidence in the four cases to the Board of License Commissioners, as they would like to see the papers in all the cases. Instead of sending copies, I sent the original papers as taken in court. Now what would he investigate? As there was nothing to investigate, any investigation would have to be done before the trial, not after, as nothing was done only what occurred at the trial, and he was represented by counsel, and all the magistrates had to do was to give judgment, when the defendants pleaded guilty to the charge against them.

After the trial I had spoken to several men as to the nature of the offence, (as not one word was said at the trial by anyone in behalf of the defendants.) and I wanted to know, so I made inquiries myself, (as Mr. Crowe had gone away) but on his return approved of all I had done in his absence. When I found that the fine was too much I sent a letter to the Board with the papers, recommending a reduction in the fines. They sent me the following letter in reply, which speaks for itself:

Toronto Dec. 20th, 1916.

James A. Chapman, Esq., J. P.,
Port Elgin.

Dear Sir:—

I beg on behalf of the Board, to acknowledge receipt of your esteemed favor of Dec. 18th with enclosures on the four cases heard by yourself and Mr. H. Crowe.

Your review of these cases has been carefully read by the Board, which recognizes the good reasoning of such review, and purposes to make no interference with your decision, but rather to compliment you upon the evidently good basis for your action.

It is noted that you are somewhat disposed to think that McArthur might have been let off easier, than McGillivray, it having been McGillivray who had and furnished the liquor which made them both drunk. The Board had considered whether it should make a recommendation that McGillivray's should be reduced to $75.00, and McArthur's to $25.00, but concluded to make no interference but to leave the matter entirely in your hands.

Should you and your colleagues, of your own volition, see fit to make a recommendation such as the above, the Board will support you in the same, but the Board wishes to do nothing that could be construed as a reflection upon yourself and your colleagues in the matter of your judgment, or the principles which actuated you therein.

Trusting this explanation makes all clear to you, and commending your attitude of absolute fairness to all parties who came before you irrespective of politics, creed or station in life, I remain

Yours very truly,
J. D. Flavelle,
Chairman.

Then I wrote for instructions how to proceed to get the fines reduced, which was by petition to Attorney General. I drew up the petition and sent for the defendants to come in and sign it, which they did, (it not being necessary for any other signature to it.) In my letter with the petition, I asked that the fines be reduced to $75 each, but they would not give me all I asked, reducing one $50 and the other $75.

This money the defendants have received through me, by cheque from the Inspector.

In conclusion, it will be seen by the letter from the commissioners that they would not interfere, but left the whole matter with the Justices who heard the cases, but we felt that as a mistake was done it was only honorable to make it right, as many men have done before. If "Observer" comes to my office I will show him or any other person the entire correspondence, in the whole matter, which I think will satisfy him as to all which has been done, has been in the interests of what is right.

I am sorry to trouble you, but as The Times is widely read, I thought perhaps the above would clear up the question.

J. A. Chapman.

THE ORIGIN OF OUR SURNAMES

How Men in Long Ago Times Distinguished Men.

Trades, Places, Events Personal Characteristics.

It cannot but be admitted that considerable food for thoughtful reflection is offered in the study of the origination of names. It was all very well when the world was young; but, as a writer says, "As the population increased and communication became possible and easier the supply of single names was not equal to the demand, and people began to get individuals bearing the same name mixed. It was at this time that the surname was thought of and adopted, so that families might be distinguished one from the other."

Trades and callings are in this day represented in the names of Baker, Carver, Shoemaker, Tyler, Chandler, Mason, Cutler, Carter, Saddler, Slater, Butcher, Draper, Thatcher, Fletcher, Hooper, Cheeseman, Turner, Joiner, Cooper, Gilder, Mercer, Skinner, Coleman, Sawyer, Tanner, Spicer, Cook, Tutor, Miner, Driver, Weaver Gardner, Archer, Merchant, Porter, Wainwright, Taylor, Shepherd, Glover and ever so many others.

Says Clifford Howard, who has devoted himself to this pleasant study: "Such names as Hall, Stair, Garrett, Kitchen and Chambers also record the occupations of our forefathers, who in these cases were engaged in the households of the nobility and had charge of such apartments as the names indicate. Others held higher offices, and from them we have the surnames Page, Butler, Proctor, Forester, Steward, Bailey, Fowler and Woodward and Hayward, the keepers, respectively, of the forest and the cattle."

In other localities it was usual to point out an individual by the place of his birth or residence, a custom which resulted in the adoption of such surnames as French, Scott, Welsh, English, Dan, Burgoyne, Cornish and Cornwallis, Kent, York, Chichester, Lincoln, Wells, Washington, Putnam, Hurst, Buchanan, Preston and Bancroft. A great many of this sort were originally the names of baronial estates, which names the barons adopted as surnames.

Those who were not of such high estate were forced to content themselves with humbler titles. Thus John, who lived by the brook, became John Brook, and David, who lived by a giant oak, was called David Tree.

Richard, who lived at the end of the town, became Richard Townsend, while his brother, who lived under the brow of a hill, became known as Peter Underwood. Those who lived near the water took the name of Atwater.

At the time family names began to be used the shops of the merchants were not numbered as they are now, but were known by their signs, which were suspended at the front doors and bore pictures of all sorts of animals, vegetables, birds, flowers, fishes and insects. It was customary to speak of an innkeeper, then, as John of the Bear, or Dick of the Swan, and, as may be readily understood, these names were soon converted into Bear, Hogg, Hart, Bull, Fox, Wolf, Colt, Hare, Beaver, Lyon, Swan, Peacock, Heron, Dove, Partridge, Cock, Finch, Hawk, Crane and Drake, as well as Burt, Chubb, Haddock, Herring, Pike, Perch and others. From vegetables, trees, fruits and flowers we have Bean, Broome, Claver, Birch, Ash, Hawthorne, Hazel Peach, Flower, Nettle, Vine, Plant, Bull, Branch and Rose, besides dozens more.

The shop signs bore other devices, and from these we have such names as Bell, Hammer, Coates, Mantell, Jewel, Potts, Pipes and others.

A great many nicknames remained fixed as family names, the most important being those which referred to the color of hair or complexion, and from these came such well known names as Brown, Black, Gray, White, Reed (red), Blount (fair). Others were given for some personal attainment or characteristic, such as Armstrong, Mitchell (great), Singer, Whistler, Eatwell, Swindells, Strong, Weak, Small, Osgood (well built), Longfellow, Crookshanks, Longman, Whitehead, Broadhead, Swift, Sober, Noble, Hardy, Doolittle, Goodman, Darling, Long, Short, Bachelor, Savage, Wise, Sweet, Moody and others.

To these might be added King, Queen, Pope, Bishop, Knight, Prior, Abbott, Squire, Earl, Duke, Baron, Lord, Prince and others, which were originally given to individuals because of their bearing the titles or because of services they may have rendered them.

Irritable Nerves Restored and Health Regained In a Simple Way

The man or woman who is run-down, not feeling up to the mark, perhaps irritable, nervous or sleepless can well afford to learn about the wonderful results the newly discovered blood-food is giving to folks that use it.

There is wonderful power in this new blood-food, and every weak, pallid person can be quickly nourished back to health that uses it as directed.

After each meal, with a sip or two of water, you simply take two little chocolate-coated tablets, sold in all drug stores under the name of "FERROZONE."

The effect is noticeable at once. You feel happier, brighter, more contented. That old-time feeling of weariness departs—you forget your "nerves" and no longer get irritable or cross over trifling annoyances.

There is a reason for this change and that reason consists of the fact that Ferrozone contains blood-making materials you can get in no other way.

Ferrozone makes the blood tingle and sing with vitality. This ensures lots of nourishment and strength and being supplied to every part of the body.

No wonder the eyes brighten and the cheeks radiate color and happiness: With abundance of strength, a keen appetite, good digestion and plenty of sound sleep—all the result of Ferrozone—you quickly feel as if life held new charms and pleasures.

JADE TALISMAN BRINGS POWER.

Centuries Old Idol Means Much to the Chinese.

Sun Yat-Sen's Failure Blamed to It's Loss.

The death of Yuan Shi Kai, president of China, is inseparably linked with the recovery of the long lost image of the Chinese Goddess of Mercy, Kwanyin, in the minds of many Chinese, who see in these events the strange workings of the mysterious power to be controlled by the idol. Strangely enough, the image was reported found on the very day that the president died.

The Goddess of Mercy was stolen from Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, the revolutionary leader, and the failure of the Sun Yat-Sen revolution was laid to the loss of this image.

The Kwanyin, for which a reward of $10,000 was offered, was carved from a solid block of rare apple green jade. It is centuries old. In its base, cunningly fashioned so as to defy detection, there was a tiny secret chamber, and in this chamber reposed the one symbol held in the greatest of veneration throughout the land of the Chinese.

What form that symbol takes is today a profound mystery. This much is known. It is the talisman possession of which rules the greatest of all Chinese secret societies.

It is whispered that possession of the supreme symbol came to Dr. Sun during the period of his life when he was a fugitive from the wrath of the Manchus. There are those among the slant-eyed dreamers of China's lotus land who say that possession of the symbol concealed in the base of the jade Kwanyin has been responsible for much of the uncanny power which Dr. Sun exercised over the people of China, and that it obtained sanctuary for him on countless occasions from those who sought his life for a heavy blood price. The talisman is called "The Horns of the Hare."

Time after time, through hired Japanese agents, for whom the talisman held little of awe, attempts were made to steal the Jade Kwanyin and its priceless contents.

It was in 1914, two years after Dr. Sun had abdicated in favor of Yuan Shi Kai, that the men who had clung to his trail day and night for many years attained their object. Dr. Sun at that time was secluded in a house surrounded by a vast garden, encircled by a high and almost unscalable wall, which was constantly under guard. His household was trustworthy to the last man.

Dr. Sen was alone in the garden. Somewhere along the wall a guard patrolled. At last the sentry passed near a spot where a lean yellow man crouched hidden and waiting.

Into the calm Japanese air shot a "smoke ring" of concentrated poison vapor. One after another the rings settled about the unsuspecting guard. He fell limp and unconscious to the grass. From behind Dr. Sun, too, the jets of poison came volleying. Without a cry the man of China's destiny collapsed, temporarily suffocated.

Over the walls appeared the ends of long ladders. Up swarmed lithe, active yellow men, dropping into the garden and rifling the unconscious leader's garments. A moment, and they swarmed up the trunks of trees growing beside the wall and dropped again to the outside.

Home Care of Milk.

No matter how well milk has been handled up to the time it is delivered to the consumer, it cannot be expected to keep well if it is carelessly treated thereafter. It should be covered, kept in a cool, clean place free from dirt, flies, etc. New milk should never be mixed with old unless it is to be used at once, as the bacteria in the old milk will of course be added also and the mixed milk will not keep as well as the fresh milk alone. Bacteria are thickest where there is dirt and decay, and milk should therefore be stored only in clean, sweet places. It is safer to keep it covered, to exclude not only dirt and bacteria, but also the flavors and odors which it so easily absorbs. If kept at a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit or less, good milk should remain sweet for twelve hours at least, after it reaches the consumer, and ordinarily for twenty-four hours or more. Sometimes in very hot weather housekeepers complain that in spite of all precautions it sours quickly, even in the ice box. This is often due to the fact that the air of the ice box, although it seems cold in contrast with the heat outside, is really not cold enough to check the growth of the bacteria. If a thermometer placed inside registers more than 50 degrees Fahrenheit, the fault is almost surely in the temperature of the ice box and not in the milk.

MRS. WILLIAMS SAYS USE DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

She Suffered for Two Years, but Three Boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills Made Her a New Woman.

Anamasette, Kent Co., N. B., Feb. 5.—(Special.)—"I can recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to every woman who suffers." So says Mrs. Williams, a well known and highly respected lady residing here. Mrs. Williams was a sufferer for two years till she used Dodd's Kidney Pills. She found in them quick relief and complete cure. That is why she is enthusiastic in her praise of them.

"My troubles started with a cold," Mrs. Williams states. "I never seemed to get over the effects of it. I had cramps in my muscles and my joints were stiff. There were dark circles under my eyes, which were puffed and swollen. I had a bitter taste in my mouth, and I suffered from severe headaches.

"I felt heavy and sleepy after meals and had attacks of neuralgia. Heart flutterings and rheumatism were soon added to my troubles. I took just three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills. I cannot be too glad that I did so."

Every one of Mrs. Williams' symptoms was a symptom of kidney disease. That is why Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her.

Thrift On a Raft.

Scottish thrift received a severe blow not long ago after a shipwreck. Two Scotchmen had got on to a raft, but had nothing to support life or spirits except a little tobacco and some matches, but no pipe or cigarette papers. Succor seemed never coming. At last they gave it up as hopeless; but, desirous of having a little comfort before the seemingly inevitable end, they made some cigarettes with banknotes one of them had in his pocket. The banknotes were no sooner sacrificed than relief came, and they were saved. Their feelings cannot be described.—London Telegraph.

Peculiarity of French Flag.

It is not generally known that the three strips of color that make up the French national flag are not equal in width. When the tricolor was first authorized, 1792, the positions and proportions of the three colors were not stated, and such a variety of flags was seen that two years later the national assembly declared that the national standard should be formed of "the three national colors in equal bands placed vertically, the hoist being blue, the middle white and the fly red."

For years the flag was made in this way; but, though the bands were equal, they never looked equal owing to an optical illusion, the blue appearing wider than the white and the white wider than the red.

At last, after many experiments, it was officially decided that in every hundred parts the blue should be thirty, white thirty-three and red thirty-seven.—Pittsburgh Press.

BREADWINNER GOES --INCOME LESSENS

THE FAMILIES OF OUR SOLDIERS WOULD BE HEAVY LOSERS WERE IT NOT FOR THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

The Canadian mother of a family, whose husband is on duty in France, receives from the Government $20 a month as separation allowance. She gets, also, one-half of her husband's pay, say $16. This makes a total of $36. With her husband at home, the family income would be $65 per month, assuming that the bread-winner earned two dollars and-a half per day. It will readily be seen that the economical position of the family is distinctly lowered, for the cost of the husband's food and clothing would not be nearly equal to the decrease in the family income.

It is the condition of affairs so created that the Canadian Patriotic Fund seeks to modify. It was called into existence at the opening of the war by the prompt revelation that without some such fund at least two of every three families left behind by our soldiers would be in need. It went without saying that Canada had no intention of allowing the brave wives of her brave men to make the wholly unnecessary sacrifice such suffering would mean, and consequently the Canadian Patriotic Fund became a national undertaking the moment the need for it became apparent. Generous Canada, from east to west, gave the necessary money, and patriotic men and women, in every city and county, undertook the task of assisting the soldiers' families and of supervising the distribution of the fund.

Clearly, with the increasing size of our armies, and the alarmingly rapid growth of the cost of living, the fund must be increased. In 1917, Ontario will be asked for six million dollars, against five millions in 1916. The province is prosperous, and there is no good reason why this sum should not be guaranteed by the end of January. In that month, campaigns will be held in a large number of the towns and cities, and energetic work, coupled with generous loosening of the purse-strings, should ensure that by the end of the month the fund will see its way clear to fulfil its duty towards Ontario families until Dec. 31, 1917.

How to Cut Roses.

There is a right and a wrong way to cut roses. The choice of the latter may seriously injure the blossom producing properties of the plants. This applies particularly, of course, to rose plants chosen and grown especially for cut flower production. Such roses will be largely of the perpetual blooming sorts.

When a rose is cut from such plants—tea roses or other perpetual bloomers—only two or three eyes of the current season's growth of that branch should be left on the plant. This should give the roses very long stems. Succeeding blossoms should be cut close to the ground. It will seem like destroying the bush to take so much off it, but if the object is the production of roses, the cutting away of the surplus wood will attain the desired end.

If the spring pruning has not been sufficiently severe the plant is likely to have long, naked stalks and short stems to the flowers. With this character of growth only one or two strong leaf buds should be left on the branch when the flower is cut, so as to stimulate as much growth as possible from the base of the plant.

The greatest temptation to leave wood is where there are two or more buds on one branch, some being small when the terminal one is open. This temptation to follow a bad practice can be avoided by pinching off all side shoots after a bud has formed on the end of a branch. This prevents the formation of two or more buds on one stalk. This summer pruning will encourage additional blooms on varieties which bloom more than once a year.

THE PENSION BOARD

The Dominion Government have appointed a Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada with offices in Ottawa. As this board wishes to cause as little delay as posible in dealing with communications with regard to pensions, they wish the public to correspond directly with the Board of Pension Commissioners, Ottawa.

A great deal of delay may be caused by communication, being sent through other departments of the Government.

The Patriotic Fund Association and the Military Hospitals Commission have kindly consented to give information and assistance to those wishing to write direct to the Board of Pension Commissioners. These societies have offices in certain localities throughout Canada.

In addition, in order to facilitate the granting of pensions, the board is opening branch pension offices in Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg, London, Hamilton, Toronto, Barrie, Kingston, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax. All information with regard to pensions may be obtained from these offices.

JABLONICA.

One of the Important Gateways of Carpathian Mountains.

Jablonica and the pass of the same name, which the Russians are said to have occupied, constitute one of the most important gateways through the high Carpathian mountains from Galicia and Bukowina into Hungary, says a war geography note of the U. S. National Geographic society issued from its Washington headquarters.

"The Carpathians in this vicinity tower to a height of 7,500 feet, but slope gradually down to the southwest through the country of Marmaros. At a distance of forty-five miles from the crest the capital of the province, Marmaros-Sziget, is situated at a level of only 900 feet above the sea.

Jablonica clings to the northeastern slope of the Carpathians, between the headwaters of the Pruth and the Golden Bistritza Rivers, and is a small station on the seventy-two-mile railway line connecting Stanislau, now in the hands of the Russians, with Korosmezo, just beyond the pass, to the southwest. Near Korosmezo are valuable petroleum springs.

"The important river Theiss, chief affluent of the Danube, and next to the latter the largest waterway in Hungary, has its source in Marmoros county. Situated on the Theiss and connected by rail with Korosmezo is the flourishing town of Marmaros-Sziget, with a population of 21,000. This will be the first important objective of the Russians after they cross the Carpathians by way of the Jablonica pass and begin their descent upon the plains of Hungary.

"Marmaros-Sziget is most pleasantly situated at the junction of the Iza River with the Theiss. To the east tower the well-wooded, snow-capped Carpathians. In this town, before the war citizens of many nationalities were busily engaged in an extensive lumber trade and in handling the enormous output of salt (a state monopoly), taken from the mines of three villages contiguous to the county capital. The annual fairs which were held here were an important feature of the industrial life of this part of Hungary, and presented a most picturesque scene to the traveler. A babel of tongues and a kaleidoscope of color resulted from the mingling of Ruthenians, Roumanians, Magyars, Gipsies, Slovaks and Armenians, each group dressed in the multihued costumes peculiar to their own nationality.

The salt mines of the Marmaros-Sziget district have been worked for centuries and many Americans who have toured this part of Hungary have visited the deep galleries whose rock-crystal walls glitter as if studded with countless iridescent jewels as they reflect the rays of the electric lights. One of the most interesting mines is that of Ronaszek, which contains a great subterranean salt lake having a depth of nearly 300 feet.

"Hunting for bear and lynx on the wooded slopes of the Carpathians in the vicinity of Marmaros-Sziget is a favorite pastim of the Hungarians. The accommodations for sportsmen are not as satisfactory here as in the high Tatra mountains, however."

Ireland's Golden Age.

There need be no "theory" as to the early culture of Ireland. It is a fact, for example, that the Abbey of Clonmacnoise, near Athlone, was once a centre of learning so renowned that scholars repaired thither from the ends of Europe, and the great Charlemagne sent it presents. And in the realms of art "The Book of Kells," a Latin copy of the Gospels, executed at that time, had no rival for delicacy of illumination.—London Standard.

SEA WAR TO THE LIMIT DECLARED BY THE HUNS

U-Boats Will Sink all in the New War Zone---Around the Harbors of Britain and France.

A New York report: Great Britain issued to-night to the torpedo boats stationed at Quarantine to preserve neutrality, not to permit any vessel, either neutral or flying the flag of one of the belligerents, to pass out to-night.

The order applied not only to steamships, but to tugboats. Several tugs which passed Quarantine early in the evening before the order was issued were compelled to return to port. The purpose of the order was not disclosed.

Washington report: Germany has declared unrestricted submarine warfare, and henceforth all traffic by sea—neutral or enemy—within a prescribed zone, will be endangered.

A starvation blockade of England was announced to the world to-day in notes delivered to American Ambassador Gerard in Berlin and to the State Department here by Count von Bernstorff.

Thus begins the long-feared campaign of ruthlessness, conceived by von Hindenburg, it is said, here, on a magnitude never even contemplated by von Tirpitz.

A sea cordon, running from the Terschelling lightship, off the Dutch coast in the North Sea, northward to a point off the coast of Norway, thence west into the Atlantic and south along the French coast, and in the Mediterranean, except the western part adjacent to the Spanish coast, down into Greek territorial waters, has been drawn by Germany, and in it neutral Governments have been warned their ships will ply at their own risk.

Under certain conditions regular American trans-Atlantic passenger steamers may continue their trips to England if Falmouth is made their port of destination and a certain lane, which will not be mined, is used by them. Only one steamer may run each week to and from the United States, and the United States Government is asked for guarantees that they carry no contraband.

In a document announcing Germany's purpose to do away immediately "with the restrictions" which until now have been imposed upon the use of her full sea-power, the German Government announces that the step is taken because of the failure of the Teuton's allies' attempt to bring about peace.

THE SUPER-CRISIS.

Again the United States faces severance of diplomatic relations with Germany with all its eventual possibilities.

Talk of peace in Europe and of means of preserving the peace of the world have gone glimmering. President Wilson, incredulous at first when the unofficial text of Germany's warning was brought to him, at once called for the official document which had just been presented to Secretary Lansing by the German Ambassador. Mr. Lansing absolutely refused to make a comment.

The President has the task of deciding what shall be the course of the United States. Three immediate steps appear among the possibilities. The United States might solemnly warn Germany against a violation of her pledges; it might be decided that the German warning is sufficient notice of an intention to disregard those pledges and a sufficient warrant for breaking off diplomatic relations; it might be decided to wait the results of the blockade and determine the course of the United States as the actual operations develop.

On almost every side Germany's drastic action is interpreted as an open confession of the effectiveness of the British food blockade. It is regarded as a determination to attempt to strike back in kind.

RENEWAL OF BLOCKADE

It virtually is a renewal and an extension of the submarine blockade of the British Isles proclaimed on Feb. 4, 1915, and which became effective Feb. 18, 1915. Under it ships were sunk without warning until Germany abandoned the practice and gave her assurances, in the Sussex case, to abide by international law. The Lusitania, Falaba and scores of other ships were sunk under the decree.

Germany, according to information received here, realizes that her action may result in a break of relations, but Berlin officials are prepared for the rupture. To-night they were represented as feeling that the only other steps open to the United States are the calling of a conference of neutral nations to end the blockade, or the taking of some step which speedily would result in peace.

Information received from the same source is that Admiral von Tirpitz, or his followers, had absolutely nothing to do with the new policy. On the contrary, it was said to-night that von Tirpitz was not, as has heretofore supposed, removed from power because he advocated ruthless submarine warfare. The fact, according to this information, was that he was deposed because he did not effectively carry out the campaign he inaugurated.

HAS 300 U-BOATS

From German quarters to-night came the information that Germany has from 300 to 500 submarines ready for the campaign.

The German view is that the new policy will improve general prospects for an early peace. Germany is represented as still being ready to discuss peace at any time. However, it is declared that German officials, both in this country and in Berlin, feel that the declaration of changed policy should make it clear that Germany and her allies are in the war to the last drop of blood.

Unrestricted submarine warfare, it was declared, was determined upon as soon as the nature of the Entente reply to President Wilson's note became known and before the President's address to the Senate.

It is expected that Austria-Hungary will take action similar to that of Germany with regard to the operations of its submarines in the Mediterranean.

Two opposing views of American hostility have been allowed to pass the German censor. The first was that the harm the United States could do Germany as an active enemy was no greater than as a neutral supplying munitions and loans to the allies, and that the crippling of allied shipping would be the turning point of the war. This apparently is the view now adopted. The other view, known to have been held by some high officials here, was that Germany might in desperation seek to involve the United States as an actual enemy, on the ground that her influence at the peace conference would be a generous one.

LOOK FOR UNPRECEDENTED SLAUGHTER.

A revulsion is expected to take place in the Entente countries, with the result that the world-war will enter a period of frightfulness unimagined heretofore, with the massing for huge offensives by land, the announcement of ruthlessness by sea officials look forward to at least a Spring and Summer of unprecedented slaughter.

The German note sweeps away all the issues that have previously loomed so large, such as the armament of merchant ships and every, where it must be located, how it must be used, whether the ship is chartered, requisitioned, or still private, and replaces them with one clear issue, which cannot be evaded or ignored.

TEXT OF THE NOTE

Following is the official text of the German note:

Mr. Secretary of State:

Your Excellency was good enough to transmit to the Imperial Government a copy of the message which the President of the United States of America addressed to the Senate on the 22nd instant. The Imperial Government has given it the earnest consideration which the President's statements deserve, inspired as they are by a deep sentiment of responsibility. It is highly gratifying to the Imperial Government to ascertain that the main tendencies of this important statement correspond largely to the desires and principles professed by Germany. These principles especially include self-government and equality of rights for all nations. Germany would be sincerely glad if in recognition of this principle countries like Ireland and India, which do not enjoy the benefits of political independence should now obtain their freedom. The German people also repudiate all alliances which serve to force the countries into a competition for might and to involve them in a net of selfish intrigues.

GERMANY'S LOFTY IDEALS.

On the other hand, Germany will gladly co-operate in all efforts to prevent future wars. The freedom of the seas, being a preliminary condition of the free existence of nations and the peaceful intercourse between them, as well as the open door for the commerce of all nations, has always formed part of the leading principles of Germany's political programme. All the more the Imperial Government regrets that the attitude of her enemies who are so entirely opposed to peace makes it impossible for the world at present to bring about the realization of these lofty ideals. Germany and her allies were ready to enter now into a discussion of peace and had set down as basis the guaranty of existence, honor and free development of their peoples. Their aims, as has been expressly stated in the note of December 12, 1916, were not directed towards the destruction or annihilation of their enemies and were according to their conviction perfectly compatible with the rights of the other nations. As to Belgium, for which such warm and cordial sympathy is felt in the United States, the Chancellor had declared only a few weeks previously that its annexation had never formed part of Germany's intentions. The peace to be signed with Belgium was to provide for such conditions in that country, with which Germany desires to maintain friendly neighborly relations, that Belgium should not be used again by Germany's enemies for the purpose of instigating continuous hostile intrigues. Such precautionary measures are all the more necessary, as Germany's enemies have repeatedly stated, not only in speeches delivered by their leading men, but also in the statutes of the Economical Conference in Paris, that it is their intention not to treat Germany as an equal, even after peace has been restored, but to continue their hostile attitude and especially to wage a systematical economic war against her.

ALLIES' "LUST OF CONQUEST."

The attempt of the four allied powers to bring about peace has failed owing to the lust of conquest of their enemies, who desired to dictate the conditions of peace. Under the pretence of following the principle of nationality, our enemies have disclosed their real aims in this way, viz., to dismember and dishonor Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria. To the wish of reconciliation they oppose the will of destruction. They desire to fight to the bitter end.

A new situation has thus been created which forces Germany to new decisions. Since two years and a half England is using her naval power for a criminal attempt to force Germany into submission by starvation. In brutal contempt of international law the group of powers led by England does not only curtail the legitimate trade of their opponents, but they also by ruthless pressure compel neutral countries either to altogether forego every trade not agreeable to the Entente Powers or to limit it according to their arbitrary decrees. The American Government knows the steps which have been taken to cause England and her Allies to return to the rules of international law and to respect the freedom of the seas. The English Government, however, insists upon continuing its war of starvation, which does not at all affect the military power of its opponents, but compels women and children, the sick and the aged, to suffer for their country pains and privations which endanger the vitality of the nation. Thus British tyranny mercilessly increases the sufferings of the world indifferent to the laws of humanity, indifferent to the protests of the neutrals whom they severely harm, indifferent even to the silent longing for peace among England's own Allies. Each day of the terrible struggle causes new destruction, new sufferings. Each day shortening the war will, on both sides, preserve the lives of thousands of brave soldiers and be a benefit to mankind.

BLACK FLAG HOISTED EVERYWHERE.

The Imperial Government could not justify before its own conscience, before the German people and before history the neglect of any means destined to bring about the end of the war. Like the President of the United States, the Imperial Government had hoped to reach this goal by negotiation. After the attempts to come to an understanding with the Entente powers have been answered by the latter with the announcement of an intensified continuation of the war, the Imperial Government—in order to serve the welfare of mankind in a higher sense and not wrong its own people—is now compelled to continue the fight for existence, again forced upon it, with the full employment of all the weapons which are at its disposal.

Sincerely trusting that the people and Government of the United States will understand the motives for this decision and its necessity, the Imperial Government hopes that the United States may view the new situation from the lofty heights of impartiality and assist, on their part, to prevent further misery and unavoidable sacrifice of human life.

Enclosing two memorandas regarding the details of the contemplated military measures at sea, I remain, etc.,

(Signed) Bernstorff.

THE BARRED ZONES.

The annex referred to in the final paragraphs of the note indicates the barred zones around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean, in which all sea traffic forthwith will be opposed. The barred zones are: "In the North Sea, the district around England and France which is limited by a line 20 nautical miles; the district along the Dutch coast as far as the Terschelling lightship, the degree of longitude of the Terschelling lightship to Udir; a line from there across the point sixty-two degrees north latitude, five longitude, westward along sixty-two degrees to a point three nautical miles south of the south point of Farover (Faroe Islands?); from there across the point sixty-two degrees north—degree west to sixty-one degrees north, 15 degrees west; then 57 degrees north, 20 degrees west to 47 degrees north, 20 degrees west; further, to 43 degrees north, 15 degrees west; then one degree latitude 43 degrees north to the point 20 nautical miles distance along the Spanish north coast as far as the French frontier.

"Concerning the south in the Mediterranean: For neutral shipping there remains open the sea district west of a line from Pt. de Les Paquett'lo 38 degrees, 20 minutes north and six degrees east, as well as north and west of a zone sixty sea miles broad along the north African coast.

"In order to connect this sea district with Greece, the zone leads 20 sea miles in width north or east, following this line 38 ~~degrees north and~~ 11 [illegible] minutes east to 34 degrees north and 11 degrees 30 minutes east to 34 degrees north and 22 degrees 30 minutes east. From there it leads to a zone 20 sea miles broad west of 22 degrees 30 minutes each longitude into Greek territorial waters.

"Neutral ships plying within the barred zones do so at their own risk. Although precautions are being taken to spare neutral ships which on February 1 are on the way to ports in the barred zone during an appropriate delay, yet it is urgently to be advised that they should be warned and directed to other routes by all means available.

Neutral ships lying in ports of the barred zones can with the same safety abandon the barred zones if they sail before Feb. 5, and take the shortest route into the open district.

WHERE THEY MAY TRAVEL.

"Traffic of regular American passenger steamers can go on unmolested if:

"A. Falmouth is taken as the port of destination, and if,

"B. On the going and return journey the Scilly Islands as well as the point fifty degrees north, 20 degrees west, be steered on. Along this route no German mines will be laid;

"C. If steamers on this journey bear the following special signals, which only they will be permitted to display in American ports: A coating of paint on the ship's hull and the superstructure in vertical stripes three metres broad, alternating white and red; on every mast a large flag of checkered white and red, on the stern the American national flag; during darkness the national flag and the coat of paint to be as easily recognizable as possible from a distance, and the ships must be completely and brightly illuminated.

"D. If only one steamer runs each week in each direction, arriving at Falmouth on Sundays, leaving Falmouth on Wednesdays.

"E. If guarantees and assurances are given by the American Government that these steamers carry no contraband (according to the German list of contraband).

"Two copies of maps on which the barred zones are outlined are added."

SHIPS WILL SAIL AS USUAL.

A New York report: Orders were and her allies are prepared to meet Germany's moves in her submarine campaign, it was authoritatively asserted in shipping circles here to-night. Entente powers was convinced weeks ago that ruthless warfare with undersea boats would be decreed sooner or later, and have known for ten days that the decision had been reached it was said.

The ports of Liverpool and Bordeaux will be kept open at all hazards, British steamship representatives asserted, even if it becomes necessary to convoy every merchant ship which crosses the Atlantic. The first step to be taken by the British Admiralty, which virtually controls the merchant fleet of the Allies, will be to arm every ship with guns fore and aft for defensive purposes, it was predicted.

To meet the emergency which it was confidently expected would arise eventually, the British Government has been assembling for months, it was said, a large fleet of small, fast cruisers to be used as "submarine chasers." This type of war craft has proven very effective against undersea boats, well informed shipping men declared.

Agents of British lines declared the Admiralty now has a fleet of 4,000 vessels available to keep these lanes clear of raiders and submarines and to act as convoys.

The Admiralty has so arranged sailings and bookings, it was explained, that they can be changed without delay to meet whatever circumstances may arise. The assertion was made that there will be no interruption in the sailings from American ports of ships flying the flags of the Entente allies.

It was considered probable, however, that vessels flying neutral colors, will be kept in port until instructions are received from their Governments. This is certain to be true in the case of Dutch steamships.

A marked advance in marine insurance rates to-morrow was considered to-night to be inevitable. One way rates to-day for American vessels were 7 per cent, while there was a ten per cent. war risk rate on ships clearing for Mediterranean ports.

ARCTIC COLD FIGHTS ENEMY

Bitter Weather is Terrible Blow to Germany.

Potato Famine is Having Dire Results.

Amsterdam Cable.——Germany always dreaded the occurrence of a hard winter during the war, realizing that a situation must arise from the cold of which it would be impossible to exaggerate the gravity. That moment has arrived.

General January has now joined the [illegible] and Arctic weather prevails in the empire. Deep snow and severe frost accompanying the interruption of traffic, has partially paralyzed the economic life of the nation. Berlin presents a picture of misery, which is heightened by the pressing food problems. Everyone familiar with Germany knows the immense importance of potatoes as a factor in the nation's daily life. In Germany, as in Holland, potatoes form the staple article of food of the masses. Potatoes are very susceptible to damage by frost, and although every effort has been made by Germany to prevent details of the losses reaching foreign countries, enough is known to indicate the extreme seriousness of the position. Collective feeding in Berlin, which began in October on a voluntary basis, is now extending rapidly and producing a decline in the standard of life. Fears are entertained that institutions concerned will soon no longer be able to receive adequate supplies. The deficiency in supplies, accentuated by the inadequate traffic facilities, is producing intense suffering just when a more generous feeding both in quantity and quality, is indispensable. Germany is now realizing the mockery of substitute foodstuffs. This is admitted even in letters allowed to pass the frontier for publication in Holland. To-day's Handelsblad has an article from its Berlin correspondent dated Jan. [illegible], which says no organization can feed 600,000 persons adequately and equally from a centralized office dispensing insufficient supplies. That Food Controller Batocki himself is unable to do it he has admitted, although his latest utterance maintains it is possible to win through with care. The opinion is hardening against the measure that of maximum prices has caused articles to disappear from the market. People are asking whether less severe regulations, as in Austria and Hungary, are not better. The question, however, is whether the productive capacity of Germany is large enough to allow her to imitate the example of Austria-Hungary.

GERMANS AGAIN IN HOLY WRATH

Amsterdam, Holland, Cable, via London.- Emperor William, replying to a telegram received by him from the director of the Province of Brandenburg, says a despatch from Berlin, sent this message:

"After thirty months of warfare, rich in sacrifices, the entire people, in holy wrath at the rejection of my peace offer, is inspired anew with doubled strength and stands as one man."

ALLEGED PLOT TO POISON BRITISH PREMIER AND AIDE

Three Women and a Man In Conspiracy Against Lloyd George and Henderson.

Women Are Suffs., Man a Conscientious Objector---Up In Derby Court.

Derby Cable says——Mrs. Alice Wheeldon, her two daughters, and the husband of one of them, Alfred George Mason, were charged at the Guildhall here to-day with conspiring to murder Premier Lloyd George and Arthur Henderson, member of the House of Commons and of the War Council.

Information laid by an inspector of Scotland Yard charged "that the defendants on divers days between Dec. 25th and the date of laying this information did amongst themselves unlawfully and wickedly conspire, confederate and agree together against the Right Honorable David Lloyd George and the Right Hon. Arthur Henderson, wilfully and with malice aforethought to kill and murder, contrary to the Offences Against Persons Act of 1861, and against the peace of our lord the King, his crown and dignity."

The information is signed by A. H. Bodkin, prosecuting on behalf of the Crown.

After formal evidence concerning the arrest had been given, the case was adjourned until Saturday.

Mrs. Wheeldon, who is 50 years of age, resides in Derby with her daughter, Ann, aged 27, who is school teacher here. Mason, who is 24, is a chemist at Southampton.

On being arrested, the defendants denied any knowledge of the charge. They declined to make any statement.

No details in regard to the case were disclosed in the police court proceedings, but it is understood, the charge will be made that the defendants proposed to use poison.

The enquiries by Scotland Yard began during the week-end. The Wheeldons, who live in Pear Tree Road, a good district, are well-known in Derby in connection with the suffrage movement. Mason is a conscientious objector to military service.

THE "SKETCH'S" STORY.

London Cable.——The Daily Sketch says:

"The police have unearthed what is believed to be a plot to murder the Premier, with the result that Mrs. Wheeldon, of Derby, Miss Hetty Wheeldon, her daughter, Mrs. Mason, another daughter, and Alfred Mason, the latter's husband, have been arrested. They were taken to the police station and formally charged with conspiring together to murder Mr. Lloyd George. They will be taken before a magistrate at Derby on Wednesday. It is understood only formal evidence will be given then, but later in the week the charges will be thoroughly investigated.

"The details are yet unknown, but it is understood the conspirators aimed at causing the Premier's death by poison."

The Sketch says the persons charged with the conspiracy are the three women and the man whose arrest "on a remarkable conspiracy charge" was reported in the newspapers this morning.

A despatch from London last night quoted the Daily Mail as saying that the man and two of the women were arrested at Derby and the third woman at Southampton, that all of them would be arraigned to-day at Derby, and that "their trial probably will attract the widest public attention."

DANISH SEA CAPTAIN BLUFFED CAPTAIN OF GERMAN U-BOAT

Refused, With Crew to Leave Ship, and Was Left Undisturbed.

Copenhagen Cable, via London——According to the Extrabladet, the captain of the Danish steamer Iris, which arrived at Copenhagen on Tuesday, defied a German submarine which threatened to sink his ship, and compelled the submarine commander to permit him to pass. The Iris encountered the submarine while it was engaged in sinking another boat. The Danish craft was ordered to stop and was boarded by the submarine captain, who inspected its papers and ordered the crew to take to the small boats. The Danish captain refused, saying that the Iris was bound from one neutral country to another and had no contraband on board. He added:

"You may sink us, but I and my men will remain on board."

After threats and arguments had failed to alter the determination of the captain of the Iris, the submarine commander returned to his own ship and allowed the steamer to proceed.

KING APPEALS TO MEN OVER AGE TO VOLUNTEER FOR HOME DEFENCE

Wants Big Body of Men to Serve Under the Duke of Connaught.

London Cable.——King George has sent a letter to the Lords-Lieutenant of counties throughout the country, appealing to men over military age to enroll in a volunteer force for home defence. The letter recalls the Territorial force, which was originally intended for home service, but has since gone to the front.

After expressing his thanks to the Territorials who have gone to France, the King continues:

"While they are thus fighting the battles of the Empire abroad, we must organize and equip a force to take their place as defenders of these shores in the case of an invasion."

The King refers to the fact that some volunteers have already been enrolled, and that the Duke of Connaught has been appointed their commander, and concludes:

"I am confident that all who are now prevented from undertaking active service abroad will join the volunteers."

MAY CLEAR THE RUSSIAN CLOUD

Great Good Looked for From Allies' Conference.

Though Reactionary is Still in Control.

New York Report.—A cable to the Tribune from London last night says:

The conference in Petrograd of the Allied delegates is expected to result in great improvement in the Russian situation, in both a military and financial way, and to help to some extent in the economic reorganization which is going forward.

The political situation is another question. Protopopoff remains the dominating [illegible] and as long as that is the case, the political outlook of the empire must be considered most dubious.

Protopopoff's reactionary tendencies are, moreover, rapidly increasing the complexity of the other problems with which Russian has to deal, because of the alienation of the Liberals, who are the most vigorous and able of the the Russians.

The extreme delicacy of attempting any influence on the internal affairs of the empire doubtless will prevent any open effort to relieve this situation, but it is hoped, nevertheless, that some change can be brought about indirectly.

Lord Milner, the head of the British delegation, in the short time that he has been a member of the British Government, has won the confidence and respect of the French and Italians, because of his keen powers of analysis. He is expected to meet with similar success in Russia.

As a member of the British triumvirate, he has unlimited power to deal with the perplexing questions he has to face and can decide the points that arise on the spot.

Lord Revelstoke, another member of the delegation, represents great financial interests, and comes of a family which for generations has had a part in all Anglo-Russian financing.

General Wilson, the third of the British envoys, is considered one of the brainiest of Britain's military leaders. Wilson and General Castelnau, of the French staff, who is also there to explain the plans and views of the western allies, will be in a position to reach a unity of military action with the Russian high command, such as has hitherto been impossible, because of the delays in communication. The effect of this is expected to show as soon as the spring fighting gets under way.

Emil Wankel Passes Away in His 85th Year

On Wednesday night, Jan'y 31st one of the older residents of this town and district passed away in the person of Emil Wankel, in his 85th year. He had not been very well the past few months and owing to advanced years it was difficult for him to regain strength and the past few weeks he has declined rapidly.

Mr. Wankel was born in Germany, but left it just as he was turning 19 years of age, for a country with more privileges and less militarism. He first came to Elmira, where he worked as a mason. Here he settled, and later married Elizabeth Conrad who still survives him. He followed his trade and developed as an architect and builder.

About forty years ago he came to Saugeen Township where he was successful with farming on the second concession. After about twenty years farming he conducted the general store at North Bruce. Fourteen years ago he moved to Port Elgin and lived retired with his wife and daughter.

Mr. Wankel was a staunch Liberal and in religion a devoted member of the Lutheran church. He was head of a family of sons and daughters, who have made their homes in various parts of America, and who are prominent in the places in which they live. He was a kindly man, a quiet and unassuming gentleman, and much respected by everyone. His life was one of activity and service, in which the community as a whole benefited.

The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon, being held over for some of the family living at a distance, and was conducted by Rev. Mr. Zeigler.

Besides a sorrowing wife who, in her declining years, feels keenly the loss of her companion, there are left six sons and five daughters: August, at Seaforth; Emil, at Edmonton; Wm., at Port Elgin; Fred, at Grand Rapids, N. D.; George, at Russel, N. D.; Oscar at LaMoure, N. D.; Mrs. Bylngton, Beltraimi; Minn.; Mrs. Maas, Saugeen; Mrs. O. G. Farnsworth, Rathdrum; Mrs. C. Farnsworth, Belt, Montana; and Miss Maud, at home.

The Paper They Look For

Mrs. M. A. Blakely writing from Bagley Sask. says: "Inclosed is $1.50 for my Times to Feby 1918. We won't forget to pay for The Times, as it's the first paper we open when our mail comes. We are always interested in the old home folks."

Fine Time.

The Masons had a fine time Thursday night when the D. D. G. M. Mayor Johnston of Walkerton visited the lodge. The third degree was conferred in good style, after which a social time was enjoyed around the festive board.

W. M. Bro. Chapman was toastmaster for the occasion. Mayor Johnston reviewed the work of the Masonic order in an interesting manner. Others responding to the various toast were Geo. Jamieson, Alex Heaton, T. B. McBride, O Carrier, J. W. Heany, A. F George, S. H. Langford, J. W. Miller, Gus. Miller, E. Martin, F. R. Barber, E. R. Sayles

Council Meeting

The Reeve and Councillors Eidt, Cottrill and Begg were present at the council meeting on Friday night.

Most of the time was used discussing the waterworks, the cost of the system and the revenue derived. The clerk was instructed to address other towns as to the cost of pumping and rates charged.

A grant of $10 was made to the Sick Children's hospital.

The shade trees were the subject of discussion. Finally the streets committee were instructed to have trees properly trimmed.

The town's share of the weigh scale receipts amounted to $10. The public school requisitioned $167 and the public library $200.

The accounts were: Geo. Fisher, $77.10, J. A. Chapman, $10; Electric Light Co. $55.75; W. C. Wilson Co, $7.95; Lake Erie Coal Co. $116.93; D. Geddes, $10.00; W. Brown, $23; Municipal World, $4.00; J. B. Cottrill, $5.60; McColl Bros, $7.50; Geo. Chapman, $120.

A poor working woman asks The Times to mention that potatoes and coal were stolen from her place last week.

Any subscriber moving to a different address should notify The Times at once.

Right From Holland

An interesting visitor in Port Elgin last week was a gentleman from Holland, Mr. Blokker, who left the old Dutch Country a few weeks ago in the interests of his firm, which handle all kinds of bulbs. He calls on Falconer Bros. and J. J. George here to whom he sells great quantities of bulbs which produce those beautiful flowers. Mr. Blokker had many interesting things to tell of the great war, and says that while his country is small it takes its stand against allowing any violation of its neutrality upon the part of Germany.

Social Evening

The Young People's Bible Class, which by the way, is an active organization and growing rapidly, held a social evening Friday night in the Presbyterian church.

Although the weather was very stormy there was a nice gathering.

Mrs. H. D. McLaren, the president, occupied the chair, and carried out a very enjoyable program given by the following: Song, Miss Murker; Instrumental, Reg. Mann; Reading, Mrs. H. D. McLaren; Instrumental, Nellie McDuff; Instrumental, Miss Sutherland.

One of the chief features was a debate, "Resolved that the position of the U. S. as regards neutrality is justifiable." The affirmative was championed by Reg Mann and Nellie McDuff, and the negative by Walter Miller and May Jamieson. Some excellent arguments were presented on both sides, and the debate was not only profitable to the debaters, but to all who heard it. The decision went to the negative side.

Refreshments were enjoyed at the close.

Willow Creek

Mr. John Hyde has purchased the church which stands on his premises. John will probably turn the building into a munition plant.

The Evangelistic meetings which commenced here have been postponed for some time. The pastor was preaching to very small attendances.

Mr Wm. Wrightson and Mr D. Tennant were at Guelph hospital, receiving treatment for appendicitis.

Two young ladies who were interested in the domestic course, while on their way home noticed their cutter was hitting their horse's heels. To improve matters they made the backholds longer resulting in a run a way.

Hockey Notes

Ebenezer has some team of hockeyists out there. A team of mixed juniors and seniors went from here last Thursday night and got the worst of it by 10 to nothing.

A team of girls were to have played the Ebenezer girls last week, but the weather was too stormy. Hope they don't beat our girls as badly as they trimmed our boys.

Friday afternoon Paisley hockey team surprised the locals by coming up to play hockey. The Port team knew nothing of it and naturally there was no crowd to see the game. The Port team won 8 to 6. It was a good game the locals having strengthened up with Ranney in goal and M. Kuhl at point.

J. T. Richardson is president of Paisley Agricultural Society. There was no surplus last year, the society getting rain insurance.

Warden Izzard Banquetted

Port Elgin honored its chief citizen on Friday night by tendering a banquet to Reeve Izzard, who was elected by acclamation to the Wardenship of the county.

The affair was held at the Arlington hotel, where all the covers were taken up, and a happy company of representative men from the town and county gathered around the festive board, where in speech and song they paid tribute to Warden Izzard, gloried in the Empire to which they belonged, and set forth aims and objects for the upbuilding of of the community and county.

The esteemed clerk of the town, Mr. David Geddes, was the toastmaster, and the capable manner in which he handled the toasts and the affairs of the evening was the subject of much favorable comment.

After honoring the King, the chairman's first duty was that of reading letters of regret from several, who, owing to illness in some cases, and the extreme inclemency of the weather, were not able to be present:—Ex-Warden, John Pierson, ex warden Wm. McIntosh, ex-Warden, Alex. McCannel, ex-Warden, Alex. Mewhinney; Hugh Clark, M. P., D. Robertson K C.; Reeve Bell, Reeve Johnson, County Clerk Malcolmson, Reeve Hunter, J. A. Chapman, A E. Nelson, J. J. Hunter, Dr. McLeod.

Mr Geddes remarked that he was gratified that the citizens had seen fit to honor the warden in such a handsome way. He had been associated with the reeve for many years, and acknowledged the service he had rendered to the town and county, after which he called on the gathering to drink to the toast of "Our Empire"

Mr. W. F. Bald, had this heavy task to do, and to say that it could not have been in better hands may seem a large statement, but it is true. Never has there been given in this section of the province a finer resume of the history and achievements of the Empire than that given by the inspector. Again it was the privilege of those present to listen to facts and accomplishments of the army, the navy and the statesmen clothed in the choicest language—eloquence par excellence. Mr. Bald impressively contrasted the efficiency of the empire with its high purpose of making people productive and happy, as compared to the efficiency of the Kaiser's rule to murder and pillage. In impressive and convincing language he pictured the sacrifices of the men who are fighting the battles to day, to overcome the murder-spirit of the Prussian. Canada's part in the empire plan was eloquently referred to, in that she was vieing with all the other colonies to produce men and money in defence of the empire. "Autocracies must pass," said the inspector, "Germany and her hymn of hate must be dispersed: Russia will grant the people an opportunity to govern themselves. We are fighting a fight to end all war. We have put ourselves to a great task, and there must be no turning back." The address lasted an hour, the speaker rising frequently to splendid heights of oratory, and the address was frequently punctuated with applause.

Mr. Fred Elliott in a few well-chosen remarks proposed the toast to "Our Parliaments". He thought the Parliamentarians should have the sympathy of all men, as these were very strenuous times. Mr. C. M. Bowman briefly drew attention to the great responsibility of the men who go to Parliament. The governments are spending, and would continue to spend, for war purposes. The assumption of the burdens is what will make an appreciative people, and bring to the surface real leaders. Trials brought out a high order of citizenship, and he was concerned in a great development on the part of all classes, because of the burdens assumed. He was looking for a greater development of community spirit, and he urged all present to assist in the movement for greater co-operation between the state and the people. In closing he paid a neat tribute to the warden.

"The Warden" was proposed by E. R. Sayles. When Mr. Izzard rose to respond he was given an ovation by the gathering. His first words were that of thanks. He hardly thought himself deserving, and rather looked upon his municipal work as that of duty to his fellows. He, however, wanted everyone to know that he sincerely appreciated the magnificent way in which the citizens had honored him. He feelingly referred to the banquet tendered to the late Harry Hilker, and reviewed some of his climb up the ladder of municipal politics to the warden's chair. He was proud of his county for the lead it had taken in patriotic work, and the men had responded to the call to arms. He looked for a brighter day for his home town and his county. Hydro power would be along soon, and good roads would be undertaken in due time. He felt that he was occupying a very important position in a very important time, and he urged the loyalty of every citizen towards building up a progressive town and county.

The toast to "Our County" was appropriately proposed by Reeve Christie. He paid a neat tribute to Warden Izzard, and said he was proud to do his little bit in placing him in the high position. He referred to the fact that Mr. Izzard's was the first acclamation to the wardenship. Mr. Christie also pointed to the spirit of the men of the county council in providing liberal patriotic grants. In closing he appealed for closer co-operation of the men of the district to make the county a leader in agriculture and commerce, as she had led in furnishing men and money for the war.

Ex Reeve Robert Smythe was received with applause as he rose to respond to the toast. He said that Warden Izzard was too big for wire-pulling and intrigue to procure positions, and being elected warden by acclamation the office sought the man. He noted that the warden was an independent, a liberal and a conservative, but not in the political sense. He did his own thinking. He was liberal to others, and he considered well every step. Mr. Smythe drew attention to the fact that the Northern part of the county of Bruce was not productive, and he believed that an effort should be made to seek Govt. aid to assist the people living up there to go to better agricultural districts, where their lives and their work would count for more. The north part was more suited to shipbuilding and training men for the navy. Mr. Smythe was applauded for his pithy speech, which contained many good suggestions.

"Our Town" was proposed by Councillor Cottrill, and responses were made by Councillors Begg, and Pattison, acknowledging the ability of their reeve and warden. Mr. Pattison pointing out the advantages of living in the prettiest, cleanest and healthiest place in the Dominion.

To Mr. A. F. George, the chairman of the high school, fell the responsibility of proposing the toast to "Our Educational Interests." Mr. George took occasion to point out what it meant to the surrounding country to have a high school right near home, and asked that those living in the district call it THEIR school. Port Elgin was a town of schools and churches, and the people had privileges not afforded in every community.

In responding, Principal Cameron was somewhat handicapped by the lateness of the hour. He prefaced his remarks with some witticisms which were appreciated by the gathering, and launched into an address which was crammed full of interest and information on the educational system as existing, with a prophecy of what might be in the future. The aim of education should be to fit the boy for life. The day of ornament is past. This is a practical age, and the educational systems must be made to equip the youth for taking a big part in every department. He believed that vocational training should be undertaken by the state, and he wanted it spread to all parts, and not to a few large centres.

Principal Shaw, of the public school, in a few very appropriate remarks, alluded to the lateness of the hour, congratulated the warden, and asked to be excused from speech-making.

"Manufacturing Interests" was taken care of by Mr. Stevens. He referred to the matter of technical education brought out by Principal Cameron. He noted that few boys were being apprenticed to trades, and were thereby not becoming skilled artisans. He hoped that there would be manual training in all schools, and that it would reach the smaller places as well. He noted that manufacturers were generally prosperous, but that problems were many. Transportation was greatly congested, and orders for stock were months delayed. He said there would be a period of readjustment after the war, and it might mean considerable unemployment, but he believed that period would be brief in Canada. The association of manufacturers to get after the export trade of the great allied nations would help the smaller concerns. There was a larger vision on the part all employers of labor, and if they displayed the same pluck and energy as the soldiers who are fighting the battles there would not be much trouble in placing the men after the war.

"The Ladies", connected with the names of G. Chapman and J. H. Wismer brought forth neat speeches.

After a toast to Mine Host Baker, the gathering sang the National Anthem and closed a most profitable gathering.

NOTES

It was a sincere compliment paid to the warden and the committee in charge of the banquet when so many representative men from the townships were willing to face the storm to be present.

The menu provided by Mine Host Baker was all that could be desired. The meal was splendidly served, and the several courses were carried out in perfect order and despatch.

The souvenir menu and toast list, very favorably commented on, was printed at The Times office. There were 25 printed extra, for sale to those who may desire to send one to old residents and friends now absent. The price is 10 cents each.

Alex. Brunton, Saugeen's Scottish bard, says he has no fear of the result of the war. Like Romans of old, the Germans may go through France, they may over-run England, but they'll have to stop when they get to Scotland. Alex. did much with his witty sayings and rousing songs to make a jolly time.

Interspersing the addresses were two very appropriate and inspiring songs, "His Majesty" by H. H. Stevens, and "Dear Canada", by Jos. Thomson. Both gentleman were in excellent voice and following as they did, rousing speeches, made a fitting climax in each case.

Miss Olive Sutherland delighted all the men with instrumentals during the dinner. Her excellent choice of selections, put everyone in joyful mood.

F. R. Barber, chairman, and his committee are to be congratulated. Everything was carried along without a hitch.

The banquet tables looked beautiful, decorated with cut flowers.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON VII. February 18, 1917.

Jesus heals a nobleman's son.—John 4: 43-54.

COMMENTARY.—I. Christ's return to Galilee (vs. 43-45). 43. After the two days. (R. V.)—After the two days that Jesus was constrained to remain at Sychar to preach to the people. It is evident that his work there was permanent from the fact that Philip, Peter and John met with marked success in their ministry in Samaria a few years later (Acts 8: 5-25). Went into Galilee—Jesus and his disciples were on their way from Judea to Galilee when they halted at Jacob's well. It was about twenty miles from there to the border of Galilee, and nearly twenty more on to Cana. 44. A prophet hath no honor in his own country.—In Matt. 13: 57, Mark 6:4 and Luke 4: 24, Jesus speaks of Nazareth as his own country. He was going into Galilee to continue his ministry, but not to Nazareth at this time, for that being his own country, he would not be well received. A second view is thus expressed by Whedon: "From Samaria, where Jesus was honored, he departs after a brief sojourn, to his own country, Galilee, where he was, in the comparison, without honor; and he must go to win their honor, and convert, if possible, their hearts form contempt to adoration." A third view is that, since Judea was the place of Christ's birth, the centre of the Jewish religion and his Father's country, where he had not been enthusiastically received; hence he was going into Galilee where the people would welcome his ministry. The first view appears the most reasonable. 45. The Galileans received him—They were not so firmly wedded to Jewish traditions and were not so prejudiced against those who did not bear the marks of the Jewish hierarchy as were the Jews of Judea, hence they were open to conviction. Many Galileans had been at the Passover in Jerusalem, where Jesus drove out the traffickers from the temple and saw others of his works and were convinced that he was the Messiah. They also went unto the feast—The males among the Israelites were required to attend the three great feasts at Jerusalem each year. The feast of the Passover was one of them. The other two were Pentecost and the feast of Tabernacles. The people were to bring an offering to the Lord on each of these occasions.

II. The nobleman's request (vs. 46-49). 46. Cana of Galilee—This was a town four or five miles northeast of Nazareth. It was here that Jesus performed his first miracle, that of turning water into wine. Nathanael, one of His disciples, lived in Cana (John 21. 2). A certain nobleman—A man who held a responsible position in the Roman government and lived in Capernaum. We are not informed as to his name, and the suggestion that it was Chuza, whose wife Joanna ministered to Jesus (Luke 8. 3), is mere conjecture. At Capernaum—Capernaum was a city of considerable importance in the time of Christ. It was situated on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee. Excavations have revealed interesting ruins there, some of which appear to be those of a synagogue, possibly that built by a centurion (Luke 7.5). 47. When he heard—The nobleman had heard of Jesus and of the wonderful works which He did, and he was convinced that He had power to heal his son, who was at the point of death. He had heard that He was in Galilee and hence was within reach. Went unto Him, and besought Him—His anxiety about his son and his confidence in Jesus lead him to make the journey of twenty or twenty-five miles from Capernaum to Cana to entreat Jesus to go to his home. Come down—Capernaum being on the shore of the Sea of Galilee and Cana being on the hills, there was a descent of about two thousand feet in passing from Cana to Capernaum. 48. Except ye see signs and wonders—The words of this verse are, as it were, an ejaculation, a thinking aloud of Jesus. He sees that to awaken this man He must more than heal his son; He must to that sign add an additional wonder.—Whedon. Christ's miracles are never mere wonders to excite astonishment; they are signs of heavenly truths as well, and this is their primary characteristic.—Plummer. Ye will not believe—The great desire of Jesus was to convince the people that the kingdom of God was within their reach. He would have them believe in his Messiahship for their own present and eternal salvation. Therefore He was ready to perform miracles to bring the people to accept the truth by which alone they could be saved. 49. The nobleman saith unto Him— This troubled father had not entrusted this urgent matter to another, but had come himself. If he had pride of position, he laid it aside to come personally to Jesus for relief. Sir, come down ere my child die—The longing desire for his child's recovery was mixed with faith. He had no hope that his son would live if Jesus did not heal him and he believed that Jesus could raise him up. He thought it necessary for Jesus to go where the sick one was in order to restore him to health, hence the urgency of his plea for Him to go down to Capernaum. He was about to receive a more comprehensive understanding of the power of Jesus.

III. The rewards of faith (vs. 50-54). 50. Go thy way; thy son liveth—The answer to the nobleman's earnest plea had come, but not in the way he had expected. The words that fell from the lips of Jesus were such words as he had never heard before. "Thy son liveth," must have thrilled the soul of that father with joy. The man believed the word—His idea that Jesus must be at his son's bedside to cure him was at once dispelled, and his faith accepted his word. He saw no evidence that his son would recover, but he took Jesus at his word. He went his way—He acted his faith and obeyed the Master. He had no occasion to plead longer with Jesus. The nobleman had faith when he started from Capernaum. He also had faith as he began his homeward journey, otherwise he would have continued his plea for Jesus to go home with him. 51. His servants met him—On his way to Capernaum he met his servants, who had been sent to tell him the good news of his son's recovery. Thy son liveth—The nobleman had heard these very words from Jesus some time before this and he believed them and was comforted, and hearing them now from his servants assured him that he had not trusted Jesus in vain. 52. Enquired ....the hour—It was natural that he should ask this question, for he wished to know whether the cure was wrought at the time Jesus spoke the words, "Thy son liveth," or later. Began to amend—Began to recover. Yesterday at the seventh hour—According to Jewish reckoning this would be one o'clock in the afternoon. The nobleman had probably started early in the morning to find Jesus, and had arrived in Cana at about noon. His interview with Jesus was at one o'clock, and he started homeward as soon as he conveniently could. It would be difficult to make the journey to Capernaum, as tired as he and his beasts would naturally be, the same day, hence it is natural that he should stop for the night at some village on the way. The fever left him—It was not a case of slow recovery, but the disease let go its hold at once. 53. The father knew—The cure appealed to him as having been wrought by the power of Jesus. It was not a natural recovery nor was it a mere coincidence. It was a miracle. Himself believed, and his whole house—The man's faith was rewarded in the healing of his son. It was rewarded in his own salvation. It was rewarded in a most welcome manner in the salvation of his entire household. 54. This is again the second miracle—When Jesus came into Galilee after his baptism, he performed the miracle in Cana of changing the water into wine; and when he came again into Galilee, from Judea, he healed the nobleman's son. The former miracle confirmed the faith of the disciples in him and the latter convinced the nobleman and his family of Christ's Messiahship.

Questions.—What results followed the discourse of Jesus at Jacob's well? What did Jesus say about the harvest? How did the people of Galilee regard Jesus? What was the nobleman's errand to Cana? What answer did Jesus give? How did the nobleman show his faith in Jesus? How was his faith rewarded? What word did the nobleman's servants bring to him from home? What question did he ask them?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Living Faith.

I. Developed under test.

II. Evidenced by obedience.

I. Developed under test. This lesson brings out clearly Christ's discernment of human character, his compassion for human suffering, and his appreciation of living faith. The urgent request which came to Jesus from the nobleman was the occasion, though not the cause, of his exclamation, "Except ye see signs and wonders," in which he apostrophized the whole multitude of his countrymen. All the lavishing of his love, all the grace and truth which stood radiant in his life, fell upon blind eyes, incapable of beholding his beauty. The manifest revelation of a godlike character had no power with them equal to outward wonders. The [illegible] of his nature did not appeal to them. They had no eyes for his tenderness, no ears for his wisdom. The [illegible] of it all came [illegible] to the Master's heart and called forth his lament. Jesus did not put forth the mere power of his miracles as the chief plan of his divine coming. He [illegible] his almighty power chiefly in showing compassion and mercy. So much did he cherish the smallest degree of faith, that he gave special attention to its growth in every individual where it could be found. It stood out in bold contrast to the attitude of the nation as he saw it in the nobleman. His method with the nobleman was to make plain to him what he had that was of value in securing the grant of his appeal. The great peculiarity of this second miracle in Cana is that it is detailed throughout so as to develop the perfect faith. It was Jesus' method to lead those who sought his help to such inward spiritual acquaintance with, and confidence in, himself that they trusted his word before they beheld his work. Jesus accepted the loving earnestness and tenacity of the nobleman. Fatherly affection and anxiety made the nobleman alert to any prospect of help. Affliction brought him to Jesus. Faith was substance in his faith. It was not mere sentiment. It had an active quality. It moved him to make every effort to obtain help from Jesus, and yet he labored under misconceptions. His faith began as a belief that Jesus could work a physical miracle when present with his son. He did not know of Jesus' spiritual power or his own need of spiritual health. The spirit of persistency and importunity showed that he did not regard the words of Jesus as any rejection of his appeal. His powerlessness led him to a more unreserved dependence on the power of Jesus. He stood before him resolved not to go away without Jesus' help. He held fast by as much of Jesus' character the beginning of progress. as he could apprehend. That marked

II. Evidence of obedience. The nobleman was tested in his humility, which might have wounded the pride of one in his station. He was tested in his faith by being required to trust a word. His confident departure proved the power of his faith. The granting of the father's appeal in the restoration of his son depended upon the obedience of that moment when Jesus said, "Go thy way." He believed the assurance, "Thy son liveth," and therefore acted in accordance with Christ's instruction. A great onward step was taken when Jesus' word for the cure was accepted in place of his personal visit. The nobleman trusted in what Jesus said, and found his [illegible]. His was the faith of a full surrender and devotion, which reached its highest development in personal experience. Having made a spiritual tendency into the father's heart, Jesus granted his request. He rewarded the father's faith and healed the son's malady. Faith was crowned and perfected by the incontestable proof of the miracle. The narrative relates the effect upon the entire household. They had the same evidence and outlook of the same joy. When the nobleman learned that the hour of Christ's utterance was the hour of his son's healing, there remained no cloud to mar the brightness of his faith. The memory of his Lord's mercy would never fade from his mind. The change which was produced in his spiritual being surpassed all else. In tracing Christ's method in the development of the nobleman's faith we find he first discovered to him its radical defect. He then tested its inward sincerity. He denied his formal request, but granted his essential petition. Directness and persistence in prayer brought physical and spiritual life to the household. T. R. A.

THE LIBRARY EVERY FARMER SHOULD HAVE

What Books to Buy and What Books to Avoid—Study Your Business, Your Country and Life—Build Up Your Very Own Library.

With the next few months of long winter evenings would it not be a good thing for the farming community to make some arrangements for a supply of reading material. Cultivating the soil is good, without a doubt, but why not give the mind a little cultivation as well? "But—we have no circulation library here in the country," objects someone, "and books are expensive to buy." In my opinion it is the book that one is willing to pay good money for that is going to be read, considered and digested. If the Baconian philosophy is true the farmer need not regret very much Mr. Carnegie's oversight in not providing him with free copies of Laura Jean Libby or the average best seller. It's a little too easy to get the borrowing habit when convenient to public library. Nine times out of ten the books read under these circumstances are strictly "punk." Mind I am making no attempt to discredit what is a splendid institution and altogether worth while, but like most big things there is a weak side to it. Hence, the man who gets his mail at Jones' Corner should not envy the urbanite and his be-pillared book-temple. All he has to do is to start a better one—for his own needs—and at a very reasonable outlay.

One of the principal things to remember is, that a library is not necessarily a collection of books. To deserve the name it must mean more than that. It cannot be bought by the foot or the yard, according to the limit of one's pocketbook. The real thing is a natural outgrowth of the owner's tastes and requirements. It may have its beginning in one volume or a dozen and may be added to from time to time as circumstances suggest.

REAL AGRICULTURAL BOOKS.

To get together a number of authoritative works along the line of one's own business, makes a good starting point. A man should be a better farmer if familiar with "why" as well as the "how." Abnormal seasons, such as we have experienced for the last two years, are sure to create new problems. One who has trained himself by practice and experience to plow a straight furrow, feed a prize winning steer or breed a cow into the advanced Registry, will be all the better plowman, feeder or breeder if he knows what the best agricultural books have to say about these subjects. For instance, such a book is "The Fat of the Land," by John Williams Streeter and published by Grosset and Dunlaps, New York. When it came out ten or twelve years ago it created quite a stir and was widely read. I remember hearing the late Dr. James refer to this book some years ago while addressing a meeting of dairymen. "If," said he, "you think of buying some reading matter, and have only the price of one book to invest, by all means buy "The Fat of the Land," it will pay you." I, for one, took the advice and found it gilt-edged. Another book from which I have derived a good deal of pleasure and profit is entitled "Our Farming," by T. B. Terry, of Ohio, and published by The Farmer Co. of Philadelphia. Other books that should find a place in any farm library are Henry's "Feeds and Feeding," which stands unsurpassed in its line; Roberts' Fertility of the Soil; Davenport's Principles of Breeding, and the Bailey books that cover a wide range of horticultural topics.

Then I see no reason why the farmer may not profitably develop a sort of all-roundness in his reading. We know, or ought to know, that production is only half of his business. No matter how bountiful in yield or how splendid the quality of his crops, if there is no market for them, his labor has been in vain. Really there is no getting around the fact that a prosperous agriculture depends in a large measure on a proper system of distribution. To-day, market regulations and almost everything connected with the farmer's selling operations, has been the work of somebody else. What more important move could be made, then, than reading some of the books and periodicals dealing with this phase of the situation.

But after one has waded through the intricacies of science and economics, he is apt to welcome something of an entertaining nature. A steady diet of beefsteak gets monotonous; a variety menu keeps a proper balance and makes us ready for more. In the realm of literature, books of fiction serve as a kind of desert, but if one happens to like pie, that is no reason why he should make a meal of it. I am, by no means, one of those who cry down fiction, provided it has some elements of value in it. There are, however, so many books in this class published nowadays that in buying it is well to practice some system of discrimination. Usually, I believe the publishers plan to put new books on the market in the spring and fall, like the milliners and the tailors. As a rule, they go out of fashion just as quickly. Then, again, I never like to risk $1.50 on the new comer because the publisher proclaims it to be "the greatest American novel." Buying best sellers on this basis is a pretty sure way of dropping one's small change.

It's a good plan to let the early enthusiasm of promoters cool off. After a year or two, if the book still appears to be making headway, and seems to have captured public sanction, it may be safe to purchase. An old gentleman who has gotten together a really useful library, said to me once: "Never buy fiction until the copyright runs out. You gain in two ways. First, they will have dropped one-half in price; second, if they are still alive, they'll be masterpieces and well worth having." The advice looked good so I have browsed quite freely in the literary fields of Dickens, Scott, Thackeray and a score of others, ranging all the way from Fielding to Robert Louis Stevenson. They may not have added much to my store of agricultural knowledge, but I do claim they give one a broader outlook on the world of affairs and improve the quality of his citizenship. Once let a man's mental horizon become bounded by the limits of a hundred acre farm and he becomes dwarfed in mind, body and soul.

In these days of history-making one is likely to be attracted to the warring nations and become interested in the stories of their rise and development. Macaulay's "History of England" and "Green's Short History of the English People" are two standbys that should find a place in any library. The former especially, is a model of clearness and fluency of style, the mere reading of which cannot help but be beneficial, aside from the historical facts he clothes so attractively. Guizot's "History of France," and Grote's "History of Greece" are authoritative works on the countries with which they deal, and will be found fairly readable.

STUDY OUR OWN COUNTRY.

Coming down to our own country, still comparatively young, there are several monumental works, such as Kingsford's, that treat exhaustively with Canadian history. I prefer, however, to take our own history in biographical doses, of which we have a number of very palatable ones. In fact the whole story of Champlain down is told under quite a formidable list called "Makers of Canada." Perhaps most people would not care to read all the "Makers" or go to the expense of buying them. There are, however, some of them belonging to our own times that are almost indispensable to anyone wishing to get a reasonable and easy grasp of Dominion affairs since Confederation. The biographies that I can especially recommend are the lives of Sir John Macdonald, Alexander McKenzie, Geo. W. Ross and Sir Charles Tupper. You will not be satisfied to read any of these from a lending library on the two weeks' limit. They will stand much re-reading and become more interesting on an extensive acquaintance.

EACH HAS A FAVORITE POET.

Now, what about poetry? Most people will declare without any hesitation that they don't read it. But then, there are poets and poets, which makes a difference—sometimes. I have heard individuals who readily handed down the negative verdict on the muse who could quote whole pages from Bobby Burns, dialect and all. Many prosey people admit a fondness for Kipling's "brassbound" measures, and all of us are unconsciously quoting Shakespeare every day, for scores of our common expressions are but thinly paraphrased Shakespeareisms.

When it comes to putting the poet on the library shelf he takes little space and the cost is a trifle, thanks to the compressions of modern publishers. Wordy as his flights sometimes are, a little culling here and there to get rid of the dross and the refined gold becomes quite amendable to one volume. Someone has said, "A library without the poets is like a garden without a flower or a house without a woman." It is quite evident that the man who likes an occasional dash of the sublime in his reading matter wants to get away at times from the hurly-burly of dollar chasing. He will, therefore, consult his tastes and have them represented on his library shelves.

Painful Swellings Reduced Muscular Strains Ended

Such Troubles Now Quickly Rubbed Away by Powerful Remedy.

If you have any muscles that are strained and weak, that are frequently subject to to rheumatic pains, if you have any painful swellings that refuse to go away—get busy with Nerviline. This is the very sort of trouble that Nerviline is noted for curing quickly. "I have proved Nerviline simply a wonder in reducing a hard, painful swelling. It followed an injury I received in my left leg and caused me great pain and discomfort. The muscles were strained and sore, and no other remedy gave the ease and comfort I got from rubbing on Nerviline. There is a soothing, pain-relieving power about Nerviline that touched the root of my trouble. Nerviline reduced the swelling, it destroyed the pain, it brought my limb back to perfect condition." The experience of Mr. Bowen, whose home is in Middlesex, is not unusual. Thousands are proving every day that muscular pains of every kind, chronic rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia and sciatica will yield to Nerviline when nothing else can possibly cure. Nerviline is an old-time family pain [illegible] people forty years with great success. 25c. at all dealers.

FARM GARDEN

TREATMENT OF SOILS.

As a general thing no injury comes to a sandy soil if handled while it is wet. A clay soil, however, would suffer from such treatment. The effect would be what is known as puddling. Even if a clay soil is harrowed when wet, there will be more or less puddling. When in this condition it becomes cloddy and impervious to air and water.

When the land is just moist enough to break up mellow is the proper time to plow it. It must be neither wet enough to leave a slick surface where rubbed by the moldboard, nor dry enough to break up in large clods.

Should continued rain follow wet plowing, not much, if any, harm would follow. It is the hot, dry winds that leave a mass of unmanageable clods. Especially in the spring and midsummer, it is important that the harrow immediately follow the plow, thus preventing formation of clods. In late fall plowing the clods do not cause any trouble, as the freezing and thawing they receive during the winter will break them up.

INCREASING STOCK OF HUMUS.

It has been proved that poverty in soil may be due to poor texture, to unfavorable structure, to lack of humus, to deficiencies in the amount, form or proportion of plant food, and to the presence of harmful mineral and organic compounds. Most soils, even very poor ones, contain an abundant supply of plant food, excepting nitrogen, and sometimes other elements are either lacking or are present only in those forms that plants can utilize, it is necessary to improve the texture, in order to increase fertility, and add plant food and humus. Texture can be greatly improved by tillage, but tillage alone is not enough. Humus must be added. In doing so plant food must be added and the soil made more permeable to water and air.

In supplying humus to the soil three general methods are used. Probably the best plan is the addition of stable manure. When rightly used this adds large amounts of both humus and plant food.

When stable manure is not available, crops to be turned under should be planted, and this will give large quantities of humus at comparatively little cost. Plowing under green crops is what is known as green manuring.

A third method is to grow clover and timothy, which crops are generally left down for two or more years. This gives a chance for the roots to thoroughly penetrate the soil. The old roots decay, and new ones grow. By plowing up the sod more or less vegetable matter is turned under, which, with the mass of roots in the soil, will add considerably to the supply of humus. Clovers and alfalfa are deep-rooted plants, and when their roots decay they leave channels deep into the earth that aid in the absorption of rains and admits the air to sweeten the soil.

One Way to Smoke a Cigar.

"Here's a point that it took me years to learn," said Uncle Joe Cannon, who as nearly every one knows, is an inveterate smoker. "If you want to get the most out of a cigar light the 'wrong end.' Any man who smokes cigars to any great extent will tell you that he gets more real enjoyment out of the last inch of his cigar. Now, my plan is to light the last half first and get to the best part of the smoke as soon as you can. Of course you have to bite off the end that is supposed to go in your mouth before you can light the cigar, but if you try my plan you won't ever go back to the old fashioned way unless I'm badly mistaken."

COMES ADVICE TO SUFFERERS TO USE DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Glacier Creek Lady Says They Have Been Her Stand-by for Sixteen Years and She Has Never Known Them to Fail.

Glacier Creek, via Dawson, Yukon, Can., Feb. 15.—(Special.)—"North of fifty three, where doctors are long distances apart and those remedies that are a very present help in time of need are the reliance of the settler, Dodd's Kidney Pills have established an enviable reputation. Hear what Mrs. A. Armstrong, a well known resident of this place, has to say of them:

"Dodd's Kidney Pills have been my stand-by for sixteen years," Mrs. Armstrong states. "Both myself and my family have the greatest faith in their medicinal qualities. When any of my friends complain of even a headache, I treat them with Dodd's Kidney Pills and they never fail to do good.

"It always gives me pleasure to say a good word for Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure all kidney ills from backache to rheumatism, Bright's disease and heart disease. These troubles come from sick kidneys. That's why Dodd's Kidney Pills cure them.

Yank Out Those Stumps

The Kirstin method clears your land for the plow.

Send To-day For This Book

TURN your sullen, gloomy, profit-eating stump lands into happy, smiling fields that bear rich crops, and put money into the bank for you.

Our Free Book, "The Gold in Your Stump Land," shows you how you can transform your barren stump fields into rich virgin farm land. It shows you photographs of immense stumps it has pulled; it contains letters from the men who pulled them; and it will convince you that the easiest, quickest and cheapest way is with a

Kirstin Stump Puller

One Man — Horse Power

The horse power machine for the big jobs, for the fields of many stumps; it will pull anything it tackles, and, because of its triple power, prevents strain to man, horse and machine. Will clear two acres from a single setting.

The One Man Puller gets the biggest stumps. Double leverage gives you a giant's power; a push on the handle means a pull of tons to the stump. Clears an acre from one anchor.

Every Kirstin guaranteed for 15 years, flaw or no flaw. Your money back if the Kirstin bond does not live up to its promise. We guarantee the Kirstin method to clear land ready for the plow from 10% to 50% cheaper than any other method.

A PUZZLING CASE

PROLOGUE.

It was a question whether I or Major Granby should write this book, but as I was busy and the major was idle, we both came to the conclusion that it would be best for him to undertake the task. Therefore, he wrote the following seventeen chapters, setting forth The Black Carnation case, and, leaving them in my possession for publication, he has gone to Riviera for a rest, in company with his man, Pelair.

Though the major has done most of the work, I do not see why I should not make a few remarks on the subject, and I therefore write this prologue for my own satisfaction. Major Granby has done his work very well, very well indeed, and if his language be a trifle stilted or grandiose at times, still I think he has set forth the case with a sufficient clearness which is much needed in a complicated affair of this kind.

I suppose everyone in England has heard of "The Black Carnation Case," and certainly, it is one of the most interesting criminal affairs which it has ever been my fate to meet with. The case, as told by Major Granby, is perfectly true, and I am sure the public will be pleased to read this extraordinary murder trial, especially as the facts set forth in the papers were sufficient merely to pique without satisfying public curiosity.

I own we were all very much astray in the affair, and none of us except Major Granby guessed the real criminal, but as that gentleman has set forth six distinct theories, he could not very well help being right once out of six. Perhaps our readers may think that we displayed but little acuteness in solving the mystery, but in such a complicated criminal case it is almost impossible to come to any satisfactory conclusion. As written here, it must appear quite inconceivable that we did not guess the name of Mazzucata's assassin at once, but then, the facts which are here set forth in their proper order were all topsy-turvy, and what with one thing cropping up one day, and another the next, it was extremely difficult to disentangle the evidence.

Undoubtedly, at times, Major Granby is a trifle prolix, and is, perhaps, too fond of telling us his private views on the subject, still I think he has done his work exceedingly well. He must have used a good deal of club paper, as I am told he wrote it at the "Old Fogies'," occasionally reading a chapter aloud to some special friend. In fact, old Granby and his story were quite a joke in St. James' Street, but now that the tale is offered to the world, I trust that the public will see it is no joke, but a statement of fact embodying one of the strangest romances of the day.

Most people will say that this story is impossible, and that there never existed such a strange flower as the Black Carnation, but to those skeptics who believe nothing unless they read it in the columns of a newspaper, I may say that the story is perfectly true, and that I, myself, have seen a Black Carnation. Those who still doubt the truth after this plain assertion had better call at Scotland Yard, where they will, no doubt, be told the facts of the case, though, perhaps, in a less admirable way than are here set forth by my friend, Major Granby.

Mark Tancred.

Temple.

It has been said, truly or otherwise, that every man has in his own life the materials for at least one romance, and for my part I am inclined to subscribe to the saying, seeing that the story I have to tell is as romantic as any I have read. Moreover, it happened to myself, though truly I was more of spectator than actor; still it came within the experience of my life, so I have no more to do than arrange the events in due order, so as to make them understandable to all. Between chapter one which relates the committal of a crime and chapter seventeen which reveals the name of the person who committed it, there is a deal of unravelling to be done, and had it not been for the idleness of my life I am afraid I would never have had time ter days, and out of such experience constructed, for, indeed, I did but lithave I constructed this tale. I say er patience to unentangle the mysterious circumstances which surrounded the death of Marietta Mazzucata.

Up to the age of fifty years my life was as smooth and happy as any mortal could desire. Of course, in common with all men, I suffered from petty annoyances, still, no very startling event ever happened to lift me out of the common ruck of humanity. I was born of wealthy parents, I went to Eton, I migrated to Oxford, I entered the army, I left the army, I travelled here, there and everywhere, enjoyed all things, exceeded in none, and between my fortieth and fiftieth years had become one of those well-dressed, well-preserved old fogies whom you may see any day in St. James' street, or at the windows of respectable clubs. My life, I am afraid, has been an extremely negative one—as I did neither harm nor good, but "dandered on," as the Scotch say, in a pleasant, aimless fashion, which had, at least, the merit of being happy.

Then occurred that extraordinary event which turned my placid existence into one of great trouble and distress, though, doubtless, I was not called upon to mix myself up in the affair, and had I so chosen could have held aloof, which I certainly would have done had I not been seized with "detective fever." What! You don't know what it is? Then I hope for your own piece of mind you never will know, for it is a disease which entails sleepless nights, much thought and ceaseless vigilance. In many cases the game is not worth the candle, and even in this instance, I doubt not, it would have been wiser for me to have left the affair to Scotland Yard, and not to have meddled with what did not concern me. But as I said before, I was seized with detective fever; and if it did not concern me, it greatly concerned Gilbert Tressinger and Lawrence Dallas, both good friends of mine. However, I have now prolonged enough, so I will begin to tell you the story of Mazzucata from the very commencement, which, so far as this book is concerned, starts from Covent Garden Theatre on the first night of the new season.

I am very fond of music, and for years have been an assiduous attendant at the opera whenever it chanced to be on at Covent Garden or at Her Majesty's. I have heard Jenny Lind, Malibran, Mario, Grisi—in fact all the great singers of the past, and remember well those palmy days of the Italian Opera, when Rossini, Donizetti, and Bellini were composing masterpieces. Then it was all melody and exquisite vocalization, but now, what with this Wagner craze and Dvorak-Grieg-Brahms-mania, music seems to be nothing but noise. Probably I am wrong—in fact my nephew Charles, a graceless young dog, who has no respect for age, tells me I am wrong—but I had much rather hear an Italian aria sung by a highly trained singer, than this incessant fiddle playing and drum banging, with every now and then a feeble note from the stage when a fortunate pause gives the vocalist an opportunity of being heard. Oh, Grisi, or Alboni, or Lablache, what could even your strong lungs do against this roar of brass and shrieking of strings which is called orchestration.

Yet in spite of my distaste for such new-fangled music, I still go to the opera, and it was on that night of the sixteenth of May, one thousand eight hundred and ninety, with a beating [illegible], that the catastrophe occurred which resulted in the death of that great singer.

She was a great singer, I admit, a worthy successor to Grisi and Persiani, full of fire and dramatic force, not a mere [illegible] doll, twittering like a mechanical bird, which seems to be the prevailing type of the new school of singers. When I was a young man—but there, this is not a book of reminiscences, and I grow garrulous. I speak of the present, not of the past, and will therefore defer criticising this degenerate age, with which I am decidedly "out of joint."

Renaud had composed "[illegible] d'Ecosse," and as he was the chief exponent of the most advanced French school, combining [illegible] a thorough knowledge of musical technique with a rare gift of melodic inspiration, the dilettanti of London, whose name is legion, looked forward to a treat of no common order, especially as Mazzucata had created the role of Mary Stuart in Paris to the complete satisfaction of Renaud, who was notoriously difficult to please.

It being the first night of a new season, the first night of a new opera, and the first night of a new singer, the house was naturally crowded on account of the triple novelty, and I recognized many of my friends. The stall next to mine was vacant, however, and it was not until the overture had commenced that it was occupied, when to surprise my neighbor proved to be young Lawrence Dallas, whom I had fancied was still abroad. A handsome young fellow he was, somewhat bronzed by tropical suns, but I thought for the moment that his face looked a trifle care-worn, as though he were consumed by some secret sorrow. Of course he recognized me at once, and shook hands, after carefully depositing under his seat a large bouquet of flowers.

"I didn't know you were back, Dallas," I said, as he sat down beside me.

"Oh, I returned to-day."

"And came to the opera to-night. That is rather sharp work."

"I had reasons for coming to-night," he answered, hurriedly.

"Do those flowers form part of the [illegible]?"

"No! they are for Mazzucata."

"What, is she so good as that?"

"She is splendid. I saw her in Vienna."

"Vienna!" I repeated, somewhat amazed. "I did not know you had been there. I thought the East——"

"I've been everywhere," interrupted Dallas, with a frown. "East, west and all over the world. Don't I look all the better for my travels?"

"No! you look worried."

He started at this, and cast a searching look on my face.

"You are a close observer, major," he said, slowly. "I have been worried, but it's all over now. I am here to enjoy myself."

"And see Mazzucata."

"Precisely. But here, you know everyone, major. Who is the man with the flowers, over yonder?"

"Sir Gilbert Tressinger," I replied, following the direction of his eyes. "His uncle has just died and left him eight thousand a year and a title. Rather a change."

"Why 'rather a change'?"

"Ah, it's a long story, but the pith of it I can tell you in a few words. Gilbert's father married an opera singer, who was by no means his social equal. The Tressinger family cut him off, and when the parents died, Gilbert was studying for the stage in Milan. He has a fine tenor voice, and was going to be a new Mario, but when his uncle died all these fine schemes were knocked on the head, and he came in for the property."

"Lucky fellow," said Dallas, raising his opera glasses to a pair of brilliant black eyes, "but why does he carry flowers otherwise than in his button-hole?"

"As far as that goes, why do you? Mazzucata must be very good if you young fellows all honor her with bouquets."

"Well, you see, I know Mazzucata very well."

"In that case you ought to know Tressinger," said I, coolly.

"Never set eyes on him before to-night."

"But you surely have heard his name?"

"No! why should I?"

"And yet you say a woman can't keep a secret."

"Meaning Mazzucata," observed Dallas, with a frown.

"Of course."

Dallas looked straight ahead, but I noticed he was observing me out of the tail of his eye, so, wondering at the persistent way in which Mazzucata was mixed up in his conversation, I adopted the masterly policy of silence, thereby drawing him on to further explanation of his enigmatic utterances.

"I don't know what you mean," he said, at length, in a hesitating manner.

"Oh, well, if you don't know, you don't know," I answered nonchalantly, "but if you bring a bouquet to throw to Mazzucata, why should not Tressinger do the same?"

"He doesn't know her."

"There you are wrong. He knows her very well."

Dallas bit his lip and said something under his breath, the meaning of which I could not catch, but it sounded uncommonly like bad language. Then he laughed in a constrained manner, and tossed back his head, a trick he had with him when annoyed.

"Well, and why not?" he said, after a pause, "Mazzucata knows plenty of people."

"Of course, especially rich young men."

"What have you heard?"

"Nothing but town talk. Hush, the curtain is rising."

The fact was, I knew a good deal about the lady in question, for my club, like the ear of Dionysius, gathers all news, and the relations between Tressinger and this singer had been pretty well discussed, but of course, I was going to mention nothing of this to my fiery young friend, Dallas. It is a weakness of my character that I am over fond of gossip, but I never repeat what I hear, so, having thus an excellent character for secrecy, I am the recipient of many things of a private nature. Dallas knew that I would not hint my knowledge without good reason, and not at all daunted by my abrupt closing of the discussion, touched me on the shoulder as the curtain went up, to invite my attention. Now if there is one thing above another I dislike, it is being interrupted in my enjoyment, so I was not in a very amiable frame of mind when I turned in response to his touch.

"Well! what is it?"

"Is Tressinger a very dear friend?"

"Yes, too dear to be respectable."

"It's a ——."

"Look here, Dallas," said I, now thoroughly angry, for I knew his impulsive temper, "if you want to make a noise go outside, I came here to enjoy the music, not to gossip."

"Well, will you tell me all about this fellow to-night?" he persisted.

"Yes, yes. In fact I'll introduce you to him."

"Good, I'll bear that in mind."

Having thus satisfied his curiosity for the time being, I concentrated my attention on the stage, but to tell the honest truth my enjoyment for the evening was over, as the demeanor of Dallas had quite piqued my curiosity, and knowing what I did about Tressinger and Mazzucata, I was puzzled to think how the introduction of this new element would affect the position of affairs. Dallas was Irish and had a most ungovernable temper, so if it were the case, as I suspected, that the singer had been flirting with him, there was no doubt that when he found out she had thrown him over in favor of Tressinger, things would become unpleasantly warm for everyone concerned. I determined to find out all I could from Dallas with the idea of smoothing matters, though at the same time, I must confess, I was considerably curious to know the meaning of all this social mystery.

At this period of my reflections, Mazzucata appeared on the stage, and without doubt she was a beautiful woman, not unworthy to represent the dead loveliness of Mary Stuart. It was the Scottish queen herself, not worn and gray with the shadow of a violent death near at hand, but bright and youthful, holding her court in grim old Holyrood with the poet-lover Chastelard at her feet. Ivan, of course, took the part of the French chevalier, and sang the difficult music allotted to the role as only he can sing it. He put me much in mind of Mario, both as regards voice and appearance, but his face was somewhat after the style of Charles Stuart, with grave, melancholy eyes, too sombre for a lover, and yet fitted for the character, seeing what was the end of the original.

The stage was very brilliant, representing the throne room of the old palace, filled with silk-robed courtiers and lovely women all grouped round the dais whereon sat Mary Stuart in the springtime of her fatal beauty. There was a chorus of stern Scottish barons, a counter chorus of Presbyterian fanatics, and when these latter insulted the queen, Chastelard, bold, gay and wrathful, dashed, sword in hand, before the throne to defend his mistress. As I said before, I do not care about modern music, but the stirring finale of this act was worked up in a manner worthy of Meyerbeer's Huguenots, and when the curtain fell, I, in spite of my prejudices, applauded as heartily as the rest of the audience. I am a just man, and, from long experience, esteem myself a good critic, so I am not ashamed to give it as my opinion that Mazzucata was but little inferior to Giulia Grisi either as regards acting, voice or vocal production.

"Well, what about Tressinger?"

It was Dallas who spoke, and I must say I was distinctly annoyed, as his incessant desire for information quite spoilt my appreciation of the new singer. Under these circumstances I answered him sharply, as I am sure I had every right to do, for his very mal a propos question.

"Good heavens, Dallas, are you still harping on that fellow—cannot you enjoy the music?"

"Oh, the music is well enough, but I want to know about Tressinger."

"You have Tressinger on the brain. What is he to you?"

"Nothing," retorted Dallas, pettishly, "but, from what you say, he's a good deal to Mazzucata."

"Ah! you are jealous."

"Rubbish!"

"I quite agree with you," I answered, smiling, "it is rubbish to be jealous—especially on account of that lyric coquette."

"How do you know she's a coquette?"

"Common report ——" I began, but he interrupted me rudely.

"Common report is a common liar."

"I've heard that before."

"It's a truism," said Dallas, crossly, "but look here, major, dont abuse Mazzucata any more, for I love her better than my life—in fact, I want to marry her."

"Are you mad?"

I stared at him in dismay.

"No! I'm as sane as you are. Because you've never married, that doesn't say I shouldn't."

"Don't talk so loud," said I, soothingly, for he had raised his voice more than I liked, "marry if you like —but Mazzucata——"

"Well, what have you to say against her?" he demanded, defiantly.

"I'll tell you all I know to-night."

WOMEN WHO SUFFER

Can Obtain New Health Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Every woman at some time needs a tonic. At special times unusual demands are made upon her strength. Where these are added to the worry and work which falls to her lot, weakness and ill health will follow unless the blood is fortified to meet the strain.

Weak women find in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the tonic exactly suited to their needs. Most of the ills from which they suffer are due to bloodlessness—a condition which the Pills readily cure. These pills save the girl who enters into womanhood in a bloodless condition from years of misery, and afford prompt and permanent relief to the woman who is bloodless, and therefore weak. Mrs. Wm. H. Warner, Rosenthal, Ont., writes: "After the birth of my second child I suffered from troubles which most mothers will understand, without going into details. The doctor who was attending me said an operation would be necessary, but as I dreaded this and as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had been of great help to my sister I decided to try this medicine, and I can truly say that after using the pills for some time they made a complete cure and made life more enjoyable than it had been for a long time. I think every woman suffering from the ailments of our sex should give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial as I know from my own case the great benefit that follows their use."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Restoring Rancid Butter

It's a matter of washing.

First wash it in lime water.

Then wash it in spring water.

Work it with a wooden spoon or ladle.

But the lime water must be prepared.

First half a pint to a pound of good fresh lime.

Let the lime stand in a pail of water for one hour.

Then pour off the lime water with care and in this work the butter.

After a thorough working, pursue the same course in fresh spring water.

Peace Time - Prices -

It is generally known by anyone who is doing any buying that prices on almost everything of Dry Goods, have advanced and are advancing steadily. Cotton goods as well as woollen have advanced from 33⅓ to 50 per cent.

At present we find ourselves fortunate to have on hand 1000 yards of flannelette bought some time ago, these goods to-day are worth from 15 to 25c per yard.

We are selling our stock at from 12½ cents to 20 cents per yard.

Also about 500 yards, (Mill Ends) of white flannelette, selling while they last 10 cents and 12 cents per yard.

We predict it is very good business to buy your supply at our present prices.

The value of the National Service cards are now being felt. Hundreds of men have been asked to report for duty to operate engines, trains and repair houses to relieve the coal situation. The editor heard of a young woman in this place who has been doing a very commendable service. Occasionally she visits the homes of the families where the husband and father has gone to the front. We commend this excellent service to others. Some will say; "Oh they're all right, they have plenty to keep themselves." But money isn't everything. These women and the little boys and girls are lonesome for the father. A little visit, a word of cheer and courage spoken often means a cheerful letter written to him who is fighting our battles, and he can fight so much stronger and better when he knows that his wife and family are being cared for, not only with material things, but with love and consideration by the women at home

Can't help but notice the difference in the tone of the notes sent by President Wilson to Germany, and those sent to England. To the former it is always with some high-faintin' notions of a glorious peace. When a note goes to England concerning the delay of shipping, or because some mail has been stopped, the note is in the form of a threat. There's a reason for the difference, and perhaps it's found in the fact that Canada, a colony in the British Empire, lies alongside the big republic. The British statesmen must needs use every precaution to avoid misunderstandings while Germany does as she pleases, even to murdering U. S. citizens, and President Woodrow meekly submits.

The Owen Sun gives an extended report of a meeting, of twenty members of a league styling itself, "The 1000 League," having, as its object assisting one Col. J. Hilliard Horne to secure recruits for the 248th battalion which the officer wants organized. The business of the evening was taken up in discussion of what was best to do with the young men who wouldn't obey them and join the 248th. The Colonel seemed to have lots of names of young men who wouldn't enlist in his battalion, some he characterized as rats. An enthusiast on making the other fellow do the fighting, suggested that a column be secured in the newspapers and publish all the names of those young men who won't enlist. Another told how, over in Hanover, men were calling on a certain bank clerk every half hour in the day, eight times per day, during the week. It would seem that when force is needed the government, and the people as a whole, should sanction it. We submit that the report of that meeting as published, would make joyful reading in Germany. When conditions actually warrant conscription there is no doubt the government will introduce the measure, but there can be nothing gained where over-reaching takes place to such an extent as in Owen Sound.

The Banquet

The banquet to Warden Izzard, Friday night proved a very happy occasion, and one in which the townspeople were brought in closer touch with one another. The festive board provides a place where many petty differences are laid aside forever, and more important things like the welfare of the community, the county and the nation predominate.

The tribute to Warden Izzard is deserved by him. He has been the servant of the citizens for many years, and it was fitting indeed that appreciation should be shown on his attaining the warden's chair.

Mr. Izzard's reply to the toast of "The Warden" showed the spirit of the man, when he said that he learned much through serving others, and that he welcomed honest criticism as a public officer, for by that he progressed.

Particularly pleasing was the high plane of the speeches made, nearly all bearing on the need of the co-operation of everyone for the progress of the town the county, and the nation.

Remarks made by the leaders of the townships show a desire for greater co-operation on the part of the people living in the town and country.

Taking it altogether, the affair will serve to bind all the interests of the town and country closer, as well as doing "honor to whom honor is due."

Phenominal Strides Made By Canadian Northern Railway System In First Year As Transcontinental

New System in the Past Year Carried Approximately 131,000,000 Bushels of Wheat, an Increase of 125 Per Cent. Over Previous Year. Company's New Mileage on Pacific Coast and Northern Ontario Makes Astonishing Showing Right from Commencement of Operation. Company's Lines Most Favorably Located.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Toronto, Feb. 12.—The phenomenal gains that the Canadian Northern Railway reports for its year as a transcontinental line makes the statement one of the most important that has ever been issued by any railway in Canada. It is even doubtful whether the tremendous increases in business handled have even been duplicated by any system in the world. There are many features to the report that makes it of special import to every Canadian, owing to the interest the country has in the building up of this important transcontinental line and the attractive territory that has been developed through the completion of the system. The feature of the report that is likely to be especially gratifying is that which shows the prominent part the Canadian Northern, with its transcontinental system, has been able to play in handling such a large proportion of the grain requirements of the Mother Country.

Right along it has been the contention of Sir William Mackenzie and his associates that it was only a matter of a very short period before Canada and the Empire would enjoy the benefits of the big system that had been built up across the Dominion, and the showing made in the report indicates that these hopes have been realized much earlier than it would have been thought possible when the transcontinental system was put in operation a little over a year ago.

IMPORTANT GAINS OF YEAR.

A few of the outstanding features of the report are as follows: An increase in freight traffic during the year of $8,352,462, equivalent to as much as 63.2 per cent.; increase in passenger traffic $777,346, or a gain of 112.5 per cent.; an increase in total operating revenue of $9,344,161, or 26.1 per cent over the previous year. That the company's lines handled over 131,000,000 bushels of grain is proof positive that the railway has been located in the best grain growing areas of the West.

The exact grain traffic handled amounted to 131,275,824 bushels as compared with 58,875,530 bushels in 1915, or an increase of 72,400,290, equivalent to an increase of as much as 123.0 per cent.

COMPANY'S EARNING POWER.

The development that is sure to be most favorably received by everybody who is following the growth of the larger Canadian railways will come from the fact that the Canadian Northern Railway has come within hailing distance of earning its total fixed charges, the deficit for the year being brought down to less than a quarter of a million dollars, a reduction from the previous year of almost $1,480,000. As was to be expected, a great proportion of the increased revenues came from the large crop gathered in the Canadian West in the fall of 1915, but since that time there has been a marked increase in the general freight traffic handled over the lines, and during the first four months of the current fiscal year gross earnings have continued to show large increases over the corresponding periods of the year now under review. Perhaps the most striking development in this connection is that it is in the month of October that the heaviest grain movement occurs, and yet in October, 1916, the gross earnings showed a gain over those of the same month of the previous year.

Some of the interesting features of the Board of Directors' report as indicating the position of the line and the progress it has made include the following:

An agreement of great importance in the development of the system's freight and passenger traffic was made with the Cunard Steamship Co. In future the Cunard Line and the Canadian Northern Railway will be in fact, a single transportation unit between Europe and Canada.

The possession of such favorable grades as those on the System's lines has given the Canadian Northern an already important advantage in the economy of operation, particularly in carrying the two commodities offering in largest volume, viz.: lumber and grain.

The main line of the Canadian Northern Railway from Quebec to Vancouver is superior to any line crossing the continent of America in points of grade and curvatures favoring traffic. A

The lines of the Company's system are now serving 75 per cent. of the aggregate population of the cities and towns of all Canada, having 5,000 inhabitants and over.

The present situation emphasizes the fact that the Railway is not as dependent upon grain crop movement as in the past, and in becoming transcontinental has acquired a highly diversified traffic. The developments of the year confirm the Directors in the belief that they strongly hold, that the ultimate prosperity of the Canadian Northern Railway System is measurable only by the prosperity of the Dominion of Canada.

SPIDER FCTORY HANDS.

Spinning Delicate Threads for Use in Telescopes.

Spiders are probably the most indispensible workmen in one of the largest English surveying instrument factories. It is their duty to spin the delicate thread which is used for the cross hairs to mark the exact centre of the object lens in the surveyor's telescope.

Spider web is the only suitable material yet discovered for the cross hairs of surveying instruments. Almost invisible as this fiber is to the naked eye, it is brought up in the powerful lenses of the telescope to the size of a man's thumb, so that all defects, if there happened to be any, would be magnified to such a degree that the well would be useless.

Human hair has been tried, but when magnified it has the apparent dimensions of a rough hewn hemp beam; moreover, human hair is transparent, and cross hairs must be opaque.

The spiders produce during a two months' spinning season thousands of yards of web, which is wound upon metal frames and stored away until needed.

A spider "at work" dangles in the air by its invisible thread, the upper end being attached to a metal wire frame whirled in the hands of a girl. The girl first places the spider on her hand until the protruding end of the thread has become attached. When the spider attempts to leap to the ground this end is quickly attached to the centre of the whirling frame, and as the spider pays out thread this line is wrapped around the frame. Several hundred feet of thread can be removed from a spider at one time.

The spiders are kept in a large room under the supervision of three girls and a forewoman. When not spinning the little workmen are placed in a large wooden cage. Flies are the chief article of diet.

During the winter months the spider colony usually dies, so that an entirely new corps of workmen must be recruited. Not every spider will do—only large, fat fellows that spin a tough round thread are suitable.

Singularly enough, the girls who have charge of the spiders in this English factory are not in the least afraid of them or their bites. On the contrary, they regard them as pets, are able to tell them apart and to call them by nicknames which humorously describe their appearance or their peculiar habits of work.

Islands in a Sea of Lava.

The valley of the ancient Snake River in Idaho was flooded with great outpourings of black lava; which spread out sheet on sheet buried the old land surface, and partly filled the valley with molten rock, which solidified and has remained to this day undisturbed except for the gorges that the streams have cut in it. In some places old mountains project through the solidified lava flood as islands project above the surface of the sea, and old ridges stick out into it as capes and promontories.

The area covered by the Snake River lava is about 20,000 square miles. So far as is known there is but one lava field in North America of greater extent, the Columbia River lava field, which covers about 200,000 square miles. In Snake River canyon below Shoshone Falls nearly 700 feet of horizontal sheets of lava are exposed, but whether this is the maximum thickness or not cannot be told.

Locating Icebergs.

The captain of an ocean steamer in most cases finds out when his vessel is approaching an iceberg from the men down in the engine room. That sounds queer, but it is a fact, nevertheless. It appears that when a steamship enters water considerably colder than that through which it has been going its propeller runs faster. Such water usually surrounds the vicinage of icebergs for many miles. When the propeller's action therefore is accelerated without the steam power being increased word is passed up to the officer on the bridge that icebergs may be expected, and a close lookout for them is established. There are natural reasons for the propeller acting in this way, and sea captains will assert the same thing.

LOWER MEAT BILLS.

Cheaper Cuts Give Excellent Satisfaction When Properly Prepared.

Do you know, Madame, that a 1,600 lb. steer "dresses" only to 800 pounds. And that out of these eight hundred pounds only 200 pounds of meats can be classed as choice cuts?

Do you know that so many people insist upon having the choice cuts always that the butcher has had to keep increasing the price of them to offset the loss which he must sustain from the great surplus of cheaper stuff that often has to be thrown away as refuse?

And yet all the cheaper cuts need is proper treatment to make them tender, nutritious and fine flavored. Here are some high-class "cheap dishes" as prepared by M. Leperruque, a $10,000 per year Parisian chef:

Chuck Pot Roast.—This dish will give good satisfaction if the recipe is followed with care.

Have your butcher cut a chunk of a shoulder and remove the bone. Do not have this too small, as a pot roast should always be of size. Fry it in beef or pork drippings in a deep earthern, iron or granite pan. When brown add to a four-pound pot roast two tablespoons of flour, let it cook three minutes, add three pints of water, two bay leaves, a large onion in which are stuck four cloves, a pinch of pepper corn and three tablespoons of catsup. Let cook gently for one hour and a half, set aside and then skim all fat which arises. Slice meat and serve with gravy strained.

Sliced Chuck Meat, Minute Saute.—Ask your butcher to give whatever quantity you deem necessary for your wants of lean chuck as near the shortrib part as possible.

Slice it across the grain of the tissue very thin; have some onion also sliced very thin, some sliced cooked potatoes, chopped parsley, salt and pepper and proceed as follows:

In a shallow skillet have drippings very hot, drop in the sliced meat, fry very quickly, add the onions, potatoes, salt, pepper and parsley. Drain well and add a little cider vinegar to give it a tart taste.

Flank A'l'Enfer.—The flank steak has never been accorded proper recognition. Of course, the secret of satisfaction depends on its preparation.

The steak must be freed from all sinews and fat and sliced cross ways a half an inch thick. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, baste with a little olive oil and set to boil over a very hot fire, turning only once and keeping it very rare. Serve hot with some fresh butter, a little chopped parsley and a tiny bit of lemon juice.

ZAM-BUK CURED IN 2 MONTHS

After 2 Years' Useless Treatment.

The healing power of Zam-Buk is so much greater than that of other ointments, that it has cured in many cases when all other ointments have failed. One such instance is that of Mr. Earle E. Gardiner, of Marquis, Sask., who writes: "For two years I suffered with a bad attack of salt-rheum on my feet. During those two years I tried every known remedy, but could find nothing that would cure the disease. Then I heard of Zam-Buk, and commenced using it. After the first few applications I noticed an improvement, and this encouraged me to continue. Although I had suffered for two years, after only two months' treatment with Zam-Buk I am completely cured."

Zam-Buk is equally good for eczema, ulcers, abscesses, blood-poisoning, piles, cold sores, chapped hands, chilblains, eruptions, etc. At all drug stores, 50c. box, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

THE LOST DISCORD.

(Clarence Lucas in the Musical Courier.)

Seated one day at the organ,
I was waiting for Dr. Carl
To straighten a pedal passage
That tied my feet in a snarl.

I know not what I was playing,
But that did not worry me,
Though I struck one song of music
Which was not in any key.

It flooded the crimson twilight
With fears of a lingering death,
And floated away into silence
Before I recovered my breath.

It seemed the harmonious echo
Of filing a dozen saws;
It ruptured the golden silence
Without an apparent cause.

I seek, but I seek it vainly,
That one lost chord of pain
Which came from inside the organ
And drove me quite insane.

Will speak in those tones again—
Those tones so supremely fitted
To frighten the souls of men.

Those tones burst the pipes and the bellows,
And left not a rivet or nail!
It may be that elsewhere than heaven
I shall hear that grand mixed wail.

Blood Drops of Heroes.

When the Woods at Kilmorie are scarlet and gold,
And the vines are like blood on the wall;
I dream of the faces, all pallid and cold,
Of our great ones who answered the call;
Like the bright autumn leaves,
Or the rich, garnered sheaves,
Our truest, our greatest, our all;—
For my heart beats in Belgium, or far France's wold,
When the woods of Kilmorie are scarlet and gold.

When the woods at Kilmorie are scarlet and gold,
I see but the beauty of God;—
Not the small ways of men and the mean faiths they hold,
Like the blind worm under the clod;—
But the brave and the true,
Who know but to do,
Like those glorious banners of God,
Arrayed on his hills, or at rest on His mould,
When the woods at Kilmorie are scarlet and gold.

When the woods at Kilmorie are scarlet and gold,
There's another dread harvest afar,
Where our greatest, our truest now struggle to hold Back the modern world's Juggernaut car;—
And my heart only sees,
In the pageant of trees,
That horrible pageant of war,
Where God's men for righteousness strive as of old;—
When the woods at Kilmorie are scarlet and gold.

When the woods at Kilmorie are scarlet and gold,
And the vines are like blood on the wall,
I hear o'er the winds on the wood and the wold,
A bitter, insistent call:—
'Tis the cry of our slain,
Appealing, in vain,
For help, where the brave souls fall,
And its crazy demand doth the whole world hold,
When the woods at Kilmorie are scarlet and gold.

LINER CALIFORNIA SUNK WITHOUT BEING WARNED

Torpedoed Off the Coast of Ireland--- Loss of Life May Reach 50.

Only Citizen of United States On Board Was Among the Saved.

Washington Report—Another trans-Atlantic passenger steamer plying between New York and British Isles—the California—has been sunk by a German submarine. Like the Lusitania the steamer is declared to have been torpedoed without warning, and some of her passengers and crew, including two women and several children, are said to be missing. The only American on board was rescued.

The sinking of the liner took place off the coast of Ireland. The survivors among her 31 passengers and crew of 184 are being taken to Queenstown. The California was a vessel of 8,662 tons.

Consul Frost cabled the State Department to-night that the British passenger liner California had been torpedoed without warning off the Irish coast, and that the one American known to have been on board was saved. Some of the passengers and crew were still missing, including two women and several children.

The captain of the ship was quoted as saying the submarine did not hail or give any warning before firing two torpedoes from a distance of 300 yards and sending the California down.

The American survivor was John A. Lee, of Montgomery, Ala., who is supposed to have been a member of the crew.

LIST OF PASSENGERS.

New York Despatch — The British passenger liner California, one of the crack ships of the Anchor Line fleet, has been sunk off the coast of Ireland with a probable loss of life. Messages to the State Department in Washington and to the officials of the line at New York to-day told of the catastrophe, but did not say whether she was torpedoed or struck by a mine.

The liner carried 31 passengers and a crew of 184, only one of whom so far as is known, was an American. Advices to the local offices said there were 160 survivors.

The California was armed when she left here on January 29, with a stern gun, and carried a large cargo, including, it was said, war supplies. The vessel was due in Glasgow to-day or to-morrow.

The officials of the line said they did not believe there were any Americans in the crew.

The passengers, it was said by officials of the line, were all British or Canadian subjects. The British shipping commissioner here said that only four members of the crew were shipped at this port, none of them being Americans. The rest of the crew, he said, was taken on at Glasgow, and he believed they were all British subjects.

The California's passenger list follows:

First cabin — J. L. Broughton, Shanghai, China.

Second Cabin—Mrs. A. Smith, Mrs. I. Kidd, Edith Smith (infant), Calgary, Alberta; Nell Gillie, New York City; Miss Margaret McLeod, New York City; Miss Madge Roberts, Toronto, Ont.; Miss Annie Chambers, Firthcliff, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Anderson and son, Vancouver, B.C.; Mr. and Mrs. A. Gilchrist, New York; Miss Rose Martin, Whiteplains, N.Y.; Alex. Martin, Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. A. Cuthill, Casper, Wyoming; Mrs. Mary I. O'Donnell, Master Cornelius O'Donnell, Master James O'Donnell, Miss Mary O'Donnell, Philadelphia.

Third Cabin—J. Anderson, Boston, Mass.; Miss Margery Sinclair, Boston, Mass.; Mrs. Jennie McKinley, Bridgeport, Conn.; Miss Jessie Robertson, Buffalo, N. Y.; Mrs. Margaret Little, Master John Little, Miss Mary Little, Miss Margaret Little, Master Andrew Little, New York; Alfred Knox, New York City, and Miss Annie Forbes, Toronto, Ont.

Although many of the above list are recorded as coming from American cities, it was explained by the officials that all the passengers were nevertheless British or Canadian, who either resided in them or booked from them.

Built at Glasgow in 1907, the California is registered as a vessel of 5,682 tons gross, and 470 feet in length.

FOUR OTHERS AT SEA.

Officers of the California, the first large passenger liner to be sunk since the publication of the recent German note defining a new sea policy, were Captain John L. Henderson; Surgeon, William K. Alcer; Purser, D. Etherington; Chief Steward, W. Henry.

The loss of the California leaves the Adriatic, Baltic and Celtic, also British passenger vessels now at sea to be heard from, the Baltic being due to arrive in Liverpool to-day.

The California was one of four large twin screw passenger vessels built in 1907 for the Anchor Line fleet, the others being the Cameronia, Caledonia and Columbia. She was 470 feet long, and was fitted up with all modern conveniences for the comfort of sea travelers.

TONNAGE OF 22,625 SUNK.

Including the California, British, Italian and Peruvian ships of a known tonnage of 22,625 have been sent to the bottom during the last 24 hours by German submarines. In addition one British steamer, the tonnage of which is not known, and two British steam trawlers and two fishing boats also have been sunk, while the British steamer Azul, a vessel of 3,676 tons, is reported as "probably" sunk.

The sinking of the Italian steamer Ferruccio, of 2,192 tons gross, is also announced.

The British steamers St. Ninian and Corsican Prince were sunk to-day, says the Central News. The survivors have been landed. Seventeen men are reported missing.

An American special to the Copenhagen Telegraaf learns from a wireless message received from Rotterdam that the master of the steamer Samarinda states that he has taken on board 119 people from vessels sunk. The Samarinda is now off Vigo Harbor, where the shipwrecked will land.

Walter Hines Page, the American Ambassador, has been notified that the sole survivor of the Belgian relief ship Lars Kruse, which was sunk by a torpedo or mine near the Belgian coast on Monday, has been landed in France. Mr. Page telegraphed this report to Ambassador Sharp, at Paris, with the request that he get in touch with the survivor and forward his full account of the sinking of the vessel to the State Department at Washington.

The crew of the British steamer Palmleaf, assert that after their vessel had been torpedoed by a German submarine, the captain and chief engineer were made prisoners by the Germans who left the other members of the ship's company in open boats.

SINKING OF PORT ADELAIDE.

An official statement by the British Government concerning the sinking by a German submarine of the English passenger liner Port Adelaide, says:

"The British steamer Port Adelaide carrying passengers from London to Australia was torpedoed without warning on Saturday by a German submarine. The passengers were rescued by the Dutch steamer Samarindas and landed at Vigo. The master, however, was made prisoner aboard the submarine.

"Germany's withdrawal from her pledge to the United States not to sink passenger ships without due warning thus has been emphasized."

SPAIN MAKES BIG PROTEST ON SUB. WAR

Plainly Intimates That It Cannot Tolerate Germany's New Policy.

BOLIVIA WITH U. S.

Will Completely Support Wilson in Crisis With the Hun.

London, Feb., Cable—The Bolivian Minister of Foreign Affairs, says a Reuter despatch from La Paz today, has announced that Bolivia has decided completely to support the attitude of the United States in the crisis with Germany.

Madrid, Feb. 7.—The text of the Spanish government's reply to Germany's submarine war zone note follows:

"His Majesty's government has attentively examined the note which your serene highness was good enough to remit to me the 31st of January, in which is set forth the German government's resolute intention to interrupt, as from the following day, all sea traffic without further notice and by no matter what arm around Great Britain, France, Italy and in the eastern Mediterranean. I must say that the note caused a very painful impression on the Spanish government. The attitude of strict neutrality which Spain adopted from the beginning, and has maintained with loyalty and unshakeable firmness, gives her the right to expect that the lives of her subjects engaged in sea trade should not be placed in such grave peril. It also gives her the right to expect that that trade should not be troubled nor diminished by such an increase in the extent of zones in which the Imperial government insists that, in order to attain its ends, it must use all weapons and suppress all limitations which it has hitherto imposed upon its methods of naval warfare.

"Even before the Imperial government had set aside these restrictions, His Majesty's government had protested, holding them insufficient to comply with the prescriptions of international maritime law. But the methods of war announced by Germany are being carried to such an unexpected and unprecedented extreme that the Spanish government, considering its rights and the requirements of its neutrality, must with still more reason protest calmly but firmly to the imperial government, and must make at the same time the necessary reserves, imposed by the legitimate presumption of responsibility which the Imperial government assumed, principally in view of the loss of life which its attitude may cause.

"His Majesty's Government bases its protest on the fact that the decision to completely close the road to certain seas by substituting for the indisputable right of capture in certain cases a pretended right of destruction in all cases is outside the legal principles of international life. Above all, and beyond all, it considers that the extension, in the form announced, of this pretended right of destruction to the lives of non-combatants and the subjects of neutral nations such as Spain, is contrary to the principles observed by all nations, even in moments of the greatest violence. If the German Government, as it says, expects that the Spanish people and Government will not close their ears to the reasons which have caused its decision and hopes that they will co-operate to avoid further calamity and sacrifice of human life; it will also understand that the Spanish Government, while disposed to lend at the proper time its initiative and support to everything that could contribute to the advent of a peace more and more wished for, cannot admit the legality of exceptional methods of warfare. These methods, indeed, notwithstanding Spain's rights as a neutral and her scrupulous fulfilment of the duties incumbent on her as such, make more difficult and even stop altogether her sea trade, compromising her economic life and threatening with grave dangers the lives of her subjects.

"His Majesty's Government, supported more firmly than ever by the justice of its position, does not doubt that the Imperial Government, inspired by the sentiments of friendship which unite the two countries, will find, notwithstanding the severe exigencies of this terrible war, means of giving satisfaction to Spain's claims. These claims are based on the inexorable duty which binds a Government to protect the lives of its subjects and maintain the integrity of its sovereignty so that the course of national existence be not interrupted. For the reasons set out His Majesty's Government feels itself fully sustained in its position by reason and law."

A FRENCH VIEW.

Paris Cable—The Petit Parisien, commenting on the Spanish reply to the German submarine note, says:

"When a country proclaims its sovereign right and the necessities of its national existence in condemning an act which strikes at its interests, it follows that it is disposed, if necessary, to resist any violation of its rights."

RUSSIAN GAINS.

Enemy Dislodged From Some Trenches in Roumania

Petrograd Cable—The War Office Wednesday issued the following official communication:

"Western (Russian) front: On the Beresina River the enemy, after a violent bombardment of our position in the region of the village of Zaberesina undertook an offensive against our trenches in the neighborhood of that village. He succeeded in taking a small island in the river and a trench occupied by one of our companies. A counter-attack by our reinforcements threw the enemy back into his own trenches.

"Roumanian front: Our advance guards dislodged the enemy from trenches in the region south of the River Bisalou, and repulsed enemy counter-attacks.

"Persian front: We captured from the enemy a caravan of 225 loaded camels.

"Caucasus front: We have repulsed hostile attempts to attack our right wing.

"According to later news received of our shelling of Tenedos, one anti-aircraft squadron and the lighthouses of the island were destroyed and eight lighters sunk. Inhabitants who fled from Tenedos declared there was no hospital on the island, and therefore the enemy, by hoisting red cross flags at the moment of the shelling, violated anew the Geneva convention.

"A hostile ship which was attempting to approach a hostile cruiser formerly sunk by us near Castellorizo, was sunk by our artillery fire."

BITTER COLD OVER GERMANY

Berlin Cable— Frigid weather continues to prevail throughout Germany. The temperatures taken generally have broken all records since these have been kept. The lowest temperature yet recorded was by the Potsdam observatory Sunday night, when 23 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit, were recorded. At Zehlendorf, a suburb of Berlin, the thermometer registered 23 degrees below, in Berlin 9 degrees below, and at Kassel 20 degrees below. The general average throughout the country for two days probably has been 10 degrees below zero.

Several towns have found it necessary to close public institutions, schools and places of amusement.

SPAIN WILL BE NEUTRAL

Paris Cable— A Havas despatch from Madrid says that Premier Romanones has received a great number of telegrams from different parts of the country congratulating the Government on its firm resolution to continue to maintain strict neutrality."

No definite word has been received as to the decision of the Spanish Government in regard to President Wilson's suggestion of severance of diplomatic relations with Germany. The foregoing despatch indicates, as did press cables yesterday, that Spain does not contemplate a rupture.

HUN THREATS OF OUTRAGE WILL BUT STEEL BRITAIN

King George's Rousing Words at Opening of the British Parliament.

Confident the People Will Respond to Every Demand Made On Them.

London, cable (non)—King George in opening Parliament to-day, said that the response of the Allies to the invitation of the President of the United States outlined their aims as far as could be done at present. The King added:

"Threats of further outrages upon public order and the common rights of humanity serve to steel our determination."

The opening of Parliament, always picturesque, was shorn of much of its color and pomp. The peers wore none of the customary robes or regalia. The King was clad in the uniform of an admiral of the fleet, and all the lords and members of the House of Commons who are entitled to wear either khaki or navy blue followed the example of the King. There were also other innovations in keeping with the time of war. The Imperial escort consisted of officers of the overseas fighting forces. The royal gallery in the House of Lords was set apart for wounded soldiers. For the first time in the history of Parliament the importance of the foreign press was recognized by the allotment of seats in the press gallery to correspondents from Allied and neutral countries.

The weather was clear and crisp, and as the Royal procession passed from Buckingham Palace to Houses of Parliament dense crowds lined the streets.

King George's speech follows:

"For the third time in succession I summon you to your deliberations in the midst of war. Certain overtures, of which you are aware, have been made by the enemy with a view to opening peace negotiations. Their tenor, however, indicated no possible basis of peace. My people throughout the Empire and my faithful and heroic Allies remain steadfastly and unanimously resolved to secure the just demands for reparation and restitution in respect of the past and guarantees for the future which we regard as essential to the progress of civilization.

"In response to an invitation by the President of the United States of America, we have outlined, so far as can be done at present, the general objects necessarily implied by these aims. Threats of further outrage upon public law and the common rights of humanity will but serve to steel our determination more.

"During the winter months my navy has maintained unchallenged its ceaseless watch on the seas, and enforced with rigor the blockade of the enemy. My armies have conducted successful operations, not only in Europe, but in Egypt, Mesopotamia, and East Africa, and they are fully prepared to renew the great struggle in close and cordial co-operation with my Allies on every field. I trust their united efforts will carry the successes already won to a victorious conclusion.

"I invited representatives of my Dominions and my Indian Empire, which have borne so glorious a share in the struggle, to confer with my Ministers on important questions of common interest relating to the war. The steps so taken will, I trust, conduce to the establishment of closer relations between all parts of the Empire.

"You will be asked to make necessary provision for effective prosecution of the war. Accomplishment of the task to which I have set my hand will entail unsparing demands on the energies and resources of my subjects. I am assured, however, that my people will respond to every call necessary for the success of our cause with the same indomitable ardor and devotion that have filled me with pride and gratitude since the war began. I therefore confidently commend to your patriotism the measures which will be laid before you, and I pray that Almighty God may give His blessings to your counsels."

FIFTEEN SHIPS WERE SUNK BY HUNS IN NEW CAMPAIGN

Tuesday's Reports Show Seven Neutral, Eight Ally Vessels Victims.

Only One Survivor of Belgian Relief Ship, Which was Plainly Marked.

London Cable— Germany's submarine warfare apparently is growing in intensity. Tuesday's reports shows that under-water boats have probably accounted for fifteen additional vessels—seven neutral and eight belligerent—of [illegible]. Eight of the fifteen known to have been sunk, one is reported to have been "torpedoed," and the [illegible] are "believed" to have been sent to the bottom.

Of the known sunken vessels six were British, one was Spanish and one Swedish; of those supposed to have been sunk four were Norwegian, one was British and one Russian. The vessel reported merely as torpedoed, and which is not known positively to have been sunk, was a Norwegian ship.

One of the British steamers torpedoed and sunk was the Port Adelaide carried passengers. Ninety-six persons from her, including members of the crew, were picked up at sea. The captain of the Port Adelaide was captured.

ONLY ONE SURVIVOR.

The Admiralty informs the Associated Press that there is only one survivor of the crew of the Lars Kruse, the Belgian relief ship, sunk by a German submarine. No others are known to have been saved.

The ship was marked plainly according to the German instructions, and her manifesto showed that her entire cargo was consigned to the Relief Commission.

An official of the Belgian Relief Commission is quoted by the London Express as saying that every relief ship is now held up, and that if the steamers are held many days longer the Belgians and French in the territories occupied by the Germans probably will be starved.

The official added that the Swedish Ambassador at Berlin was making representations to the German Government with the object of having respected the previous guarantee regarding relief ships.

OTHER SHIPS SUNK.

Announcements of the sinking of the following ships were also made: British steamship Floridian, of whose crew 16 members have been landed; British ship Warley Pickering; the British sailing vessel Belford, British steamer Wartenfels; the Russian steamer Cerera; the Norwegian steamer Rigel, 32 of her crew picked up at sea; the Norwegian barque Wasdale, 19 of her crew picked up at sea; the Norwegian barque Songdal, 22 of her crew picked up at sea; the Norwegian barque Tamara; the Swedish steamer Bravalla, whose crew was fired on by the submarine as they entered the boats; the British steamers Palmleaf and Cliftonian, the Norwegian steamer Thor.

CREWS LANDED.

The Politiken of Copenhagen says that the crew of the Danish steamer Klampenborg, which was sunk on January 22, declare that when the steamer went down a French warship was approaching. The submarine suddenly dived, and they are convinced that, in sinking, the Klampenborg collided with and destroyed the submarine. The crew of the Danish schooner Standard, also sunk on Jan. 22, declare that the German submarine which destroyed her flew the French flag.

The Admiralty announces that the crew of the British steamer Euphrates, the sinking of which was announced Feb. 1, has been landed at Gibraltar.

FIVE SHOTS AT AMERICAN STEAMER.

Five shots were fired by the German submarine U-45, at the American steamship Westwego on January 31, it was announced officially here to-day. None of the shots took effect.

The announcement follows:

"The master of the United States steamer Westwego reports that on the 31st of January, when 50 miles west of Fastnet, his ship was fired at from astern by the German submarine U-45. Five shots were fired, none of which, however, took effect. The master accordingly stopped and sent a boat with his papers.

"The German submarine commander then demanded oil from the Westwego, his demands being accompanied by threats to sink the ship if it refused.

"The claim to take the interests of neutrals into consideration put forward in the German wireless message of February 5, is not strengthened by this report from the master of a neutral ship."

The Westwego, a tanker, sailed from Philadelphia, Jan. 17, for Harrow.

SINKING OF THE GAMMA.

London Cable — The editor of the Amsterdam Telegraaf has gathered particulars of the destruction on Feb. 1 of the Dutch steamship Gamma, which, although sailing from the United States direct to Holland with a cargo of oil cake for the Netherlands Government, was without warning, first shelled by a German submarine, and subsequently sunk with bombs. The weather was bitterly cold, and there was a high swell. The Gamma carried a crew of 21 men. Those doing duty on deck had just sighted land when they heard a shot and saw a shell fall about 100 yards from the vessel. They observed about a mile distant a submarine, which had given no previous warning, and which continued firing. After several shells had been fired the crew took to the boats. The first officer went in one boat towards the submarine and handed over the ship's papers. A German officer and two sailors from the submarine came with five bombs on board the Gamma. Two bombs were placed on the port side, a third in the hold and a fourth on the starboard side. The three Germans then left the ship with a sack of flour, ten pounds of butter, a tin of bread, a box of ham, a pair of scales, chronometer and various tools from the machine room. The submarine, which then disappeared, showed neither flag nor number. Eight minutes after the Germans left the Gamma heavy explosions were heard. The Dutch vessel reeled and rapidly sank. The German submarine never offered the Dutch crew a tow. They first sighted an American ship, which apparently did not see them. After rowing an hour they met the Dutch liner Vondel, which took them on board and landed them at an English port. The Dutchmen lost all their personal belongings.

Mrs. B. Hilker Passes Away

The death of Mrs. Bis. Hilker came with shocking suddenness on Tuesday morning at 10.30.

Although Mrs. Hilker had been in poor health for many months, death was quite unexpected and was a great shock to our townspeople.

Last summer Mrs. Hilker took an extended vacation and rest in Ohio, and felt somewhat improved, but during the fall and winter anaemia developed steadily, and her strength gradually failed, until Tuesday morning she bade farewell to loved ones and passed into rest.

Deceased's maiden name was Roth Ella Baker. She was born at Glenmorris, Ontario, moving with her family to Listowel. Sixteen years ago the family came to Port Elgin, where she later was married to Mr. Bismarck Hilker. She was a member of St. John's Episcopal church, and took her part in all the activities connected therewith. Deceased was of a bright and cheerful disposition, and made many friends.

To the sorrowing husband, the loss is irreparable, for she was a true helpmeet. Mrs. Hilker is also survived by her mother, four sisters and two brothers.

The funeral will be held on Thursday to Port Elgin cemetery.

Wm. McLean, of Mitchell, Iowa, a former Port Elgin man, died on Feby. 6th. A widow and two children survive.

UNDERWOOD NEWS

(Intended for last week)

Mr. and Miss Matheson, of Zorra, have been on a visit at Mr. Geo. H. MacKay's.

Mr. Harvey Inkster and son James, have returned home from the west. He has spent the past six month, with his brother at Lucky Lake, Sask.

The five weeks' Agriculture Course, conducted by Mr. N. C. MacKay, Walkerton, and the two week's Domestic Course, conducted by Miss Ross, Toronto, was brought to a close on Friday evening. The members of the classes held a social evening in the hall. Reeve Johnston was chairman, and in his usual manner carried through a short program, consisting of piano duett, by the Misses Wittig; readings by Mrs. H. McLean, and Miss Sadie MacKay; solos by Mrs. George, Miss L. Summers and Mr. Watt MacKay; Trio by Miss S. MacKay and Messrs. S. Roppel and Arch MacKay; Violin music by W. Orford, also Messrs. Brown, Avis and MacKay. A short address was also given by Rev. McNabb, Mr. N. C. MacKay, of Walkerton, spoke in high terms of the splendid interest, taken by the young men of the community in the class work, and the attendance averaged as high as any class conducted in the province. Miss Ross, in a few well chosen words gave an outline of the work done in the past two weeks. The average attendance for the forenoon was 37 and afternoon 82. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Miss Ross and Mr. MacKay, for the splendid work done, during their stay here. At the conclusion of the programme a dainty lunch was served by the ladies.

The annual meeting of the Underwood Cheese & Butter Co., was held in hall on Tuesday. A large number were in attendance. The creamery for the past year, has increased its out put, under the management of Mr. Shannon, who has given such splendid satisfaction. Mr. Shannon gave a splendid and instructive address at the meeting, explaining to the patrons, the way to handle their cream, to get the best test from it. Mr. Shannon has been engaged again for 1917.

Miss Lydia Colewell, is ill with pneumonia, but at latest reports is slowly improving.

Mr. Chas. Robinson, Jr., on 4th, is also critically ill with pneumonia. Nurse McKeath is in charge.

BORN—On Sunday, February 4th at Underwood, to Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Inkster, a son.

UNDERWOOD RED CROSS WORKERS

During 1916 Underwood Red Cross Workers sent the following articles to Red Cross Headquarters, Toronto:—135 pairs of sox; 65 pairs of sox to Tiverton platoon; 174 flannel shirts; 66 pyjama shirts; 144 surgical shirts; 54 sheets; 21 pillows; 39 pillow cases; 4 bed quilts; 36 towels; 6 helpless shirts, 63 doz. handkerchiefs; 374 dressing pads; 9 doz. face cloths; 10½ doz. mouth wipes; 84 splint pads; 400 gauze wipes, 2 doz. bandages.

The thanks of the workers is given to the Underwood A. O. U. W. Lodge for their great kindness in giving the free use of their hall and free fuel for all the meetings held by the workers during the greater part of the year and also to Mr. Inkster for carrying all freight to Port Elgin free of charge. Those who have supplied the sewing machines are also thanked.

Carload of genuine Frost wire just arrived. Call and get prices. Theue & Brill.

White School Social

Storms and cold have no fears for the people who went to the box social at White school, Friday night. The place was packed, and everyone had a happy time. Those in charge provided nice warm stables for the teams, and everyone was bent on having a long up good time and they had it, the affair not being over until nearly 3 a. m.

The proceeds amounted to $127, $30 being realized from Miss Chappel's luncheon set, which was won by R. O. Kimdie, of Hamilton, a traveller calling on the local newspapers and stationery stores.

Mr. McCannel always looks after the chairman's job in fine style. The program included songs by Miss Hazel Webb, Ross Pierson, Pierson family, Eddie Smith, and Mel Black; Recitations by Elsie Miller and Eva Cook; the Burrowes orchestra; mouth organ selections by six boys; a ghost and witch drill by the girls; a dialogue "Borrowing Trouble" by the young people of the section.

Auctioneer Cavin got rid of the 116 boxes in good style, and a fine time was spent enjoying the many dainty things the ladies had prepared. Mr. Knechtel has charge of this school, and he has a fine lot of bright boys and girls.

TIVERTON

The Spelling match, held at Mr. H. E. Steincamp's Tuesday night was a success. $16.00 was handed over to the Women's Institute to buy material for the patriotic work they are engaged in.

Mr. Kenzie Campbell and daughter Olive who had been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Gibson, 4th of Bruce for the past two months, left Friday for their home at Bruce Mines.

Miss Giesz, Underwood, is visiting at the parsonage.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Kay, St. Thomas, spent Tuesday with relatives in this vicinity.

ELSINORE

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Smith at Elsinore when their eldest daughter, Agnes Belinda was married to Mr. Nelson Napoleon Ard, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Ard of Elsinore, by the Rev. Theo. B. Edmunds, Allenford. The bride entered the room accompanied by her father to the strains of the wedding march played by her cousin, Miss Georgina Lawson of Durham. The bride who was unattended, looked charming in a gown of white silk net with a white silk embroidered veil crowned with orange blossoms and carrying a beautiful boquet of bridal roses and carnations. Guests were present from Durham, Walkerton, Port Elgin, Hepworth, Tara, and other points. The beautiful and numerous presents show the high esteem in which the bride and groom were held. They will make their home in Sault Ste. Marie Mich.

OBITUARY

The death on the 2nd inst' of Miss Minnie McDougall, Kilbride, gave rise to much sympathy with the sorrowing brothers, Messrs. Dougald and John McDougall, the surviving members of a respected family, who trace a very long record of unbroken connection with their present farm. The funeral to Kilnaughton cemetery on the 5th inst. was largely attended. The mourners were from all parts of the parish and outlying districts, and as the procession of vehicles and pedestrians slowly moved through the village streets, all blinds were drawn. The services, both in Kilbride House and at the graveside were performed by the Parish minister, Rev. Jas. MacKinnon, M. A., and Rev. Mr. McLean, Baptist minister. The deceased was of a very kind and genial disposition, and given to hospitality after the manner of her forebears. Many in the parish will miss her benefactions.—Oban (Scotland) Times.

Don't Miss It

"The Young Village Doctor" to be played at Ribey's school 2nd of March, [illegible] The scene is laid in a village and a young doctor opens up a practice. The woman from whom he rents his office is over-interested in the doctor's patients and talks a great deal. She has a daughter, Jane, who is a nurse, and who makes a strong impression on the doctor. A young lawyer is a rival for the hand of Jane. The doctor wins out. There are numerous songs, funny episodes, and a wedding reception. The play will be very interesting. Eight ladies and six men take part in the play. Don't forget the date Ribey's school, 12th of Bruce, March 2nd. All come to the big box social in aid of the Red Cross.

Geo. Reiber Dead

George Reiber, a highly respected resident of Port Elgin, died Sunday after a brief illness. An obituary will appear next week.

On account of relatives coming from the west the funeral is announced for Saturday at 2 p. m. in the Evangelical church, but may be further postponed if relatives do not arrive. Should this be necessary notation will be made on the funeral cards.

Bright Young Life Goes Out

On Wednesday morning a bright young life was cut off, when Lawrence Schrank second son of Mr. and Mrs. Sol. Schrank, passed away, after a few weeks illness. Lawrence Schrank was a splendid young lad well known by everyone in town, and his taking off just as he was about to enter on his 17th year is generally regretted.

After leaving school a year ago, he engaged with Mr. Crawford, druggist, where he proved himself faithful and studious in all his labors. On New Year's day he took a position in Toronto but was only there a few days when he contracted a cold, which finally developed to rheumatism of the heart. During his illness he made a plucky fight to recover, but all that the best medical skill and careful nursing could do was finally outdone by the Grim Reaper.

Lawrence was a great favorite with the young people of the town. He was a member of the town band; a star player on the junior hockey team, and he will be greatly missed by his companions.

To the parents the taking off of their son is a severe blow. They watched over him as only loving parents can, but the call was for him to cross the Great Divide, and they mourn deeply. To them the heartfelt sympathy of all will be extended as well as to his two sisters and a brother.

The funeral was held on Friday afternoon and was largely attended. The C. O. F. members, of which deceased was a member, attended in a body, also the high school pupils. The Stevens-Hepner employees attended, the works being closed for the afternoon. There were many beautiful floral tributes, including flowers from the Bruce Telephone Co., Junior Hockey club, Citizens band, the C. O. F. and High School pupils.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Geo. Dick, has returned to the west.

Mrs Wm. Harper enjoyed a visit to Wiarton.

Ebenezer hockeyists beat Paisley Monday.

Communion service Sunday morning.

Miss Black after spending a pleasant few weeks with relatives here, has gone to resume her military business again.

Mr. Chas. Seng has returned home having spent a couple of months visiting relatives and friends in the Western provinces and United States. There is a lot of war talk across the border and much preparation, but the nation will not go to war for other than self preservation.

Mr. Herb Miller has rented his farm on the Elora near Burgoyne.

The "mock trial" at the literary meeting last week brought out a houseful. The prisoner Mr. Byers, who was accused of setting fire to buildings was honorably acquitted and set at liberty.

Hockey

Southampton won in a great game of hockey Monday night by 5 to 2. The first half the play was close and even, and ended 2-2. The second half the visitors showed better form and speed. Their defence men Huber and Haug were in frequent rushes, and but for the fine work of Tassie in goal the score would have been much larger. The game was clean and the spectators had the worth of their money and more. A good fast, clean lot of players is being developed on both teams. Southampton players were Talyor, Haug, Huber, Knowles, Cameron, Gammel. Port—Tassie, Kuhl, Gear, Rideout, Mann, Bell.

Southampton girls and Port Elgin girls had a game afterwards, and they had a good time. The score was 1 to 0 in favor of Southampton. The players were: Port—Vera Eidt, Olga Rideout, Irma Stephenson, N. Bailey, B. Hanbidge, Mrs. L. Christian, L. Wells. Southampton:—Reta Haug, M. McIvor, L. Longe, O. Trelford, M. McHaney, Mrs. Seymour, R. McAuley.

Owing to Miss Haug's recent illness she did not play and Miss Hanbidge evened up.

Mr. McIvor made an excellent referee and kept the players well in hand in both games.

Letter From Roy Thomson

In a letter home Roy Thomson says he received all his parcels in good shape and that he had a good time enjoying them. He says; "It is hard to get a chance to write. It is very cold, and we have no warm place to go to, where we may write. We have three or four inches of snow, and very cold. I thank all the people in Port who sent me things, and may be able to write soon. You notice I am corporal now. I expect to see Jack McDuff one of these days. Doug. Darling came over to see us the other day. He looks fine".

New Teacher For Public School

The School Board were very fortunate in their advertising for a new teacher to take the place of Principal Shaw resigned. There were no less than 38 applicants.

The gentleman selected is Mr. F. W. Aylesworth, of Chatham.

Mr. Aylesworth has particularly fine attainments, being an arts graduate of Queen's University, as well as holding high professional teaching certificates, and physical culture course certificates. He will assume his duties March 1st.

PRINCIPAL SHAW

Principal Shaw and family are busy preparing for their removal to Niagara Falls.

On Monday afternoon the pupils of the fourth form and the teachers assembled and presented Mr. Shaw with a fine self-filling fountain pen, and an address setting forth their regret at the removal of the Principal. Miss Leta Piper was also given by her classmates, a handsome leather bound volume of Tennyson's Poems.

Miss Teressa Nelson of Saugeen, is staying with Mrs. Paddon at Milverton.

"It's all right to know the world news through the daily, but who would want to be without his own district news," said Mr. R. U. Campbell as he paid his Times subscription. "And by the way, I have been a regular subscriber to the Times for more than 40 years, Since the time of Editor Benner."

Sam Fleming was a caller at The Times office. He has just returned from England after two years at the front. Sam is rather used up with bronchitis and rheumatism. A short sketch of Pte. Fleming's experiences will appear next week.

The death occurred at Mitchell, Iowa, February 5th, after one year's illness of heart trouble of Mr. William R. McLean, formerly of Port Elgin. He was in his 42nd year. He is survived by his widow and two children Rena and Wilbur and also two sisters Mrs. William Bricker and Mrs. George Stephenson, both of Windsor, and three brothers Alex of Britton, Hugh of Washington, and Charlie, of Rainy River.

According to advices from the north, says the Guelph Mercury, Dennis Izzard has been crowned Warden of Bruce for the year. The new King is big enough to command respect, admiration and homage. If we recollect aright, Dennis was a familiar figure on the streets and boulevards of Port Elgin, where he follows the profession of reeve and builder. As he walked through the town he generally carried a door frame in one hand, a couple of window sash on his shoulder, and just to keep the balance, enough scaffolding to build a three story affair on the other side of his make-up. He ought to be able to spank any of the Bruce legislators who get a little troublesome.

Sometimes we print paragraphs about how much a load of hogs brings, but a crop of alfalfa such as Alex J. Lamont and Wm. Schell have makes one take notice. They have 50 bushels and 30 bushels each. It is known as "Saugeen alfalfa seed centre" and sells at $25 per bushel.

Ed. Clazie is able to be around again after a long illness. He joined the 160th and while in training at London was laid up for months, with swelling of the muscles of his legs. He was unable to go overseas, and was discharged a couple of weeks ago, as not able to stand military service.

Mr. Alex Lamont represented the Agricultural society at the Fairs convention in Toronto last week. The Times learned from Mr. Lamont that the attendance was the largest yet and that the reports showed the fairs of the province were not going behind, but rather ahead. He noted that the convention favored putting more women on the directorate, and that where a good president was found he should be kept in office as long as possible. Mr. McDiarmid of Lucknow, is the man in charge of this district. Mr. Lamont enjoyed his trip very much.

The wreck in which 19 of Irwin Bros., horses were killed was caused while the train was standing on a siding at Pays Place station, 170 miles west of Schrieber. A brakeman turned a switch the wrong way, allowing a through freight to crash headlong into the standing train. The horses were in the cars next the engine, which accounts for their destruction. A large amount of grain was lost from the wrecked cars of the other train. The men all escaped injury. This information was brought by Mr. Robt Irwin, who has returned from the west.—Advocate.

Grand Trunk Commissary Car.

When the full account is written of Canada's participation in the war there will be no more interesting chapter than that dealing with the methods employed in transporting this great army of men from the training areas to the seaboard, over distances, in many instances, of thousands of miles, and thence from our Atlantic ports to the English camps and the trenches of Flanders and France. One side of this work which stands out most clearly is the use of the Military dining cars which have been specially created in Canada to provide our soldiers with meals while on their long railway journeys. No country in the world ever faced the problem of carrying over so great a distance by rail so many men and to meet the situation something new in railroad equipment had to be provided to attend to the cooking and serving of meals. The ordinary dining car, as compact as a watch in its arrangement, can feed thirty people at one sitting, but how to dine hundreds of men at one time was the problem. That it has been mastered in splendid fashion is a compliment to the dining car experts of Canada, and particularly to Mr. E. W. Smith, Superintendent of dining and parlor car service, Grand Trunk Railway System. So successful have been the methods adopted on the Grand Trunk that they have attracted the attention of authorities in all parts of the world and were recently inquired into by the United States Government.

The Grand Trunk Commissary Car shown in the illustration is the largest travelling kitchen ever devised. It is eighty feet long, has a full-sized hotel range ten feet in length, steam-cooking apparatus and sixty-foot refrigerator space and store-room capacity for many tons of provisions. Eight cooks work in it without confusion, while a passageway running the whole length of the car allows the military waiters to pass on their way to and from the coaches. In the movement of a battalion two of these cars are used, the military special being run, as a rule, in two sections. The commissary car is placed in the centre of the train in order that it is easy of access from all the coaches. When a battalion entrains the Commissary Department is always the subject of keen interest among the men in khaki. The military cooks are for the time being out of action. The comfort of the men, so far as diet is concerned, depends upon the railway's crew, in charge of a specially chosen steward. The system of service is explained to the soldiers by the steward at the first meal on the train. The non-commissioned officer in each coach appoints his own waiters. Punctually as the minute hand of the watch reaches the meal hour the waiters from the first car on the train and the last car walk through to the commissary. The cooks have been preparing for hours and everything is ready and piping hot. Along the great counter is spread the various portions of the meal. It is breakfast time and the morning menu calls for oatmeal porridge, meats, potatoes, bread and butter, jam and coffee. Two men take the big trays of meats and potatoes, another the bread, already sliced and buttered, another the porridge, another the coffee and so to the end. As soon as the first two coaches have been supplied two more squads of waiters arrive until all are served. Within fifteen minutes every man on the train is busy with his meal. Serving over twelve hundred men in fifteen minutes without fuss or furore means organization and that is the secret of this railway's method of handling the problem. The rule is that every man shall be amply supplied and nothing delights the cook more than to see boys relish some favorite dish so well that they come back for "more." Three fine meals a day make happy interludes on the long rail journeys. The appreciation of the officers and men for the service given makes the hard work necessary in carrying out the task a pleasure to the men concerned.

LITTLE WORRIES IN THE HOME

These Bring the Wrinkles and Pallid Faces That Make Women Look Prematurely Old.

Almost every woman at the head of a home meets daily many little worries in her household affairs. The care of her little ones, the work about the house all contribute to these worries. Most of them may be too small to notice an hour afterwards, but they constitute a constant strain that affects the blood and the nerves and makes women look prematurely old. The effect of these little worries may be noticed in sick or nervous headache, fickle appetite, tiredness after slight exertion, and the coming of wrinkles which every woman dreads. To those thus afflicted Dr. Williams' Pink Pills offer a speedy cure; a restoration of color to the cheeks, brightness to the eye, a hearty appetite and a sense of freedom from weariness. Among the many thousands of Canadian women who have found new health and strength through these pills is Mrs. G. Strasser, Acton West, Ontario, who says: "I am the mother of three children and after each birth I became terribly run down. I had weak, thin blood, always felt tired and unable to do my household work. After the birth of my third child I seemed to be worse, and was very badly run down. I found the greatest benefit from the Pills, and soon gained my old time strength. Indeed, after taking them I felt as well as if my girlhood, and could take pleasure in my work. I also used Baby's Own Tablets for my little ones and have found them a splendid medicine for childhood ailments."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, or you can procure them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Frock Fashions.

There are many dresses of stockinet.

And numbers of very bewitching gowns are of lustrous charmeuse.

Beads are quite frequently used for trimming—on crepe, satin and silk dresses.

Chenille embroidery is another feature of some new spring gowns.

Coat dresses are youthful, becoming and fashionable—as you'll see by the early spring exhibits.

High-waisted effects are promised a vogue; so, too, is the barrel skirt, the round neck and the combination gown of two kinds of silk.

HOLD UP YOUR HEAD.

It Will Stimulate You Mentally as Well as Physically.

In a letter to Robert Grimshaw of the New York University, William Muldoon gives advice that it would be well for every man and woman, boy and girl in America to take to heart. He says:

"I was taught in early manhood not to throw my shoulders back, stick my chest out, draw my stomach in or hold my chin down like a goat preparing to butt, but to always try and touch some imaginary thing with the crown of my head. If one tries to do that—first understands how to try and then tries—he doesn't have to pay any attention to the rest of his physical being. That effort to touch something above him not with his forehead, but with the crown of his head will keep every particle of his body in the position that nature intended it should be.

And as a boy I was advised to frequently back up against the wall and make the back of my head, my shoulders, hips, heels all press against the wall at the same time, and in that way get an idea of what was straight, or in other words, how crooked I was becoming by drooping."

Both to young and old Mr. Muldoon's "hold your head up" suggestion is inspiriting. Try it. The effect physically and mentally is immediate. When the head goes higher the impulse is to deep breathing. A man finds more elasticity in his limbs. He steps out with more vigor. There is more spring to his gait. He isn't a [illegible], shambling creature, but a man alive. With the elevation of the crown of the head there seems to come clearer thinking, a more buoyant feeling and a brighter outlook.

They Made Him A Different Man

WHAT B. DRAPER SAYS OF DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

His Troubles Were Numerous and of Long Standing, But Four Boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills Drove Them All Away.

Sedley, Sask., Feb. 22—(Special)—"Dodd's Kidney Pills made me a different man." The speaker was Mr. Benjamin Draper, well known and highly respected here. He is a fine, healthy representative of the prairie province, and he says he owes his health to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I was in bad shape all round when I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mr. Draper continued. "My trouble came from hard work when I was young. My joints got stiff, my muscles cramped and I suffered terribly from a sore back. I was depressed and low spirited, I was always thirsty and I had flashes of light before my eyes.

"I had rheumatism and heart flutterings, my appetite was fitful, my memory was failing and I was troubled with shortness of breath. Four boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills made me a new man."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cured all Mr. Draper's troubles because they all came from sick kidneys. If you have any of his symptoms Dodd's Kidney Pills will help you.

The Grey North Sea.

Englishmen at home, in comfort,
Buying and selling, too,
Smoking your pipes together,
Just as you used to do;
Think of the sailors striving
To keep you safe and free,
Out on the North Sea riding,

Women at home, in safety,
Sleeping and waking, too,
Tending the home and garden,
Just as you used to do;
Think of the sailors straining
To keep your children free,
Out on the North Sea watching,
Out on the grey North Sea.

All ye in England dwelling,
Free from the war's alarm,
Just as in peace-time living,
Sheltered from want or harm;
Think of the sailors daily,
For the sake of you and me,
Out on the North Sea dying,
Out on the grey North Sea.

JEWELED BOOKS.

Ancient Volumes Bound in Gold and Incrusted With Gems.

Bibliophilists will tell you that the bookbinding of the ancient has never been equaled, let alone surpassed. They will extol the beauties of the bindings of the Byzantine period, when books had covers of gold, silver and copper studded with jewels, the massive tomes being carried in imperial processions.

The book produced in the middle ages were of remarkable beauty inwardly and outwardly. Religious manuscripts were enriched with illuminations themselves, while their covers were of silver, gold or enamel, incrusted with gems. These books were generally bestowed as splendid gifts by bishops and princes on monastic houses and churches, where they were laid on the altar or chained to a desk.

The dukes of Burgundy were renowned for their libraries. The "Boccacio" of Charles the Bold was bound in red velvet set with five large rubies. Another Burgundian book was velvet bound and set with fifty-eight pearls of great size.

The library of Philip the Good of Burgundy surpassed all other book collections of the time. It contained nearly 10,000 volumes, all richly illuminated on vellum, with bindings of damask, satin and velvet, incrusted with jewels, with clasps of gold and gems.—Pearson's Weekly.

Inflammatory Rheumatism Permanently Cured

NEW BRUNSWICK LADY GIVES FULL PARTICULARS OF HER RECOVERY.

There are many types of rheumatism, but none worse than inflammatory.

It was this kind that almost killed Mrs. Edw. Warman, of Kent Jct., N.B.

Every known remedy she tried, different doctors gave their advice, but the disease increased.

Weak and despairing, she was at her wits' end when the remarkable cure of Thos. Cullen was published. This gentleman was cured of rheumatism by "Ferrozone." Consequently, Mrs. Warman used the same remedy. Here is her statement:

"For five years I have been rheumatic. I tried various forms of relief without success. The disease increased, settled in my joints and muscles; these swelled, caused excruciating pain and kept me from sleeping. My limbs and arms stiffened, my shoulders were lame, and prevented me from working. Week by week I was losing strength and despaired of finding a cure. It was a happy day I heard of Ferrozone. Every day I took Ferrozone I felt better; it eased the painful joints, gave me energy and a feeling of new life. Ferrozone cured my rheumatism, cured it so that not an ache has ever returned. Even damp weather no longer affects me."

Ferrozone has power to destroy Uric Acid, neutralize and enrich the blood, and therefore does cure the worst cases. Mrs. Warman's statement proves this.

By removing the cause of the disease and building up a reserve of energy, Ferrozone is certain to cure. Sufferer, isn't it about time to stop experimenting? Ferrozone is a CURE, order to-day, 50c per box, or six for $2.50, sold by all dealers or direct from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

TRY USING RICE.

It Will Often Take the Potato's Place.

Now that potatoes, owing to increased prices, are no longer within reach for common use, rice is the best possible substitute.

Boiled rice is the best thing in sight. It is at once available, and, measured by its nourishing qualities, of far greater, pound for pound, use in keeping up the strength of those who eat it. Where a family needs to be coaxed into a fondness for rice instead of potatoes, try serving it some specially attractive fashion. There is much in appearance. A mound of fluffy rice, well cooked and lightly piled in the centre of a platter, lends itself to a great variety of appetizing variations.

The secret of properly cooked rice lies in an abundance of rapidly boiling water. After washing the uncooked rice so that the last rinsing water is not even cloudy, the grains should be sprinkled into a kettle of rapidly boiling water, the rice being added so gradually that the violent ebullition of the water will not be checked. There must be plenty of water and every grain of rice must fairly dance up and down.

For instance, try a decoration of green peppers, cut in rings and cooked until tender in slightly salted water. Lay these green rings in an interlaced row, well up on the mound of rice. The effect will be found exceeding good and the peppers will also add a delicious bit of flavor to the rice, when served together.

Pimentoes cut in strips and dropped for a few minutes into boiling water make another excellent garnish for boiled rice, the pieces being scattered irregularly around the edge, as a border.

A sprinkling of finely chopped parsley over the mound of rice is sightly as well as appetizing and a few spoonfuls of minced boiled ham, lightly strewn over the rice, is an improvement to the appearance of the dish as well as a piquant addition to the taste.

A little trick which goes a long way toward the satisfactory serving of rice is the use of a fork rather than a spoon. When cooking, the rice should never be stirred with a spoon, but with a fork; when serving, where possible, use two forks instead of a spoon. The spoon crushes the delicate particles and gives the rice a mushy look which must always be avoided.

Chicken livers in brown sauce, boiled calves' liver, creamed codfish, or minced meat of any kind, are all improved when served with a border on boiled rice, in which case potatoes need not figure in the meal in any form.

Lumbago's Misery Ceases, Every Aching Muscle Cured

JUST RUB ON OLD-TIME "NERVILINE."

Not necessary to drug inside!

That awful stiffness that makes you yelp worse than a kicked dog will be cured—cured for a certainty, and quickly, too, if you just rub on Nerviline.

Rub Nerviline right into the sore spot, rub lots of it over those tortured muscles, do this and the pain will go. You see Nerviline is thin, not oily. Therefore it sinks in, it penetrates through the tissues, it gets right to those stiff, sore muscles and irritated nerves that make you dance with pain.

You'll get almost instant relief from muscle soreness, stiffness, aching joints, lameness or rheumatism by rubbing with Nerviline. It is a soothing liniment, and doesn't blister, doesn't burn or even stain the skin.

It's the most harmless cure in the world for Lumbago, Back Strain or Sciatica. It takes away the ache at once and ends your misery quickly.

Now quit complaining—don't suffer another day—Nerviline, that good, soothing old-time liniment will limber you up mighty quick. Get busy to-day. Any dealer anywhere can supply Nerviline, 25c.

Father's Failure.

Johnny Blank, who had seen eight summers go by, not very long ago developed a fondness for playing "hookey" from school. After two or three offences of this kind he was taken to task by his teacher.

"Johnny," she said, "the next time you are absent I want you to bring me an excuse from your father telling me why you were not here."

"I don't want to bring an excuse from father," protested the boy.

"Why not?" asked the teacher, her suspicion plain.

SHALL BREAK GERMAN FRONT SAYS GEN. HAIG

British Leader Tells Press Men of His Confidence of Success.

BIG GUNS NEEDED

"Peace Can Only Come With Absolute Victory, by Our Arms."

New York Report.—The following semi-official French communique is given out by the Wireless Press:

Certain of the French war correspondents have been received by Sir Douglas Haig. Following are some of the statements made by the General:

War is certainly not merely the clash of armies. In order to conduct it prodigious preparations and intense machinery are necessary. Our two most serious preoccupations at present are railway and artillery. We have had to construct within the last few months in the rear of our lines over 250 kilometres of railway lines, and recently I sent for the managers of the greatest railway companies in Britain. I showed them on the spot what had been done and what remains to be done. They understood the urgency and extent of the task.

As regards munitions, we have realized the maximum. At this moment we can supply our allies in excess of their needs. We must, however, have more artillery, especially heavy artillery. The point is not merely to be [illegible] to the enemy, but to overwhelm him with the whole of our strength."

The journalists asked the question whether a great offensive was imminent and whether Sir Douglas thought German lines would be pierced.

The General replied: "Who will commence it? The French, the Germans or ourselves, that matters little. If the enemy commences, either in the north or south in salients which appear to him favorable or on former fields of battle, we are ready to receive him, and his effort will cost him dear. We have trained armies and fully equipped so that his attack may be turned into a rout, and so that at no moment will there be a possibility, even in the rear, that he can be able to reintrench himself. You ask me whether we shall break the German front. Most certainly we shall, and severely, and at many points. The Germans, to defend themselves behind their front, have a very powerful network of railways. The first attacks of the general offensive may find themselves defeated at some points and uncertain at others. But we shall strike with full force until the total destruction of the German army is attained."

On being asked whether that would take place this year or not, he replied: "The year will be decisive in the sense that one will see take place on the battlefields the decision of the war. That is to say, the event after which Germany will be shown to be beaten militarily. It may be that the year of decision is also the year of peace. We all desire and shall do everything in our power to bring about the desired result. Peace can only come with absolute victory, which will be attained by the force of our arms. The Allies must not allow themselves to be deceived by German suggestions.

"In offering peace Germany only thinks of preparations for the next war. If we unfortunately yielded to perfidious appeals the drama would recommence in three years. Soldiers with their good sense and instinct understand that. Those on whom it depends with their blood wish to create peace with victory. In this respect I have entire confidence in our troops. Their morale is above all suspicion. With regard to peace we are all 'squarely well,' by which I mean the indomitable will to fight until the end."

DANDIES OF INDIAN ARMY

The Khattaks Are the Celts of the Hindus.

Have Queer Kink Found in All Pathans.

British Headquarters in Mesopotamia, Cable.—(British Eyewitness) (Correspondence of The Associated Press)—The Khattaks are the dandies of the Indian army. They are like the Celts of the British army, reckless, generous, improvident, mercurial, altogether a friendly and responsive sort of people, but with the queer kink that one finds in all Pathans, that sensitive, sensitive point of honor or shame which puzzles the psychologist.

The Khattaks kept their spirits up all through the hot weather. They are lively sometimes. As soon as the drum and oboe sound they start capering and make their work fly. The Khattaks are as responsive to the music as the Highlanders to the bagpipe, but they are more demonstrative. It is a good thing to be near when the Khattak Rifles leave camp. At the first sound of the drum and oboe they break into a wild treble shriek, tailing off perhaps, with the balbala, the Pathan imitation of the gurgling of the camel.

These tribesmen are easily excited, seldom dispirited, and if so, only for a short time. Their eagerness is sometimes a positive danger during an attack. At Sheikh Saad it was difficult to hold the Khattak company back while the regiment on their left was coming up; they were all for going ahead and breaking the line; and in the end it was a premature sortie of the Khattaks that precipitated the assault.

Old Shere Khan, a typical Khattak, the other day killed, right inside the regimental lines a rival for his wife's affections, and he could not have done anything else. The man's offense carried its own sentence in the minds of all decent-thinking Khattaks. Before the deed the subadar-major begged the adjutant to get the rival, Sher Gul, well away before the night; otherwise, he said, there would be trouble, but the adjutant could not look into the case until the next morning. In the meantime, to safeguard Sher Gul, he told the subador to see that twenty stout men slept around his bed.

The subadar made it fifty, but to no avail. At one in the morning the adjutant was called out quietly to see the remains of Sher Gul. His head was lying on the edge of the bed, a hatchet imbeded in the skull. He had been killed with fifty men sleeping round him. They had all slept like the dead, and nobody had heard the blow. There was no evidence against Shere Khan whatever public opinion was on his side.

"Zam, Zan and Zar"—land, women and gold—according to the Persian proverb, are at the bottom of all outrage, and with nine Khattaks out of ten, it is Zan.

The Khattak thinks no end of his personal appearance. He dresses to kill, and loves to go and parade in the bazaar in his gala kit. He will spend hours over his toilet, peering at himself in the glass all the while without a trace of self-consciousness, though his neighbors may be almost as interested in the performance as he. Then, with his hair neatly oiled and trained to the level of the lobe of his ear, he will stride forth in his flowery waistcoat of plum color or maroon velvet with golden braid, spotless white baggy trousers a flower behind his ear, a red handkerchief in his pocket, a cane in his hand, and for headgear a high Kohat lungi black with yellow and crimson ends, and a kula covered with gold.

CANADIANS DECORATED FOR VALOR

Long List of Heroes Honored for Bravery On the Field.

TWO BARS TO CROSS

While a Large Number Have Won the Military Cross.

London Cable.——The following honors have been gazetted:

Bar to Military Cross—Capt. Acting Major Henry Sloan Cooper, Infantry, led a successful raid with great courage and coolness; on many previous occasions he had done fine work. Capt. Roy Aubrey Spencer, Engineers, displayed great courage and skill in counter-mining against enemy galleries; on one occasion he was cut off from our lines for twelve hours.

Military Cross—Lieut. Acting Capt. A. William Archibald Cameron, Infantry, led a raid against the enemy with marked gallantry, inflicting many casualties and capturing seven prisoners. Lieut., Acting Capt. Harry Harold Coombe, although severely wounded during the raid continued the command and encouraged his men. Lieut. Charles Southwell De Gruchy, Artillery, displayed great courage and skill in establishing and maintaining communication under very heavy fire materially assisting in the success of the operations. Lieut. William Ralph Elliot, Infantry, assumed command and handled a company in attack with marked courage and ability; he reorganized the men who carried out consolidation of the position. Lieut. William George Ross Gurdon led a successful raid against the enemy with great courage and determination.

Burdette Wing Harmon led a raiding party and bombed three dugouts, inflicting many casualties and brought back two unwounded prisoners. Chas. Herbert Ivey, Engineers, succeeded in laying a trench with tracing tape in spite of a very heavy fire. Later he showed marked courage and skill in guiding a working party to the site.

Clarence Errol Kidd, Infantry, led a party across 200 yards of No Man's Land, and although his knee was severely wrenched in going over, he continued to carry on, and later organized a small party himself and helped to carry in the wounded under heavy fire. Wm. Angus Livingstone led a section of a raiding party with marked gallantry, inflicting many casualties and capturing several prisoners. Arthur Renner McCormick led a raid against the enemy's trenches with great gallantry; previously he had carried out several daring reconnaissances. James Goldie McMillan, Engineers, for conspicuous gallantry in assisting and exploding a large mine against the enemy galleries; after the explosion he, with great personal risk, dug down into the enemy's galleries from a point in No Man's Land thereby capturing and consolidating 700 feet and rendering the infantry in this sector safe from enemy mines, also capturing valuable mining apparatus. There were other indentifications during this operation.

George William Harold Milliken (Infantry), led a raiding party and bombed dugouts, inflicting heavy casualties. He assisted in the capture of four prisoners. Coulson Norman Mitchell (Engineers), displayed great courage and skill in counter-mining against enemy galleries. On one occasion he was cut off from our lines twelve hours. Victor George Wright Morris, led a raid against the enemy with great courage and determination and later although wounded, he continued to carry on. Robert Roy Murray (Engineers), displayed great courage and skill in counter-mining enemy galleries; on one occasion he was cut off from our lines twelve hours. Chas. Harold Peters (Infantry), led a patrol against the enemy, having personally reconnoitered the line of advance on two previous nights; later he led a relief party under heavy fire and succeeded in bringing in a wounded man. Donald Graham Robertson (Artillery), displayed great courage and skill in counter-mining enemy galleries, on one occasion he was cut off from our lines twelve hours.

Distinguished Conduct Medals—501,-[illegible] Corp. J. F. Barclay, Engineers, showed courage and skill in countermining enemy galleries, he was cut off from our lines twelve hours; [illegible] N. W. Hanna, Infantry, showed great courage and determination when in charge of a section himself, he killed an enemy officer; 136347 Sergt. J. T. McGillivray, Engineers, showed great courage and skill in mining against enemy galleries, he was cut off from our lines twelve hours; A4115 Pte. D. E. Purser, Infantry, showed marked courage and initiative during a raid, and himself shot four of the enemy, he has at all times set a fine example to his men; 452502 Corp. J. C. Raspberry, although wounded, led a raiding party to the trench and displayed great courage and skill in counter mining enemy galleries, he was cut off from our lines twelve hours; 409424 Sergt. J. W. Strong, Infantry led a raiding party with great courage and skill, entering enemy's trenches and inflicting many casualties.

NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, IN JOINT PROTEST TO BERLIN

Scandinavian Nations Declare Submarine Campaign Illegal In Principle.

Cite Case of Neutral Ships Not For Enemy Ports--Reserve Right of Action.

London Cable.——Reuter's Copenhagen correspondent reports that Norway, Sweden and Denmark have handed to the German Ministers identical notes protesting the naval measures taken by Germany and Austria-Hungary, and making all reservations regarding the loss of life and the material damage resulting.

The following official communication has been issued:

"On Tuesday, the 13th instant, the Danish, Norwegian and Swedish Governments handed to the German Ministers in their respective capitals notes identical in tenor, protesting against the barring of certain sea zones announced by Germany and Austria. The note begins by recalling the fact that during the war the Governments have several times found themselves obliged to formulate formal protests against serious infringements of the rights of neutral involved by measures of various belligerent powers."

It then emphasizes the fact that the Governments, whose actions on these various occasions were, as always, inspired by the spirit of the most perfect loyal impartiality, confined themselves to defending the imprescriptable rights of neutrals.

After pointing out that the Governments have on previous occasions protested against measures of belligerents tending to restrict the free use of the seas by neutrals, the note proceeds to emphasize that the Governments on this occasion are all the more bound to maintain, in taking the same point of view, that the obstacles placed in the way of neutral navigation are now more considerable, in both extent and gravity.

"The note draws attention to the fact that the only rules of international law which might be invoked in support of measures having at their object the prevention of all commerce and all navigation with the enemy are those relating to a naval blockade. The note affirms that no belligerent has the right to prohibit peaceful navigation through zones the limits of which are very distant from enemy coasts, which could be blockaded only in legitimate manner. The Governments recall the universally recognized law on naval blockade, namely, that a neutral ship cannot be captured if it is not making any attempt to violate the blockade, and that in the event of a ship being captured it must be brought before a prize court in conformity with the general regulations.

"The Governments declare their anxiety in regard to the measures which have been announced is aggravated further by the fact that the zones declared dangerous will, it appears, be watched exclusively by submarines, whose activity involves great danger for neutrals' subjects, as has been shown by experience on various occasions in the course of the war.

"Finally, the note points out that the measures announced will be all the more contrary to the principles of international law, if, as the tenor of the communications of the Imperial Governments seems to indicate, they are to be applied without distinction to all ships entering the zones described, and consequently to those not bound for enemy ports, but on the way from one neutral port to another.

"On the ground of the considerations set forth above, the Governments formally protest against the measures taken by Germany and Austria and Hungary, and make all reservations with regard to the loss of human lives and to material damage which may result from them.

KAISER USED SANDBAG METHODS ON UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR

So Mr. Gerard Himself Characterized Their Treatment of Him.

Copenhagen, via London Cable.—The attempt of the German Government to negotiate through James W. Gerard, who had retired as Ambassador to Germany, desired concessions and pledges, was of a nature to lead Mr. Gerard to characterize it in conversations with a Foreign Office representative as "sandbagging." He refused even to transmit the text of the concessions desired unless he was allowed to report in code—a privilege of which he had been deprived since the rupture of relations.

Incidentally, the same embargo on Embassy communications was extended afterwards to telegraphing in open language within the Empire, in an attempt to convey instructions to American consuls; then to long-distance telephones used for the same purpose, and finally to letters to the Embassy; to the local Berlin telephone service, and even to the use by the personnel of local telephones at nearby hotels.

ADMIRAL GAUCHET.

Commander at Saloniki a Miquelon Fisherman.

St. Pierre, Miq., Report.—Much interest was aroused here by the recent promotion of Admiral Dominique Gauchet to be admiral-in-chief of the Allied navies at Saloniki, news of which was received in his little French colony after considerable delay. Admiral Gauchet was born on Dog Island, one of the St. Pierre group. His father was a fisherman, and as a boy he was trained to that pursuit.

Thirty years ago he went to France and joined the navy. Frequent acts of heroism in service led to his steady promotion. Admiral Gauchet is in his 59th year.

SUNK ON TUESDAY.

Afric, British	11,9[illegible]
[illegible] West (motor), Norwegian	[illegible]
[illegible], British	1,160
Ada (brigantine), British	18[illegible]

London Cable.—Seventeen members of the crew of the White Star Line steamer Afric are missing as a result of the destruction of the vessel by a submarine. The Afric was of [illegible] tons. Two other vessels, the British steamer Ferrand, 1,160 tons and the Norwegian motor [illegible] West, are reported to have been sent to the bottom. The tonnage of the Norwegian ship is not known.

The Afric belonged to the Oceanic Steamship Navigation Co., a subsidiary of the White Star Line. Steamship men here familiar with the vessel said she had accommodation for about [illegible] passengers, second-class only. She was engaged in the Liverpool, Capetown and Australian service. At the office of the White Star Line here it was said the ship had been engaged in Admiralty service, but whether so engaged when sunk they did not know.

The Afric had a gross tonnage of 11,999 tons. She was last reported in the maritime register as leaving Capetown, Africa, on Dec. 3, with her destination not given.

NOT SEEKING TO AVOID WAR.

Berlin, Cable.——It is absolutely denied here that Germany in a note to the United States, or through other medium, is inviting suggestions for the avoidance of actual war. It is reiterated that the Imperial Government is not permitting doubts in any quarters regarding the position actively assumed in the U-boat warfare and that there can be no talk or thought of recession from the programme already being carried out.

In view of this it is declared in authoritative circles that any further parley or exchange of notes with the United States may be dismissed as unwarranted and improbable.

The origin of the report is ascribed to the recent announcement, made through the Swiss Government, that Germany was willing to negotiate respecting the amended treaty of 1799.

NOT STARVING YET.

Port of London Returns Show Little Decrease.

London Cable.——(Correspondence of the Associated Press)—"The returns of the Port of London for the past eight months will not encourage the hopes of the Germans of starving London or ruining its trade by the depredations of submarines," says the latest report of the Port of London authority on conditions at the great London docks.

The tonnage entering and leaving the port shows a substantial decrease as compared with the preceding year, but the quantity of goods actually unloaded shows a decrease of only three per cent., the tonnage being 1,829,000 this year, as compared with 1,885,000 last year. Prohibitions on the import of several classes of merchandise have been in force during this period, and have undoubtedly affected the figures appreciably.

The stocks of goods, especially foodstuffs, in the public warehouses has actually increased 22 per cent., being 687,000 tons against 564,000. The present stocks are the largest in the history of the docks of London.

As compared with pre-war times the traffic of the port of London has increased from 1,649,000 tons in 1913 to 1,829,000 for the corresponding period this year.

The detailed report indicates increases in receipts of most articles of food. Wheat, sugar, rice, cheese and cocoa all show an improvement. Meat and tea show a decrease.

The supply of timber is of next importance to foodstuffs, says the report. Difficulty in handling has been acute in this respect, owing largely to the enlistment of one third of the 700 timber porters, who handle the stack the timber after it has been discharged by the stevedores.

The irregularity of the arrival of timber-laden ships has also been a trying factor. A few days ago thirteen timber vessels arrived at the docks on a single tide. But in spite of such difficulties, the stock of timber at the docks has increased from about 200,000 tons to more than 250,000 tons.

Much of the work of the docks is now being done by soldiers from one of the numerous dock laborers' battalions specially recruited for work of this kind here and in France.

SEA LANE OF ARMED SHIPS

Guards Liners Through Danger Zone Off Britain.

Extends Hundreds of Miles Into Atlantic.

New York Reprot.——The Associated Press says that a funnel-shaped sea lane of armed patrol ships extending 300 miles from the British Isles westward has been establishde by the British Admiralty, according to passengers arriving here yesterday and to-day on the Cunard Line steamship Andania and other vessels from Liverpool. Light cruisers, patrol boats and armed trawlers literally lined the course taken by the Andania from Fastnet until she was safely out of the war zones, it was said.

The patrol boats at times were so close to the Andania that her passengers said they appeared to be separated by less than half a mile of sea in some places. At the western or sea end of the lane of safety, however, the passengers said they learned from the officers of the Andania the guarding craft were spread out in such a manner as to be invisible from the bridge of the Andania.

Seven steamers from various British ports arrived in New York harbor to-day within a few hours of each other. This immediately suggested to shipping men that the vessels had been convoyed across the Atlantic in a body and when passengers were interviewed they confirmed the conviction that the Admiralty had evolved such a scheme of meeting the submarine menace.

When the Cunard liner Ascania, which was among to-day's arrivals, left Liverpool fifty merchantmen were concentrated there awaiting convoy, passengers of the Ascania said. As warships arrived the steamers were escorted off on their voyages in groups of three and four.

The Ascania carried 101 cabin and seven third-class passengers. The Laconia arrived at almost the same time with thirty-seven passengers. They reported picking up an S.O.S. call shortly after leaving Liverpool. Two cruisers escorting the Laconia left her, evidently in response to the call.

The other ships arriving were the Atlas and Hermes from London, the Clifton and Stocker from Cardiff, and the Brighton from Barry.

THE ADRIATIC SAFE.

New York Report.—The White Star Line steamship Adriatic, the first British passenger vessel to leave New York after Germany's unrestricted submarine warfare began, has arrived safely at Liverpool, according to a cablegram received here to-day by the International Mercantile Marine. The ship reached its destination Monday morning, the message read.

NEW DEMAND BY STATES TO BE EMPHATIC

Germany to Be Told She Must Free U. S. Seamen Now Prisoners.

ARMING OF SHIPS

Navy Guns May be Loaned —Congestion in Ports Grows Serious.

Washington Report.—An enquiry concerning the redetention by Germany of the 72 American seamen brought in by the prize ship Yarrowdale was despatched to Berlin to-day by the United States, preliminary to more vigorous action if the men are not promptly released.

The plight of these sailors occupied much of the time at to-day's Cabinet meeting, given over to the crisis growing out of Germany's submarine warfare. It was agreed that their liberty again should be demanded in most emphatic fashion. Pending complete reports as to the treatment of German crews on war-bound ships in the Philippines, Hawaii and elsewhere, however, the Government will content itself with the enquiry as to why the Americans are held and under what conditions.

The Cabinet discussed every phase of the international situation. The question of providing navy guns for American ship-owners desiring to arm their vessels for defence was considered, but it was stated officially afterwards that no decision was reached. It is understood that there was a division of opinion with most of the Cabinet officers strongly favoring furnishing the guns, both on the ground that permitting American ships to remain idle in port suggests acquiescence in Germany's course, and because the congestion of ocean-bound freight in the country's ports is assuming serious proportions. Two or three members are said to have contended that the policy would be unwise. The President will decide the question.

News that an official statement had been issued at Berlin announcing that yesterday was the last "day of grace" allowed neutral shipping before the unrestricted submarine warfare went into full effect, did not appreciably increase tension here. There has been full realization ever since the sinking of the Anchor liner California that the German campaign is being carried on in defiance of the United States, and that Providence only is to be thanked that the overt act against American life that will precipitate war has not been committed.

There were strong indications during the day that the severance of relations with Germany would be extended to the other Central Powers. Austria's adherence to Germany's position is regarded as practically certain to force a break with that country. Ambassador Elkus at Constantinople was instructed to-day to ascertain whether submarines operating under the Turkish flag were under the same instructions as those of Germany and Austria.

Serious differences with Turkey already exist over interference with Armenian and Syrian relief, and the detention of more than 1,000 American refugees.

It develops that no message has been received at the State Department since the break with Germany from either Ambassador Elkus in Constantinople or from Consul-General Murphy in Sofia, who cared for American interests throughout Bulgaria. All cables to and from both points must go through Vienna, but officials have no indication as to whether they are held up there or by the local Bulgarian and Turkish authorities.

Meanwhile, the naval collier Caesar, loaded with food and clothing contributed by Americans for the sufferers in Syria, and the cruiser Des Moines, loaded with medical supplies, are lying at anchor in Alexandria harbor, unable to continue their voyage to Beirut, because of the uncertainty as to what greeting they would meet. They are long overdue at Beirut, where they were not only to unload their supplies for the destitute Syrians, but also to take on board the detained Americans.

Germany's redetention of the Yarrowdale prisoners, who had been ordered released upon the demand of the United States just before the break in relations, has aroused keen indignation, the incident almost overshadowing temporarily other issues of the grave situation.

SPOILED HUN PLAN.

Paris Temps Says U. S. Broke Too Soon.

Paris Cable.—"The rupture was [illegible] plans of Germany," says the Temps, "and Germany is now working to delay the consequences. The Imperial Government wanted by terrorism to stop the maritime communication of the Allies, and it has succeeded in detaining a large number of neutral ships in port. It is a partial satisfaction, which it seeks to prolong by the activity of its pirates against Allied ships, and by noisy affirmation that no one will be spared. Perhaps Berlin also wants to find out the real efficacy of its submarine war before going to the limit of its defiance.

"The results thus far are not up to all expectations, and that is why Germany is seeking to gain time and to manoeuvre opinion in the United States and other neutral countries."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The coal man is next to being King.

Ever hear the politicians talling about everyone saving and giving? Then read about the pomp and display at the opening of the Provincial Legislature.

* * *

School children are to be given opportunity by the O. A. C to get eggs for hatching. The government is going about things in the right way. Interest the boys and girls and the future of Agriculture is assured.

* * *

Premier Hearst in his Speech from the Throne last week said "the finances of the province are in a satisfactory state" which ought to mean that at least the government has decided not to tax buggies or wheel barrows this year.

* * *

United States papers are worrying about traffic being blocked and shipping tied up. If some of them will look up their files they'll find where they asked "What the British navy was doing." They have a chance now to show what the U. S. navy can do.

Billy MacDonald of North Bruce has been advocating votes for women the past few years, but it does look as if the government is endeavoring to beat him out of the glory, having one of its members introduce the measure However as long as the vote is given to women is the main thing.

* * *

Probably the big piece of work before the Provincial Legislature this session will be the plan to place returned soldiers on the land. It is to be hoped that something more workable than that of granting a tract of land to be bartered off at will, will be evolved. If a little less land were given and the land located somewhere in older Ontario the scheme would be more valuable, not only to the soldier, but to the province generally. The scheme of scratching around on new areas, when the older sections need people is not a good one.

* * *

Considering the severe winter, and the fact that more snow has fallen and more storm prevailed than any winter within the memory of old residents in this section, should not the G. T. R. be commended for the effort it has made in keeping their trains moving. It is true not much freight has got this way, or been moved out, but during the severest storms the trainmen have always managed to get a passenger and mail service train out and in every day. It is only a dozen years since this branch was tied up for two weeks on account of snow. Let's be honest, and give credit where it is due. The old railway has done well in keeping things going.

Occasionally governments appoint a man to high position regardless of his politics, and Premier Borden is to be commended on his appointment of Mr, J Bruce Walker, to go to England to confer with Australian, and New Zealand officers on the placing of soldiers on the land after the war. The call is from the British authorities, and Premier Borden could not have made a wiser selection, Mr. Walker is a Grit to the core, yet he has held the high position of Canadian Immigration Commissioner in Glasgow, London, and lately Winnipeg. Through his hands passed millions of dollars, which the Borden government loaned to Western farmers a few years ago, when crops were bad. "J. B." as we know him, for The Times editor had the privilege of serving under him, was a great campaigner in the days of Hon. William Paterson and Hon. A. S. Hardy and no sturdier advocate ever served the Liberal cause. But he had ability, and that's what should be recognized. He gave his best as an official of the Conservative government, and the present high appointment shows that the "patronage" system has not entirely possessed Canada's premier.

Premier Hearst has been Knighted and is now known as Sir William. He was born in Bruce County in 1863. He studied law and set up practice at Sault Ste. Marie, where he was a Sunday school superintendent and President of the Board of Trade, thus taking the widest possible interest in the city's affairs He was returned for that constituency to the Ontario Legislature in 1908, and his rapid rise to the Premiership of Ontario is one of the notable events of the Local Legislature. He advanced to that high office from the Ministry of Lands, Forests and Mines, where he put his intense interest in Northern Ontario into use. He was chosen Premier on Oct. 1, 1914, and since then his work in promoting the the Ontario temperance act and patriotic efforts mark him out. It is not often a man following the trend of Sunday school work rises to high place in politics, but in Sir William there is much sincerity of purpose. Bruce County people generally rejoice that a native of the County has been thus honored.

John Ross Robertson, editor and proprietor of The Toronto Telegram, is one of the men in Canada who has been rapping hard the honorary colonels, the barons and the knights which have been forced upon the Canadian people the past few years. We are getting a lot of these "Sirs" in this land, and in a few years there will be an hereditary nobility here. One day last week Premier Borden offered Mr, Robertson a Knighthood and a Senatorship, and he turned them both down. What a man! And yet how could it be otherwise He is the man who is busy giving his money and his energy to little children. He it is who establishes the Sick Children hospital He it is who is concerned more about whether suffering boys and girls are made whole than swanking about with a title He may not be a Knight in the high up circles, but he is King indeed in the hearts of little children. Canadians are proud of this man.

An Unenviable Position

Port Elgin coal dealers occupy a most unenviable position these days, especially the dealers who are doling out just sufficient amounts to tide families over the worst situation in the coal business that this country has ever seen.

The place is especially hard when it is considered that many people in the country districts are using coal, and the farmers are cutting very little wood for themselves. scarcely any being brought to town for sale.

Occasionally we have heard of a case where coal was refused, but we understand it has always been where wood has been at their hand if they desired it In a crisis like the present, where we know of many families in town without wood, and where the coal deliveries only amount to what can be carried on the back. Where the bakery is down to the bottom of the bin. Where the schools are threatened with closing. Where the hotels are getting coal only inlots of 500 lbs, and where some of the churches have had to be satisfied with some green wood, these are the circumstances which make it almost imperative on the part of a coal dealer, if he wants to do right, to know the supplies of everyone to whom he sells.

To find men in business willing to risk the loss of trade in other lines than coal, in order to deal honestly in the latter, it speaks well for the business integrity of these men.

What is needed now is a spirit of cooperation by all Selfish people will make names for themselves in a crisis like this which they might be ashamed of later on. Let everyone be honest in their demands on the coal man these days Let all remember that he has a hard place to fill; that he wants to be fair, and that above all he deserves fair-play and consideration for the manner in which the crisis is being bridged.

With spring near, deliveries will soon be coming regularly We suppose there is no need of our mentioning the fact that to get coal in the spring and summer will avert another hard time next winter.

ELSINORE

There passed away after a lingering illness on Friday February 9th, at her late residence Amabel, Frances McFadden, wife of Robert Carson. Mrs. Carson was born in Glenelg township, Grey County, and lived there until her marriage 21 years ago when she went with her husband to the old Carson farm in Amabel. Though of a retiring quiet disposition she was a faithful attendant and worker at the Methodist church, Elsinore, until failing health practically confined her to her home. A true wife and helpmate she patiently and persistently kept up until a few days ago she was forced to yield to the ravages of the disease that had so long attacked her. The deceased was born on March 4th 1854, so was almost sixty four years of age. Besides the sorrowing husband, she leaves to mourn her loss, three sisters and five brothers, Mrs. Andy Carson, of Amabel, Mrs. W. C. McFadden, Port Elgin; Mrs. Jas. Walker, Markdale; John, Hamilton and James also of Markdale and Thomas of Mono Centre. The funeral took place on Monday February 12th, from her late residence to Tara cemetery. The large company of friends who in spite of the bitter cold, attending to pay their last respects to one who had lived among them so long, testified to the honored place the late Mrs Carson held in the community. The deceased favorite hymn "Jesus Lover of My Soul" was sung and the funeral sermon was founded on Revelations 7. 14 17.

Winter Clouds

At the close of the windy day
The clouds pile up in the west;
In sombre blue and heavy grey
They hang like a pall, and over the bay
They grow and darken the west.

Thro' the narrow rifts in the cloud
Shines the struggling, dying sun,
Yellow and wan, thro' the thickening shroud,
As the winds are howling and wailing aloud,
And the waning day is done.

The sky is growing opaque
With the dull black clouds of storm,
And the wind is vexing the angry lake
And the waning light of the day's at stake
And is dying at east in the storm,

The persistent wind from the west
Is driving the fickle snow,
And the air has grown cold at the storm's behest—
Tho' old Winter claims that it's all for the best—
And the wind is driving the snow.

The glowering blue of the sky
Is turning to menacing black,
And the clouds pass swiftly by on high;
More squadrons are drawn from the western sky,
And the night—and all is black!

The new War Savings Certificates which have been created by the Government to encourage thrift and economy and to give everyone an opportunity to assist in financing our war expenditure, are now on sale at every bank and money order post office in Canada. The $25 certificate sells for $21.50 the $50 for $43, and the $100 for $86.

As an investment these certificates offer many attractive features, chief of which are the absolute security and the excellent interest return. For every $21.50 lent to the Government now, $25 will be returned at the end of three years.

There are two other features which are especially interesting to small investors. First, the certificates may be surrendered at any time, if the buyer should need his money; and second, each certificate is registered at Ottawa in the buyer's name and if lost or stolen, is therefore valueless to anyone else.

"Punkin Ridge" Well Played

The young people of S. S. No. 5, are to be congratulated on the big success they obtained in producing their play, "Punkin Ridge" in the town hall last week. The affair was in aid of Red Cross, and the hall was filled. Everyone enjoyed the evening immensely. The program was full of interesting numbers the smaller scholars, under the direction of their teacher, Miss Cairns, being responsible for several excellent parts, including dialogs, duets, choruses, drills, action songs, etc. Everyone of the scholars showed good training and did credit to themselves their school and their teacher.

Mr Wm. Jeffrey, in a neat speech told the audience how, with the aid of their energetic teacher, they had formed a Red Cross Society, and were doing splendid work. He said the play had realized them $175 in the schoolhouse, and by request they had brought the program to Port Elgin. He thanked the people of Port Elgin on behalf of the trustees of S. S. No. 5 for their attendance and turned the program over to Mr. D. Muir, of Yellowgrass, Sask., who was a former teacher at No. 5 and who is visiting here.

Mr Muir briefly told of his pleasure at being able to help in the program and at once proceeded with the program, which under his able chairmanship was well carried out.

Interspersing the pupils' selections were enjoyable numbers by Mr. John Schinack, Miss Hazel Webb, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McKinney, Arch Bell, James Scott. Assisting also were Miss Bennet and Miss Olive Sutherland, who played accompaniments. The musical part of the program was especially fine, and encores were imperative.

THE PLAY

Of course the play "Punkin Ridge" was a chief feature. For it the young men and young women had come through stormy weather to decorate the hall and plan the stage, and they did it nicely, for the flags and bunting, evergreens and Red Cross emblems helped to give the hall an inviting appearance. The young men looked after the seating, and the reserved plan and everything was well carried out.

There were nine people in the play, and they all interpreted their parts well. There was plenty of fun, in fact the audience thoroughly enjoyed the proceedings. "Elizabeth" was rather ancient, but she believed she had met her heart's desire in a certain "Augustus Simroy" who was supposed to be an English Lord, but who in reality was a housebreaker. Well, Elizabeth had money, and naturally her brother, Squire Brown didn't want her to throw it away. To help matters out he hired Jonathan Scruggins, who was lookin for a job as farm hand. Jonathan proved a good actor and he brought forth rounds of laughter. His courting of Elizabeth after the arrest of Simroy was quite good. But this got him in trouble with his own girl Belinda Hopkins, and in fact got both Elizabeth and Belinda into a fight. However, the Squire got things settled. His daughter Annie welcomed her lover Henry Clifton, and Jonathan reconciled Belinda, the policemen having eliminated Augustus Simroy from the stage.

Where all took their parts in such a capable manner, we refrain from individualizing.

The players were:

"Squire Brown" ....Archie Bell
"Elizabeth" ..... Mrs. Geo. Osborne
"Jonathan Scruggins"..Geo Osborne
"Annie Brown" ....Mary Jeffrey
"Harry Clifton" ......Edgar Hillis
"Belinda Jane Hopkins,"Della Herron
"Augustus Simroy" ..... Elmo Holtz
Policemen ..Archie Cameron, Charles Nelson.

The proceeds were $60.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Commentary. 1. Sick people at the pool of Bethesda (vs. 1-4). 1. After these things (R. V.)—After the healing of the nobleman's son and other events of that time. Feast of the Jews—This has been spoken of by scholars as the "unknown feast" because there is given no information as to what feast it was. Early writers thought it was the Passover and that opinion is still held by some. Many suppose that it was the feast of Purim, held in commemoration of the escape of the Jews from slaughter in the time of Queen Esther. If it had been the Passover, it seems almost certain that John would have mentioned the fact. Jesus went up to Jerusalem—There were two motives that Jesus had in attending the feasts at Jerusalem. 1. He was careful to observe the Mosaic law. 2. On such occasions he would have an opportunity to reach great numbers of Jews from various regions. At Jerusalem he had previously met with opposition and that opposition had not ceased, but he had a mission there and unhesitatingly went to fulfil it. As the city is situated on much higher hills than Galilee, it is proper to speak of going up to Jerusalem. 2. By the sheep market—"By the sheep gate."—R. V. As there is no word in the text for market, it is as allowable to supply "gate" as "market"; and, as in Nehemiah's time there was a gate that was called the sheep gate (Neh. 3: 1, 32; 12: 39), it is reasonable that it was the sheep gate. A pool...Bethesda—The name Bethesda is Aramaic, the form of the Hebrew language then used, means "house of mercy." Sick people received benefit here. The exact location of this pool is uncertain. The traveler is shown a large pool near St. Stephen's gate, which is declared by the priests in charge to be the pool of Bethesda. It is reached by a descent of thirty feet from the present level of the street at that point. Some believe that the pool of Siloam, which is fed by the Fountain of the Virgin, east of the walls of the city, is the pool in question. Having five porches—These were shelters constructed about the pool for the sick who came to the place.

3. A great multitude—The curative power of the water of the pool was supposed to be great. Then, as now, there were great numbers of sick people in Jerusalem. Impotent folk—Diseased persons. Halt—Lame. Withered—Afflicted with paralysis. Waiting for the moving of the water—The Revised Version omits this phrase and the following verse because these sentences are not found in some of the best ancient manuscripts. It is possible that some copyist inserted this portion as an explanation of v. 7. The moving of the water indicated that at that instant the pool had special curative powers. 4. An angel—Or messenger. Troubled the water—The messenger, or agency, for troubling the waters may have been the intermittent character of the springs which fed the pool. First—Not the first one only was healed, but as many as stepped into the water at once after the moving of the waters, were made whole, or sound. This was the belief the people held in the virtues of the pool of Bethesda.

II. An afflicted man healed (vs. 5-9). 5. A certain man—Neither his name nor his family connection is given. There is nothing in the narrative to show the social position of this man. He was afflicted with a bodily weakness of thirty-eight years' standing. From v. 14 it might be inferred that his infirmity was induced by his own sins. 6. Saw him lie—We are not told expressly why Jesus was at the pool of Bethesda, but it is natural to conclude that he was there for the purpose of performing the cure here described. There were many sick persons there, but the record speaks of his noticing the condition of this man only. A long time—He had been afflicted for thirty-eight years, but we are not told how long he had been lying by the pool. Wilt thou be made whole—Would you like to be made well? It is not often that a sick person is found who is not desirous of being made well; but the cases are many of those who are morally diseased who prefer to remain in that condition. 7. Sir—The sick man did not know Jesus, but he answered him respectfully, and doubtless hope began to arise in his breast. I have no man ..... to put me into the pool—The curative power of the water lasted but a few minutes after being "troubled," and haste was necessary to enter the pool. He could go but slowly, unaided, and he had no friend to help him quickly into the water.

8. Jesus saith unto him. Jesus singled out this man, as we view the case, for two reasons. 1. He had been seriously afflicted for nearly forty years and he had lain for some time at the pool, hence his condition was known to very many in Jerusalem. 2. Jesus saw that he was in a condition of soul to accept his ministry and to exercise the necessary faith. Arise, take up thy bed and walk—Jesus spoke directly to the impotent man, giving him a command that he of himself could not obey, and yet a command that he would gladly obey. The command came to him from Jesus with such force and assurance that he saw a new world opened before him. He was to arise, take up his sleeping mat and walk. It does not require much effort on our part to imagine the thrill that went through his entire being at the words of Jesus. This is one of the few recorded instances of healing that Jesus performed without a request to that effect by the afflicted one. 9. Immediately the man was made whole—The cure was wrought instantaneously. The man responded in desire and faith, and the power of Jesus wrought the cure. More than half a full lifetime had been spent in physical affliction, but now the man was completely restored to health. Took up his bed, and walked—This man who had been [illegible] for thirty-eight years may [illegible] told many times before this [illegible] and walk, but was [illegible] until Jesus gave [illegible] his faith by [illegible] mat and walk.

III. The Jews finding fault (vs. 10-15.) 10. The Jews therefore said unto him, etc.—There is no record that the Jews congratulated the cured man upon his restoration to health and strength or that they praised God for what he had done. Apparently all they could see was what they considered a violation of the law regarding the observance of the Sabbath. His bed was simply a heavy blanket, or a thin mattress, that he could roll up and carry easily under his arm. The following are a few passages bearing upon Sabbath observance among the Jews: Exod. 20: 8-10; Neh. 13: 15; Jer. 17: 21, 22. 12. What man is that which said unto thee. The Jews first criticised the man for carrying his bed on the Sabbath and then inquired who told him to do it. They would have been more reasonable if they had made the inquiry first. 13. Wist not—Knew not. Jesus had conveyed himself away—There were many in the porches around the pool and Jesus moved away in the crowd before the healed man learned who he was. It is not improbable that Jesus wished to pass unnoticed from the place lest he should be thronged and great opposition should be raised against him. 14. Jesus findeth him in the temple—The man seems to have gone at once to the sanctuary, perhaps a privilege of which he had long been deprived. They who are healed from sickness should seek the sanctuary of God, and give him thanks for his mercy. There is nothing more improper when we are raised up from a bed of pain than to forget God, our benefactor, and neglect to praise him for his mercies.—Barnes. Thou art made whole; sin no more—Jesus had a further word to say to the man whom he had healed. Health had come to his body and Jesus exhorted him to sin no more, indicating that his bodily affliction may have been caused by sinful indulgence. There came spiritual blessing to him in connection with his physical healing. He was warned against falling again into sin. 15. The man .... told the Jews that it was Jesus—He promptly testified to the mercy and power of Jesus in healing and saving him. This stirred up the Jews to persecute Jesus, and Jesus delivered to them his remarkable discourse on his Sonship with the Father.

Questions.—From what place did Jesus go up to Jerusalem? For what purpose did he go? Whom did he find at the pool of Bethesda? Describe the scene at the pool. What criticism did the Jews offer? Where did Jesus next meet the healed man? What did he say to him? What testimony did the healed man give? What was the effect upon the Jews?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—A miracle of mercy.

I. Performed for bodily healing.

II. Included the saving of a soul.

I. Performed for bodily healing. Attention is directed to a man who had been a great sufferer for half a lifetime, a friendless outcast, touching the lowest depths of human wretchedness, for years a disappointed seeker after health. Misery, helplessness and hopelessness were combined in his life. Jesus understood the man and his malady. His first words were an affectionate inquiry, the extending of a gracious invitation with the expression of conscious power. His question, was designed to shake off the apathy of years and to revive hope in the afflicted man. It was intended to draw his mind from Bethesda waters and to bring him into touch with himself. The question brought from the sufferer a sad tale of human helplessness on his part and human selfishness on the part of others. The most helpless one and the one farthest from the reach of human assistance, answered well the purpose of Jesus in revealing himself as the Son of God. In his command was the voice of divine power, authority and mercy. He brought healing when the arm of flesh had failed. The cure was perfect and immediate. He touched the chord that needed to vibrate. He aroused a dormant faculty, whose exercise was essential to a cure. The word of healing was also a word of command. The sick man's healing depended on his turning from the pool to Jesus, though at first his expectation had been that Jesus would help him into the waters of the pool. The command to arise and leave the place required faith, which proved itself by practical activity.

II. Included the saving of a soul. The pitiable condition of the suffering cripple, the prolonged duration of his distress, his utter helplessness and despondency enlisted no help from the Jews. They had no true sympathy with suffering, neither had they any true conception of the nature of the Sabbath. They were prompt to observe any violation of rabbinical dictation or the letter of the scriptures as they defined them. The healed man was censured and charged with obeying a Sabbath-breaker, thus making his physician a greater sinner than himself. It was a serious charge, for it involved the punishment of death by stoning. The healed man could not defend his action for his enemies were learned in the law, while he was not. His only argument was that the cure made the Healer an authority above the greatest rabbi. He emphasized the miracle rather than the Sabbath-breaking, while his accusers passed unnoticed the great gift of restored health, and magnified an imagined infringement of Mosaic law. They sought to weaken and undermine any influence which Jesus had exerted over the cripple whom he had healed. This miracle marked the beginning of the unsympathetic unbelief on the part of the Jewish rulers. It was the occasion for that great utterance which Jesus gave concerning his Sonship and his divine working. He put his own work side by side with the Father's, as the same in principle, the same in method, the same in purpose, the same in its majestic repose and energy. He repudiated the ordinance which rendered criminal a natural and necessary action. His vindication was based on three facts: the supreme Lawgiver ceased not from Sabbath activity; he stood toward that supreme Sabbath worker in the relation of Son; as such he was co-worker with God in all that God did. He held that the law of the Sabbath is a law of a living who never rests from doing good. The miracle had a beneficial effect upon the persecuted man, for he went to the temple, thus indicating his desire to worship. There he came to understand who had restored him to health, and from him learned the need of divine grace. Being healed, Jesus bade him be holy. It was he who had relieved him of his infirmity, who met him in his attempt at worship, and gave new direction to his powers. Prompted by gratitude to Jesus, with a desire to make him known to others in distress, and with the hope of bringing the Jews to recognize him in his true character, the enlightened and restored man left the temple to declare openly that Jesus was his benefactor and Redeemer. While he stood as a living witness to Jesus as the Messiah, the enmity of the Jewish rulers increased and their designs against Jesus took more decided shape. T.R.A.

CANADIAN RANGE CATTLE TOP U. S. A. MARKETS

Choice Steers Knowing Not the Taste of Corn Bring $11—A General Review for Breeders and Feeders of American 1916 Markets—by Paul D. Hammett.

During the first ten months of 1916 Canada took 4,592 head of cattle, valued at $178,896 from the U. S., as against 249 head, worth $11,921, in 1915, and 3,154 head, worth $229,293 in 1914. Horses to the number of 10,456 and worth $1,661,097, were taken by Canada as against 69,092 head, worth $12,143,449 in 1915. Canadians also took a large number of sheep from the border markets, and they did cattle, principally from the plains states in the West.

Records during the coming year will be measured by 1916, for in every branch of the food animal industry new marks were hung up. The highest prices on the Chicago market were established as follows: cattle, $12.60 for "regular" market beeves, fancy stock fed with show animals for the International selling to $13.25, the premier load at the exposition making $25 a hundred, and the individual champion selling for $1.75 a pound; hogs topped in September $11.60 and sheep and lambs sold to $10.25 and $13.65 respectively. The highest price for range cattle was $11 paid by Canadians.

Records for averages also went by the board during this year of prosperity. Fat steers averaged $9.59, rangers $8.40, calves $10.35, hogs $9.60, sheep $7.55 and lambs $10.75, while horses averaged $161.

The broadest demand in history was made upon the American live stock producer all through the year at highest wholesale and retail prices on record, the consumers' purchasing power being expanded to meet the high cost conditions. The demand from the warring nations also furnished an enormous outlet for American meats, and this tended to raise the prices. Packers alike had their greatest year of profit-making, and the reports from the leading packing companies showed their earnings to be far and away above all former years, although the percentage of profit on the business turnover was held to a slim margin. Shipper demand at all the markets was a strong factor in price making, and of the total receipts at the Chicago market there were sent out 701,672 of which 255,696 were feeders. Thus the crop for slaughter elsewhere was 446,976, an increase of approximately 64,272 over last year, when no feeders left the market. Eastern states' fat cattle shipments were by no means of volume sufficient to have effect during any part of the year in restricting shipper demands and especially was this true in the trade in choice steers.

The enormous world demand for beef, North America being the only continent economically fitted to materially increase production, is stimulating beef production. Europe's depleted live stock herds since the war started have made that continent logically a large buyer of American beef, and while South America has shipped some carcases, drought in the southern countries has materially curtailed shipments. The ending of the great war is bound to bring about some price adjustment, but the disturbance of this transition period cannot seriously handicap beef growers' prosperity, since domestic orders in the American and Canadian industries are sufficiently large to keep the plants running at full time for months after the war demands have ceased. And then the rehabilitation of the farms of Europe is not a matter that can be taken care of for months and years, and during that time Europe must continue buying her meat, or a very large share of it, from the continent. The general prosperity of the country is reflected to a very large degree in the buying of beef. Despite the highest prices for the consumer in history of this country and with shortage of long-fed steers in the market in fall higher prices in retail than during the summer months, there was no abatement in the demand.

It is an old axiom that high priced corn makes high priced beef, and this was never proven more satisfactorily than in the year just closed. Prices of corn, starting at a high level, increased during the first six months of the year, and although lower in the summer, when prospects for a new crop were bright advanced speedily again when drought hit the corn belt, effecting a serious shrinkage in the yield, and when the demands from Europe for this cereal kept up. The 1916 beef crop was made at a high cost and record prices were necessary for the feeder to emerge from the year with a margin on the right side of his ledger. The feed bill, which in the face of bounteous yields and lighter demands in former years, appeared almost mountainous finally was paid, and many were the shippers that returned to their homes with profits of 90c to $1 on their corn for short feeding.

PROFITS DESPITE HIGH FEEDS

The grand average of $9.59 for fat steers stands against $8.40 in 1915, and $8.65 in 1914. The receipt of 2,720,176 cattle during the year in the Chicago yards is an increase of nearly half a million over 1915, and shows an increase in production that plainly is not spasmodic, but an evidence of stability in the industry. During each month of the year new records were hung up for the respective periods, and coming down the home stretch in December prices mounted to dizzy heights never dreamed of in previous years.

The average weight of 1916 steers was 987 pounds, as against 1,046 in 1915, and 1,002 in 1914, and stood the lightest since 1912.

The troubles and losses for the feeders during the last two years were all wiped out during 1916. Prices were high at the first of the year, and from March to June climbed fast, receding slightly in summer only, to come into the final months with sensational advances. The steers passed the $10 mark in March, and thereafter in only two weeks, late in April and early in May, did tops sell below $10, June marking the first $11 sales, and before the close of that month $11.60 was paid.

Drought unloaded southwestern pastures of tens of thousands of cattle, and the same conditions was true in Nebraska, Iowa and South Dakota, but expanding demands for beef, millions of pounds of which went into the freezers, provided the outlet for the great runs without seriously impairing values. Cattle which would have been fed out to maturity had corn prices remained normal, came trooping into the markets in an immature condition by thousands in fall months. The effect of this liquidation will be a severe strain upon the late winter and early spring fat beef supplies. With the feeders it was a question of taking a profit while a profit was very plainly in sight, and thousands of cattle purchased in the fall months as feeders were fed 90c and $1 corn for thirty or fifty days and rushed back to the market, attracted by the high prices in vogue. Information which has come from all parts of the corn belt shows the feeders determined to get rid of cattle as fast as they were ready for beef. Unlike 1915, when by reason of supplies of big steers in excess of trade demands, these grades had rough sailing in comparison with the handy and yearling classes, the heavy beeves of 1916 were premium getters. The production of yearlings, however, was by no means overdone, and yearlings of choice grades always sold within a fair range of the prime heavies. The high price of feed accounted for a too liberal percentage of yearlings, and the same is true of the middleweight steers while scarcity of the big beeves of choice quality put these classes in keen favor with the slaughter, and they made strong price advantages over the yearlings.

Evidence was not lacking in any month that the conservation of calves that has been urged by many, both practically and theoretically inclined, persons, has been carried to an illogical conclusion. The trade of 1916 had many thousands of cheap quality steers, half blood, dairy cattle black and whites, and Jerseys, offsprings of dairy stock, which had run in the fields and pastures since calfhood. Tens of thousands of those were shunted into the market in late summer and fall months from all parts of the country the greater percentage from Wisconsin, northern Iowa and Minnesota, which could find only canner outlet, and the prices they brought charges considered, than would have netted owners less money, carrying been had by vealing them in season. A dairy calf under no conditions will make a satisfactory beef critter, and the longer he is held on the farm the dearer property, from a beef stand point, he becomes. Rarely would country buyers take them for stock purposes, and the majority of them went into the canner trade at prices of $4.50 to $6.50.

The feeders who matured cattle at the distillery sheds had a more prosperous year than for a decade, this grade of cattle making advances in keeping with the grain fed stock. A new top of $10.95 was made for this grade. A smaller crop was fed this year because of the prohibition wave, while the foot and mouth disease during 1915 caused many feeders to shorten the crops they put in the slop sheds.

The new top and average for the range cattle has been mentioned, the majority of this grade of steers coming from the Canadian, Montana, Wyoming and other western states. The quality was good, although the marketing at the first of the year showed soft flesh. Plentiful rains in the spring and again in the summer made grass bountiful, but the failure to cure grass in seasonable time accounted for the late shipping from most range sections.

VEAL THE DAIRY CALVES.

Cows and heifers followed the upward turn of beef steers to new records. Record prices for hides was another factor in pushing the prices upward since the hide of a cow or heifer brought a price which tended greatly to reduce the cost of carcass. Well-bred heifers and cows were retained on the corn belt farms to a very great extent to breeding purposes, the incentive to grow beef being accentuated by the high prices of beef. Dairy farm cast-offs comprised a large proportion of the year's supplies of the female stock, and with the small receipts of female stock from the rangers this only tended to enhance the value of fat cows and heifers. The year's average for the female stock was $6.75, an advance of 65 cents over 1915 and comparing with $6.55 in 1914. The fancy yearling heifers had broad and urgent demand and the Christmas yearlings cashed in load lots at $10 to $10.50. Breeding and feeding calves for maturity as yearling beef bullocks is increasing at a fast pace with the growth of silage feeding. And this was a strong factor in reducing beef-bred calves in the market.

Fifty purchasers of feeding cattle from Indiana, Minnesota, Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania were on the markets in great numbers. An average price of $7.20 was made for the year, and this stood against $7.35 in 1914 and $7.05 in 1913 and $5.70 in 1912. The high point was $9, paid in May, June and December. Fewer range feeders were marketed than in recent years, good range grass being responsible for this and likewise the inclination of rangemen to hold back yearlings and thin two-year-olds for maturity. Many corn belt feeders went direct to the ranges to satisfy their wants for the range feeders.

HOGS SHARE THE PROFITS.

Despite a run larger than ever was known in the history of the hog trade, growers were well paid for the crop. Packers were the life of the markets most months, and as a general rule prices were higher than anyone predicted. The general average for all grades, pigs excluded, figures $9.60, standing $2.50 higher than 1915 even showing 70 cents gain over 1910, the highest priced year since the early '70s. The prices paid showed the men responsible for this great [illegible] did not err in their judgment of conditions. Prices were the lowest in the first month of the year, and then showed a gradual rise to May, when after a short reaction another climb to records was started. The $11.60 top, which was made in September. The average price of light weights was $9.45, $2.25 higher than 1915. The average of the butchers $9.60, an increase of $2.40, and heavies averaged $9.65, an increase of $2.65. Fresh pork loins were obtainable in January at 11 1-2 to 12 cents, but in September they sold up to 23 cents, and during December they usually cleared at 14 to 15 cents.

All New.

Paisley cotton bands, made in France, and useful for trimming collars, or making borders, revers and so forth.

New spring hats entirely of narrow ribbons, and faced with straw of the same color. One in rose hue was charming.

New English cotton voiles in pleasing dark colorings, with all-over designs, will make attractive little dresses.

Smart new stockinette suits in plain colors—one with belt and collar of shepherd's check cloth.

Quite new is a perfume idea—the perfume is a solid cake, which may be slipped into one's bag. There is violet, lily or lavender, and the price is nominal.

HIMALAYAN BEARS

Are Trapped by Means of Their Obstinate Rage.

"Most wild animals are stupid as well as greedy, but for sheer brainless obstinacy in the face of opposition," writes [illegible] in his book, "The Wonders of the Jungle," "there is no animal like the Himalayan bear. If he wants a thing, in the way he will always [illegible] if he can, even [illegible] it would be easier to go round the obstacle.

"The wily natives of India have observed this trait of the [illegible] and [illegible] traps to catch [illegible]. They [illegible] a tree with a suitable horizontal bough. At a point on the bough [illegible] from the trunk they fasten a bait likely to attract the bear—honey, for example, or [illegible]. Then some distance [illegible] they suspend a heavy stone [illegible] tied to the upper bough so that the stone hangs between the bait and the fork of the tree.

"The bear scents the bait from a distance, comes to the tree, sees the food on the bough and climbs up the trunk of the tree. Reaching the bough, he walks along it to get at the bait. But suddenly he notices the obstacle in the way and pushes it aside with his paw. The stone swings out of the way for a second, then it swings back and hits the bear on the paw. With a growl of irritation the bear pushes it aside more violently. The stone swings away again, but it returns with greater force and hits the bear on the chest.

"With a snarl of rage the bear gives the stone a tremendous thrust and sends it up into the air in a wide curve. Then down comes the stone in a similar curve and hits the bear a thumping whack on the ribs.

"Most animals would desist after that third blow; not so the bear. He is now in a perfectly made rage, and a bear is a good boxer. He hits out with his paws right and left and sends the stone hurtling forward in a still wider curve. Then after a few seconds the stone comes back and hits the bear a terrific 'uppercut' on the jaw.

"The bear is roused to white hot fury. He thinks an enemy is hiding behind the stone—as an enemy might do in the jungle—and he is determined to reach that enemy.

"But, alas, the bear never went to school and learned the law of gravity! Every [illegible] he hits the stone it returns [illegible]. And as the stone has no brains to be knocked out it is the bear that gets knocked out at last. He [illegible] out of the tree.

"Then the wily natives below [illegible] it with a net and throw it quickly over him.

"And that is how [illegible] get their Himalayan bears."

CHINA'S COURSE

In Break With Germany, Caused by Young China.

Pekin Cable.—President Wilson's invitation to China to sever relations with Germany created great excitement here. A deputation of the older military men urged the Prime Minister to refrain from action for fear of German retribution in the future. The revolutionary military leaders of the young China party, however, vehemently advocated the opposite course. The balance was turned to this side by the view of the better informed officials, who regard the present opportunity as unlikely to recur for China to associate herself with the other neutral powers and secure a place in the peace conference.

E.W. GILLETT COMPANY LIMITED

A PUZZLING CASE

This closed the conversation for the time being, as the curtain was now rising on the second act, and Dallas, therefore, held his tongue, for which boon I was very thankful, not caring to be worried much more by his incessant questioning and bad temper. I had a good deal to say against Mazzucata; but who would be such a fool as to ignite this mass of gunpowder? Dallas, as I well knew, had a very bad temper, and no respect for age; so, in such circumstances, a wise man holds his tongue. I am a wise man, so I held mine—for the time being.

The second act of the lyric drama, as 'tis now the fashion to call an opera, consisted mostly of intrigue, in which the queen, Chastelard, Murray, and John Knox, were all involved, ending in a fine scene, in which Mary banishes the poet from her presence for his presumptuous passion. From a musical point of view, I did not consider it so fine as the first act; but, probably, Renaud had purposely restrained his genius at this part, in order to accentuate more fully the splendid third act, which was said to be a triumph of melodic inspiration and harmonic cunning.

When the curtain fell for the second time, I saw Gilbert Tressinger rise from his seat, and go out into the vestibule of the theatre. Upon seeing this, Dallas touched my arm, and hastily followed him. I arose with considerable reluctance, as, not smoking myself, I find a tobacco-impregnated atmosphere extremely disagreeable, and would much preferred to have remained quietly in my place, or visited the boxes of my friends. Dallas, however was so anxious to see why he desired such a meeting, that we both followed the young man—a thing I would not have done under any other circumstances.

"There he is," whispered Dallas when we were in the smoking room, leaning against the wall."

"You won't wait a moment," I said, crossly; but, nevertheless, for the sake of peace walked across to Tressinger, holding out my hand.

"How do you do, Gilbert?" I said, using the privilege of an old friend, and calling him by his Christian name. "So you are back from Paris?"

"Yes; I only ran over on business, major."

"Mazzucata business," I murmured, under my breath. "Oh, by the way, let me introduce you to my friend: Mr. Dallas—Sir Gilbert Tressinger."

"Lawrence Dallas," said Gilbert, with a bow. "I know you very well, Mr. Dallas. We have a mutual friend, I think."

"Signora Mazzucata," replied Dallas, in a marked tone; and they eyed each other with considerable curiosity, while I, wondering what was to be the outcome of the meeting, stood aside, watching the comedy.

"I knew Signora Mazzucata in Italy," said Lawrence, at length, in an agreeable manner, evidently considering it best to be diplomatic.

"So she told me. Some time ago, is it not?"

"About eighteen months, or thereabouts. Since then, I have been travelling in the East, and only returned to-day."

"Oh!" murmured Gilbert, significantly. "And you patronize the opera on the first night of your arrival! You are fond of music?"

"Yes, very," said Dallas, who saw at what Tressinger was hinting; and determined not to gratify his rival by showing that he did.

"So fond," said I, interposing amicably, with the intention of preventing a quarrel between those hot-headed youngsters, "that he brought a bouquet to throw to the lady."

"I'm afraid I also must plead guilty," observed Gilbert, with a laugh, upon which Dallas half frowned, then recollecting his manners, smiled quietly.

"One cannot pay too many compliments to an artist of Signor Mazzucata's standing," he said, carelessly; "do you know her well, Sir Gilbert?"

"Yes, very well, I saw a great deal of her in Paris."

"Ah!" said Dallas, jealously, and made no further remark about the singer.

On his part Tressinger scrupulously refrained from either discussing Mazzucata, and for the rest of the conversation the two young men, both eaten up with jealousy about this woman, behaved in a regulation society manner. This conversation puzzled me more than ever, and when we were once more seated in our stalls I spoke to Dallas on the matter.

"Well!"

"Well," he replied, stolidly.

"You are a riddle to-night," I said, shrugging my shoulders, "you get into a vile temper with a man you do not know, and when I introduce you to him at your express request, you are positively agreeable to one whom I verily believe you regard as your enemy."

"If he loves Mazzucata I do regard him as my enemy."

"And why?"

"Because I also love her."

"There are always two to a bargain," I observed, sapiently; "so far as I can see, you are both in love with this woman. Now the chances are that she prefers one of you—which one?"

"Myself!" said Dallas, promptly.

"Well, supposing it's Tressinger?"

"In that case I would kill her," he replied equally promptly. I started in surprise, upon which he broke out into a harsh laugh which had the effect of making several people turn their heads to look at him.

"Oh, you wonder at my melodrama," he said, at length in a low voice, "but I tell you I would. You have no idea how I love her—of the encouragement she has given me. I heard all about Tressinger—oh, yes, you told me nothing new, and knowing he was to be here to-night, I came with the intention of being introduced to him. Well, I have been introduced to him, and now I know——"

He paused suddenly, and, much impressed by his manner, I spoke at once

"Know what?"

"That which I desired to know."

"My good fellow, you rave," I said in calm despair at the hopelessness of extracting sense from this erratic maniac.

"Wait till to-morrow," he whispered, harshly, "and you will see if I rave."

I was about to make a further remark when the curtain rose, and as Dallas obstinately refused to speak again, I was obliged to turn my attention to the stage, though I wondered much at the strange manner in which he was behaving. However, I put down his extraordinary conduct to an attack of love, and prepared to listen to this famous third act which had been extolled throughout Europe as a miracle of musical excellence.

The stage was set to represent the queen's chamber in Holyrood, and after half the act had passed in chorus and songs from Chastelard and the queen, the great duet which was so famous, began. Chastelard has hidden himself in the room, the queen sees him and runs to call her guards, but he, throwing himself at her feet, implores her to forgive what he has done for love's sake. He appeals not to the queen, but to the woman, and she, forgetting her royalty, is about to confess that she loves him, when the sight of the crown recalls to her what she owes to her race and to her country. With a cry she breaks from his encircling arms and summons the guard. The chorus pour in, there is a splendid and stirring finale, and the curtain falls on Mary ordering Chastelard to prison.

It was a great performance on the part of both artists, and when the curtain fell they were called before the footlights to receive the applause which they had honestly earned. The enthusiasm of the audience recalled to me the triumphs of Jenny Lind, especially when a perfect hail of flowers fell on the couple on the stage. Tressinger rising in his stall, threw his bouquet to the prima-donna, upon which Dallas, not to be behindhand, also arose and threw his. Ivan picked up some flowers, but whether they were those of my two friends I am not prepared to say, and presented them to Mazzucata. The singer, all smiles, bowed first to one side of the house, and then to the other, pressing the bouquet she held to her breast. Suddenly she looked at it and gave a shrill cry of horror—a cry that was drowned in the frightful explosion which followed.

There was a cloud of smoke which slowly dispersed, and then through the smoky veil I saw, as in a dream, that which was once a lovely woman lying a mangled corpse on the stage. Ivan was leaning back against the curtain with a white face, half stunned with the noise of the explosion—a thrill of horror ran through the crowded house—there was a dead silence, then the vast audience arose with a roar of alarm and made for the doors. The cries of women, the curses of men, I heard half confusedly, but higher than all I heard a cry of terror—

"Dynamite!"

CHAPTER II.

I am not so young as I was, therefore the catastrophe of the previous night unnerved me so much that I lay longer in bed the next morning than was my custom. Pointer was greatly concerned—Pointer is my man—and wished to send for a doctor, but this extreme proceeding I sternly forbade, knowing I should be quite recovered by noon, which indeed proved to be the case. After an excellent breakfast—for Pointer tempted me with my favorite dishes—I sent for the principal morning papers, in order to acquaint myself with the reports of this terrible calamity, which had so abruptly brought the performance of the previous night to a close.

It is not my intention to set forth a full report of what the papers contained, as anyone who so desires can turn up the case for himself, but merely to incorporate herein the gist of the matter so far as is requisite for an understanding of the events which followed the committal of the crime. Judging from the frank admissions of the press, the whole affair was veiled in mystery, and not even the most imaginative dared to put forward any theory as to the reason of the crime. All that was known appeared to be the barren fact that Mazzucata had been killed by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge concealed in the bouquet which she had held to her breast, but why such a crime should have been perpetrated in so bold and open a manner appeared to be quite inexplicable. Some of the papers indeed suggested that the dead woman had enemies, but so far as that goes, everyone in a public position has enemies, yet, as a rule, they refrain from letting their enmity carry them to such extreme lengths.

At all events, whatever theories were put forward to account for the affair, the actual fact remained the same, that Mazzucata had been killed by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge which formed the handle of a bouquet thrown to her on the stage. The whole question as to the detection of the crime lay in the discovery of the person who threw the fatal bunch of flowers. This, on the face of it, was utterly impossible, and one might as well try to find a needle in a haystack, as attempt to discover the owner of one particular bouquet flung at the feet of a prima-donna in company with several hundred tributes of the same kind.

Clearly, therefore, nothing was to be gained from the papers, so I placed them all on one side, and discarding them as useless, sought in my own mind for an explanation of this hideous mystery. Here was a beautiful woman barbarously done to death in a public manner by some unknown enemy. Now the question was to find that enemy, and to do so it would be necessary for me to make myself acquainted with all circumstances connected with the early life of this unfortunate singer.

In this respect I was absolutely ignorant, as, beyond the bare facts that Mazzucata had appeared in Italy, Vienna, Paris, and now London, with great success, I was quite in the dark regarding her previous history. Nowadays a public person's private life is known to all, thanks to society papers, who search into matters better left alone, but hitherto Mazzucata had escaped their pryings, and beyond the gossip of clubs, little was known of her life or personality. As to the latter she was reported to be a singularly charming woman, attractive in the highest degree, not so much on account of her undeniable beauty, as for a certain magnetic influence she exercised over all who came in contact with her. Her life, according to common report was not by any means a humdrum one, as she was said to affect the society of rich young men, and having squeezed all their money out of them, let them die broken-hearted at her scorn. Not that I believe any young men of the present day ever died of a broken-heart; but whatever might be the cause of their death, it was undeniable that all who had anything to do with this modern Lamia, either perished in the flower of their youth when she tired of them; or were ruined through her extravagant caprices which in many cases were scarcely those of a sane woman.

All this information, however, I had gained from the gossip of clubs. It was not to be found in the papers, and the general public knew nothing of Madame Mazzucata save that she was a great artiste. Now, however, the tragic event of her death would inspire the press to find out and publish all they could about her, in which case something would be found in her past life which would probably point to a reason for the manner of her death. In an ordinary case I would have left all this unravelling to the papers, the detectives, to whomsoever it might concern, but having witnessed the death of the singer I was unwilling to await such a slow method of solving the mystery and therefore determined myself to find out the cause of the crime. In two weeks I had detective fever.

So far, so good, but the question was, how was this fever to be cured: and the obvious answer was, by finding the assassin of Mazzucata and handing him over to justice. The reason of the crime was to be found in her past life, so the first thing to be done was to seek information on this point from someone who had been intimate with her before she came to England. To find such a person I had not far to go. In fact, two persons who could give me information were at hand, namely, Lawrence Dallas and Gilbert Tressinger.

Now what struck me as curious about these two young men was that each on the previous night had carried a bouquet of white flowers, and both bouquets had been thrown to Mazzucata shortly before the fatal event. Could it be possible that in one of these bouquets had been concealed the dynamite cartridge which caused the death of the singer? I could not believe it, as I deemed both my friends incapable of such a crime; and yet, when I recalled Dallas' wild words regarding his intention of killing Mazzucata should she prove false to him, I confess that doubts began to creep into my mind.

"Dallas said he would kill her if she loved Tressinger," I said to myself, as I dressed slowly, "but when he did not know the truth of that until he met Tressinger, and between such meeting and the explosion he never left my side, therefore could not have prepared the bouquet with the intent of killing her. No, that infernal machine which formed the handle of the bouquet must have been carefully constructed, and as Dallas, in spite of his wild words, had no reason to think Mazzucata false until he met Tressinger, he could not have brought the flowers with the dynamite cartridge concealed therein. Clearly then Dallas had nothing to do with the death; and as to Gilbert—"

I sent Pointer out of my room at this moment, for having the habit of talking aloud to myself, I noticed that he was eagerly listening, and not willing to admit him so far into my confidence, I got rid of him by some trivial excuse, and resumed my soliloquy.

"As to Gilbert there is no doubt he did not commit the crime, for he had no reason to do so. It was Mazzucata's favorite lover, and doubtless had seen her just before the performance, so even granted he wished to kill her, he would hardly have done in public what he could have done in private. But there, such arguing is ridiculous—he had no reason to murder her, and therefore must be innocent. Dallas, even though he wished to kill her, had no time to prepare his infernal machine, therefore must also be innocent. It is apparent that neither of these young men is responsible for the death of Mazzucata, so the assassin must be sought elsewhere."

It was all very fine arguing in this manner, but there was absolutely no clue to start from, and until some clue was discovered, the assassin of Mazzucata would certainly escape the consequences of his crime. I had no doubt that by this time the matter was in the hands of the police, but notwithstanding this, seized as I was with detective fever, I determined to search for a clue to the crime myself, and with this intent left my room to call on Dallas.

"If anyone be acquainted with Mazzucata's past life it will be Dallas," I said to myself, as I walked along Piccadilly, "and he may be able to tell me of some jealous lover, some lyric rival, some unsuccessful suitor, who had a motive for desiring the death of the singer; once I find a motive for the crime, there will be no difficulty in tracing the criminal."

So I spoke, but, alas! too confidently, for I little knew how difficult was the task I had undertaken. It is just as well that detective fever is such a virulent disease, for were it not for the insatiable curiosity of the same, the strongest and boldest man would hesitate before venturing on such a difficult quest as searching for a criminal. The labor is intense, the fatigue terrible, and every nerve must be strained if the matter is to be brought to a successful issue. In spite of all dexterity and every care, the great factor in the discovery of crime is chance—and chance, although I knew it not, was guiding me in the right direction for the detection of Mazzucata's assassin.

"Dallas," I said to myself, as I went upstairs to his rooms in Half Moon street, "Dallas will be able to tell me what he knows of her life, and where he fails Tressinger may possibly supply the information, so by putting this and that together I may arrive at some conclusion. The question is whether Dallas will tell me all I wish to know."

I found the young man sitting in an arm-chair reading the Telegraph's account of the crime, and by his white set face, his clenched hand, his dishevelled hair and red eyes, I saw that he was profoundly affected by the catastrophe which had robbed him of the woman he so much loved. With such a spectacle of despair before me, I knew it could not be Dallas who committed the crime, and yet in my heart there was a doubt, a doubt which could only be set at rest by his solemn assurance of innocence.

"Major Granby," he said, in a dull voice when I entered: "you here! Well!"

Molasses for Gasoline.

A company in South Africa has built a plant for the manufacture of natalite, a distillation product of molasses. Experiments have shown that natalite can be used as a motor fuel. In one of the tests, a 22 horse-power car covered over 500 miles, using 30.59 gallons of natalite. The new plant includes necessary buildings for manufacturing 2,000,000 gallons of nataleti a year, thus rendering South Africa largely independent of the world's gasoline supply.

Avoid Harsh Pills! Doctors Condemn Them

Most Pills unfortunately are harsh and drastic; they cause inflammation and great discomfort. Rather like nature is the way a pill should act, mildly but effectively. Science has established nothing more satisfactory as a family pill than the old reliable pills of Dr. Hamilton's, which for forty years have had a premier place in America. Dr. Hamilton's Pills are very mild and can be effectively used by the aged, by children, and indeed by men and women of all ages. No stomach or bowel medicine is more reliable. No remedy for indigestion, headache or biliousness is so effective, so mild, so certain to quickly cure as a 25c box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Warning About Water Pipes.

Now is the time that fires are caused by householders attempting to thaw out service pipes by burning oil-soaked rags and using other ill-advised methods in which an open flame is used. The proper way for the householder to restore an ice-clogged pipe to service, says the "Engineering Record," is to wrap it with cloth and pour hot water upon it or, if the freezing is so severe to yield to this treatment, the best plan is to send for a plumber. Apparently this is a minor detail, but attention to it may prevent needless fire losses running into thousands of dollars.

It dates back to the period when Mark was living in Hartford, on the next block from Harriet Beecher Stowe and her husband, Professor Stowe.

Gallagh Gap.

Ballagh Gap, and the spring sun shining
On Leinster's valleys far down below;
Ballagh Gap, and the hedges lining
The roadways, blossomed like sifted snow.

'Tis there I'd be with youth's comrades playing,
In gladness maying through sweet lost days,
The gold-eyed primrose green banks arraying,
And daisies spangled in faerie maze.

Again I'd hear, as the wind came sighing
Across Mt. Leinster and Bruwa Creavroe,
The plovers fluting when day was dying,
And all the west was a magic glow.

'Tis there I'd be when the sun, new-risen,
Brought vales Elysian to raptured eyes,
And the spirit saw, from its clayey prison,
God's hand bedizen the seas and skies.

Too soon, alas, from these fair scenes banished
The friends of boyhood all passed away,
And youth's fond hoping too quickly vanished
In grief and groping, when skies were gray.

Yet I still have visions that flash and quiver—
Dark gloom can never my soul enwrap—
For I see God's sunshine pour down forever
A golden river o'er Ballagh Gap.

Bradstreet's Trade Review

TORONTO.—Wholesale business was fair for the week, and a large proportion of dealers report increases over the same period of last year. Drygoods firms report that a fair volume of orders are being sent out, but there is a feeling of uncertainty about conditions that will exist when the spring orders have been sent out. Collections in this line are reported to have fallen off slightly in the last week. Activity in retail trade centres principally in household furniture, food, shoes and rubbers, gents' furnishings and staple drygoods. Local goods are somewhat quieter than last year. There is seasonable activity in the grocery trade. Hardware firms report uncertainty on account of the extreme advance on iron and steel products. Money is fairly plentiful.

MONTREAL.—The volume of business is ahead of last year in most lines. Remittances have been affected to a slight extent, but the country retail trade which has been picking up after the quiet period early in January is beginning to be reflected in more satisfactory remittances, and a number of large drygoods houses report collections so far this year as ahead of those of the same period, while city collections are fair. Leather prices are being firmly upheld. Groceries are rather quiet. Very high prices for all iron and steel products, as well as ropes, etc., has checked activity in hardware lines to some extent.

OTTAWA.—In view of conditions, country trade is holding up well and the collections are quite up to normal. Local trade is fair; winter commodities are still moving out satisfactorily at the high prices.

HAMILTON.—The placing of an embargo on American roads from Pennsylvania to Buffalo has made the coal problem even more intricate than last week, and many local manufacturers are again faced with the probability of an early shutdown. Hard coal is being delivered in small quantities, but anthracite for industrial purposes is very scarce. Further embargoes within the last week have increased the difficulty of getting goods in and out of this city. The retail trade is fair with activity noted especially in winter clothing, furniture, boots and shoes, etc. Groceries are fairly active, and retail hardware is a trifle quiet at present.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS OF GREAT HELP

Mrs. Wm. Artlett, Ancaster, Ont., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for three years for my little girl and baby boy. I have found them of the greatest help during the teething period and always keep them in the house." The Tablets aid teething babies because they regulate the stomach and bowels, thus preventing constipation, diarrhoea and convulsions. They promote healthful sleep and keep baby well and happy. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

(Intended for last week)

Pte. A. Russel, of the Scottish Guards, Windsor, spent the week-end at his home here.

Miss Lena Wittig is the guest of Miss Bobean, Tiverton.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Brooks, Denzil, Sask. were visitors at the home of Mr. Wm. Cassidy.

Mr. A. Russel entertained a number of friends on Monday evening in honor of his brother, who was home for the week-end.

Quite a number from here attended the carnival in Tiverton on Wednesday evening and all report a splendid time. Mr. Lawrence Mewhinney succeeded in capturing the first prize for best dressed gent, while R. H. Mewhinney landed first prize in Boy's race.

The regular meeting of the council was held on Saturday in the town hall. The roads were not in very good condition, but the board were all present. We hear though, that some of the councillors do not think as much of the snow fence at McKenzie's hill as when they had it erected. Evidently "Peter" doesn't like rolling out in the snow. Nuff sed.

THE COUNCIL

Bruce Township council met in the Township hall on February 10th 1917, pursuant to adjournment members all present. Minutes of previous meeting read, adopted and signed. A number of of communications were then read and dealt with one by one.

McNeill-Baker. That whereas a number of ratepayers of the Township have been inquiring of the council would store valuable papers and belongings to private parties in the Township vault expressing a desire to store such for better fire protection, and whereas this council desires it expedient to grant the request upon certain conditions which will be made known on application to the clerk.

Dobson-Baker. That the tender of W. G. Cole for ditching Goderich road from Con. 1 to Con. 10 for the sum of four dollars a trip and Andrew Smith's tender at one dollar and fifty cents for ditching from Con. 10 to 14 be accepted.

McKenzie—Baker. That we pay J. H McGillivray, twenty two dollars on contract bill 33 10.

McKenzie—Dobson, That the auditors report as read be adopted.

A number of accounts were ordered paid and council adjourned to meet on March 10th 1917, when pathmasters, poundkeepers and fenceviewers will be appointed.

8TH OF BRUCE

A happy time was spent at Mrs. S. Russel's last week, when her grandson Pte. Angus, was presented with a wrist watch and signet ring. Angus is a fine young man. He has been teaching school for several years near Windsor, where he enlisted with the 241st Highlanders. There was a good program of speech and song taken part in by Arch. McLean, M. Avis, C. Schnitther, R. McDougall, Mrs. S. George, Johnny Pace, W. Avis.

During the evening Pte. Russel was made the recipient of the watch and ring and a fine address, read by Mr. Jas. Pace. Mr. C. Hellwig presented the watch and Miss Minnie Schnitther the ring on behalf of the gathering. Pte. Russel made a brief reply offering his sincere thanks to the home folk.

Lunch was served and a dance followed.

WILLOW CREEK

The house of Mrs. McDougall was destroyed by fire on Wednesday last, only some furniture being saved. Defective stovepipe was the cause.

A number of the boys rejected by the 160th will try the navy.

Ptes. V. Kidd and A. Russell were home on last leave.

Pte. George Clayton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eastwood Clayton, was married at Petrolea, on January 24th to Ella May Fowler.

Elsinore

The young people of Elsinore held a box social and dance in the Red Cross rooms adjoining Mr. Kolb's store on Friday evening February 16th. The young people were pleased to have the opportunity of entertaining so many of their friends from distance. The proceeds of $115 were given to Red Cross. Au. Gerlitz sold the boxes. The music for the evening was supplied by Messrs Geo. Zeigler, J. Weis and A. Lehman.

A Valentine Tea

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Forrester, of the townline, gave their home over to the Red Cross of S. S. No. 14 Bruce, when a Valentine tea was held last Wednesday evening. The tea was served under a large cloth of red, white and blue, the tables being decorated with red hearts, Union Jacks and colored candies. The decorations were pretty and much commented on. Later a program was carried out with Mr. Tom White as chairman, those taking part being Mr. and Mrs. Neil McGillivray, Mrs. Jack McGillivray, McLean brothers, A. Salmon, Mrs. Kelly, Roy Salmon. Altogether a delightful time was spent and the proceeds amounted to $30, a fine sum for a good cause. Mr. Neil McGillivray was the lucky winner of the cushion top.

TIVERTON

J. M. Bowie bought a horse from F. Kippen of Bruce Tp. last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Kay left week for St. Thomas, where they will make their home. The best wishes of hosts of friends follow the young couple for a happy and prosperous wedded life.

Mr. Hugh McDougall is president of Tiverton Agricultural Society. The annual meeting showed things in good shape. The fine cement building and other equipment have all been paid excepting $80. This is Mr. McDougall's seventh year as president.

D. C. Cavin : Port Elgin

Another Pioneer of Saugeen Township Gone

Mr. George Casper Reiber was born in Korhessen, Germany on Nov. 28th 1844. As a young man of 17 years he came to Canada and landed in the town of Hespeler. As there was no railroad from Hespeler to St. Jacobs, he walked the distance of about 20 miles to his sister's, Mrs. Becker, who lived there at that time. About 1862 he came to Saugeen township living in town for several years. Some years later he bought the old Martin Eby farm on which he lived nearly 32 years. He moved to town about twelve years ago and retired.

He was a faithful member of the Evangelical church and was one of the charter members, having had all the offices of the church entrusted to him in his life time.

In 1876 he married Sarah Eby daughter of the late Martin Eby, which union was blessed with six children, 2 sons and 4 daughters, viz: Fanny, who predeceased him 8 years ago; Mrs. August Thede, of Port Elgin; Millie, at home; Julia and Henry, of Didsbury, Alta.; and Solomon, of Kitchener Ont.

Mr. Reiber was a Liberal in politics but was quiet and reserved in his judgements not taking an active part in public affairs. He was a kind husband and loving father, and a good citizen. He was ill but a couple of weeks and his death was a shock, very few knowing of his illness. The deepest sympathy is extended to Mrs. Reiber and the family. The funeral on Saturday was largely attended. Services were conducted at the Evangelical church by Rev. E. M. Gischler.

An Easy Way To Make a Dollar

A subscriber sent us last week a limerick on the Buyers' Guide as follows:

"Try advertising in the Buyers' Guide,
No worries then you'll need to bide.
For your business will grow
And now one will know
What these few lines will decide."

This is pretty good, but perhaps there are others of our readers, who would like to try their hand at the making of limericks. The Times will give three prizes of $1 each.

A limerick consists of five lines. The first two and last lines must rhyme, also the centre two.

The rules are:

The first line of the limerick must contain the words "Buyers' Guide" as example: "Try advertising in the Buyers' Guide."

There will be three prizes.

One prize will be for the best limerick from anyone of 16 years and over.

One prize will be for the best limerick by any boy or girl of 13, 14, or 15

And one prize will be for the best limerick by any girl or boy under 13

Remember to give your name, age, if under 16, and address Limerick Editor Times office.

Always sign your name not for publication.

The contest will begin in issue of Wednesday, March 7th and will be open until the issue of March 28th.

A disinterested party will judge the limericks and the awards will be announced in issue of April 4th.

Potatoes $2.55 Per Bushel

Mr. Hugh McLean of the Underwood hotel, paid the record price for potatoes when he bought at Jim Vennard's sale last week, ten bushels at $2.55 per bushel. Potatoes are scarce and Mr. McLean had to have them.

There was a great crowd at the sale and bidding was brisk. Auctioneer Cavin was in good form and secured high prices. Cows went as high as $120.50; oats 75c, last spring's calves $52.50, in fact everything sold well.

Pte. Sam Fleming says, "The Allies Will Walk Through The Enemy"

A whole lot of Port Elgin friends were glad to shake hands with Sam Fleming last week. As he would say himself, "He's a good old scout," and the fact that he has travelled the Boer war without a scratch or a day's illness and has put just about two years in this greatest of all wars, and back to tell the tale, makes Sam a mighty interesting personage.

"Yes there is a big difference between the two wars" said Pte. Fleming to the Editor, "They kill people in this war."

It was in March of 1915 that he sold out his farm in Bruce Tp. and his threshing and grading outfits, moved his family to town, went down to Guelph at the end of the month, signed up for service, was in England in May and in three weeks afterward in Ploegstreet, Flanders, peppering away at the Fritzies.

How did he get along so fast? That's easy, Sam's a soldier, and when he signs up for war he wants to fight at once.

"South Africa was a picnic compared to this campaign, but I wish I could have beaten out this blamed rheumatism and been able to be in the greatest of all drives which is to take place this spring.

"Will the Allies go through the lines on the western front? was asked of the veteran.

"You bet they will. They have the men and the guns, and you'll see the Huns smashed this year. No one has any idea of the millions of men, great piles of ammunition and great parks of big guns just waiting the day. I think the Somme fight will be re-opened shortly and the Huns will find out that the little episode of last fall was nothing to the real drive. We are simply holding ground now and occasionally making a raid to survey the trenches and fortifications of the enemy.

'Were the stories of Hun atrocities true?" "Yes, I saw some of the fiendish work of the Hun and anyone need have no hesitation in believing them. Some were so foul they could not be described in print. The Prussian soldiers were the fighters. The Saxons were inclined to be friendly. It was always the Prussian who bayonetted the wounded. The British sometimes received orders to take no prisoners, but it was only done when attacking a vicious set of Prussians.

"What do you think about peace?"

"Not for me. The soldiers will never stand for it. Why we have the enemy now just where they had the allies at the beginning of the war. It would be the greatest crime in history to make peace. Think back. Look at the murder, the pillage, of the Kaiser's army. Surely they're not to be let off so easy?

"Believe me, the British have some system. We go back and forth across the channel, thousands of men, every day and no one thinks of the nervy submarine. The navy is backing the army in great style. I've talked to German soldiers. They know they're done. They want to quit. But I give them credit. They're great fighters, and they'll put up a great struggle in the final clash.

"How do you like the Ross rifle?"

"It's no good. It jams when a man wants to use it fast. Imagine a man in the midst of an attack having to lay his rifle down and try to kick open the lock with his boots. And the worst of it, the authorities knew the Ross rifle would act up, because it frequently happened at target practice. Yet we were armed with this club to defend the Empire. If we found a dead or badly wounded "Tommy" we always took his Lee-Enfield rifle and left our old Ross. The Lee-Enfield does not jam and it is not so much like a club as the Ross. They are substituting the Lee Enfield now, but of course they can't get them fast enough. They should manufacture them here."

"The Canadians have proven to be good soldiers, and have stood up like heroes against the well-trained Prussian barbarians, and they'll do their part in the big fight to come."

"Well, what do you purpose to do now, go to farming?"

"I haven't decided. I may work inside at munitions until I get thoroughly over my trouble and then I think I'll go west.

"What do you think of the government's scheme to give land in new Ontario to returned soldiers?"

"Oh I suppose it's all right, but who wants to go to isolated places. Why should the soldiers have to do the work of making valuable a lot of waste lands. Give me something nearer civilization."

Pte. Fleming looks well but he is not as strong as when he left. If anything, his two years service has put some lines in his face. Yes, the war has strained this veteran somewhat, but he has no doubt of the outcome.

Pte. Fleming has a wife and five children who are glad to have him back safe once more.

"No Man's Land"

Mr. Wm. Atkinson of Port Elgin, hands The Times a letter from his grandson now in France. "I am still in the firing line and in the best of health. We have a good time with old Fritz, and made it hot for him the other day. We had a great Christmas dinner, hot turkey, plum pudding and lots of rum and a good time, and that helps some.

"I met a man from Port Elgin here the other day, Henry Starling, a 'shoe' maker. He told me there are a lot of fellows from Port Elgin. I should like to know some of their names. This is a great war, but you know more about it than we do. Only we know Fritz will get plenty before we are through with him. I would like to see The Times occasionally, or The Leader. Well I must ring on."

C. R. Sparling.

Mr. Atkinson has also an interesting letter from his son-in-law, Pte. M. D. Askin, who is in France, and who reviews some incidents of Ypres, the Somme, and other fights, for Pte. Askin has been a good while in France. He says: I must not tell you much about the war, but shall describe some incidents. After arriving in France, we occupied the lines in a salient at Ypres for six weeks. We did not have the opportunity to do anything brilliant, as our lines were too far advanced. As it was, we carried on some bombarding raids, took a few prisoners, and our artillery stirred Fritz up occasionally. That is the part of the line where our second divisions fought and won one of the greatest, if not the greatest, battle of the war and our Canadian boys proved themselves worthy.

After being relieved there, we took train and went to the much talked of Somme district, where there are real hardships and fighting galore and then some. Believe me that's the place to make the chaps think of home. Say, did you ever see mud? You will say yes, heaps of it. But no! you haven't. The Somme is where the real stuff is to be found. Some places it is three and four feet deep. You see when it is raining two thirds of the time, and so much traffic, it works up so that you can just go through it, and sometimes some of the poor chaps get stuck and have to be helped out, and with the Hun shells whistling around and over our heads it's quite exciting.

When I speak of No Man's Land, I mean its the strip of land between our front line trench and the enemy's. One night when coming out of the trenches along the Posier road, I caught up with a poor chap whose home is in Fort William. He belongs to a battalion in our brigade. He had been out in No Man's land with others, at daybreak. While out Fritz caught sight of him. Ping! a sniper fired at him. Of course he flopped in a shell hole. He tried to dig himself in with his entrenching tools, but when he moved, Fritz let go a whizz-bang at him. By the way, a whizz-bang is a three inch shell. The next one would go past him. They kept it up that way for about four hours. One shell struck just behind him; it passed through just under him, and tossed him up two or three feet, but providentially it was a "dud" that is, it failed to explode. If it had I do not need to tell you what would have happened. He told me the above experience after I had got him quieted down. I had found him shattered and hysterical, and calling on his comrades. I have forgotten to say that he crawled back to the trench about one in the afternoon, without equipment or rifle. I will just mention here that I, too have had some close calls, but thanks to a kind Providence, I am still on the war path. Not so with many of my comrades. Some have gone over the border, some have been wounded, but none can say we have not done our duty. We did what others tried and failed to do, namely, take Regina trench. We spent eight weeks in that district; we hit the trail, and marched back to within twenty miles of where we were at first. That trip took eight days. We are now in rest camp, billeted in a town of twelve thousand. I am quartered with others in a stable loft. It has a cement floor on which I am at present lying while I write. We have been here for the last eight days, and I expect we will be here for another eight days, before we go back to the trenches again.

Big Prayer Meeting for Town and Townships

At the call of Reeve Christie, and carrying out his suggestion to his council at inaugural meeting, Revs. Watt, Hallman, Brubacher, Buckborough, Mann, Scanlon and Gischler, met in the library Monday and discussed plans for an afternoon of prayer for the Bruce battalion, for those [illegible] engaged in a righteous cause and speedy and permanent peace. E. R. Sayles was made secretary and H. H. Stevens will have charge of the musical service.

The laymen will be asked to cooperate and a program of suitable music, short addresses and prayers will be made.

The business men will be asked to close their stores from 4.00 to 6.00 p. m. and, the date will likely be March 15th. The Stevens-Hepner Co. will close their works from 2 to 6 p. m.

The townships of Saugeen and Bruce are being invited, through their ministers, to participate, and there will be a large gathering in town. The schools will also be asked to close at 3 p. m.

As there will likely be an overflow meeting necessary to accommodate all, the Presbyterian church is suggested, and the town hall being close-by, will be used, if necessary, for overflow meeting.

The ministers and the laymen whom they invite, will meet Monday March 5th, in the library at 2 p. m. to draft a program and make final arrangements.

FALCONER BROTHERS

J. B. Cottrill and R. H Fenton Form Partnership

Mr. J. B. Cottrill, lumber and wood dealer, has formed a partnership with Mr. R. H. Fenton, and they have purchased the coal shed of Mr. J. A. Thomson, and will enter into the coal and wood business.

It is their intention to erect a trestle, so that cars of coal may be run over their coal bins and be dumped. This does away with all shovelling.

A sawing outfit will be installed and wood of all lengths will be on hand.

The new firm have several cars of coal on order, and are getting things in shape for business.

OUR FIRST VOLUNTEER

CORP. JAMES JOHNSTONE

Harry Fowler was the first man to leave Port Elgin for the front. He was an artilleryman, and a reservist in the British army, therefore he was summoned to the colors at once.

On August 10th, 1914, James Johnstone was the first man to volunteer from here.

War was declared on the 4th, and he was away on the 10th, going to London, then to Valcartier, and to England in a short time. He was transferred in England, because of his knowledge of warfare, to the headquarters signal staff. In this capacity he had many experiences. After a year's campaigning he developed rheumatism, and Corp. Johnstone was for awhile a saddler. Later he was with the engineers as a sapper and is at present in the Military training school at Crowborough, England, assisting in training soldiers for sapping duties.

Corp. Johnstone is a South African Veteran having served with General Buller at the beginning of the Boer war.

He has a wife, and three children living in Port Elgin. He is 33 years old.

Surprises For Principal Shaw

Principal Shaw has been kept guessing the past week. In his hurry to get his goods together for shipment, he has been frequently interrupted and asked to accept some token of good-will by Port Elgin citizens.

Monday, as he was hurrying home, he was halted and made to listen to an address and presentation on the part of the fourth form and teachers, who gave him a beautiful fountain pen.

Wednesday, as he was preparing for the Shierholtz medal presentation, Supt. Mitchell and Secretary J. D. Falconer, of the Presbyterian S. S. called at his home and gave him a beautiful hymnal, and also Mrs. Shaw some fine art china on behalf of the Sunday school.

Wednesday night at the conclusion of the program in the library, Kathleen McBride read an address and Margaret Barber made Mr. Shaw the recipient of a fine pair of military hair brushes on behalf of his Sunday School class.

Friday night at the library a number of citizens gathered to acknowledge Mr. Shaw's worth and to present him with a fine leather suitcase and an address. Warden Izzard occupied the chair, and called upon Mr. W. A. Mitchell who read the address, and Mr. John McCallum who presented the suitcase. Mr. Shaw made a brief reply in which he said would never forget the kindness of the Port Elgin people. He regretted leaving, but was anxious, of course to get as high as he could in his chosen profession, and it compelled his removal. Those in attendance were: Tom Swalwell, Geo. Black, Del Shierholtz, J. A. Chapman, A. F. George, C. E. Schwartz, J. H. Wismer, H. Blindauer, A. G. Miller, H. H. Stevens, Wm. Lamont, G. McLaren, R. Fenton, A. E. Eaton, J. B. Cottrill, E. R. Sayles. Short addresses were made by several of the gentlemen present, all expressing regret at Mr. Shaw's removal. The gathering dispersed after singing the national anthem and bidding the Principal good-bye.

TOWN TOPICS

Miss Reiber is recovering nicely.

The condition of Miss Ada Wilson continues very critical.

The tea-rooms continue to be popular and the Red Cross reaping good returns.

Miss Pearl Begg has taken a position in the law office of Wm. Burgess.

Miss Glenn, of Toronto, was the guest of Miss Mabel Henry, over Sunday.

Red Cross donations are: John Falconer, Chicago, $10; a friend, $1.

Mrs. Shaw and Miss Piper left Thursday last, Mr. Shaw following on Saturday.

A number of Boy Scouts who operated a picture show last week made $4.50 for the Red Cross.

Principal Aylesworth assumed his duties at the public school Monday morning.

N. E. Leeder Jr., is in Sarnia this week attending the Threshermen's convention.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Webster have moved into the house lately vacated by Principal Shaw.

We'd like to meet, on a dark night, with a lead pipe, the originator of these chain prayers.

Miss Hazel Webb has been spending a few days with her aunt, Mrs. Andrew Bain, in Greenock Tp.

Some Stevens-Hepner depts. were closed for Wednesday afternoon on account of a break in the engine.

Tommy Denell, a former pool-room proprietor at Port Elgin, has a job inspecting cordite at Parry Sound, for the munitions board.

Our readers are asked to remember their subscriptions to The Times. You've been thinking about it. Just pay it now. You'll be happier, and so will the editor.

Trooper Baker, who assaulted Arm Lymburner, came up before Judge Sutherland last week, and was let off rather lightly, being fined $50 and costs.

The marriage took place in Detroit recently, of Miss Gertrude E. Proctor and Mr. Julius Kanafolski. The bride is a niece of Mr. John Floto, and spent a holiday here a couple of years ago.

"Enclosed is postal note for the old home paper for 1917. We always like to get The Times. The letters from the boys at the front are very interesting to us just now." James McCulloch, Grandview, Man.

The Editor had a good day spoiled last week by receiving a letter containing an endless chain prayer. We fancy this was sent to us more for a joke than with any degree of seriousness. It says: "Do not break the chain for fear of calamity." Well, we've busted it.

The Presbyterian Sunday School presented Miss Eva McDuff, who was a former teacher, and who is now in Galt, with a handsome pin and address. The presents were arranged and sent to Miss McDuff by Supt. Mitchell and Secretary Falconer.

A $100 Prize Poem.

The best poem of 500 entered in a competition held by the St. Louis Art League was written by Evelyn Gilridge, of Hollis, L. I., who wins the $100 prize. The poem is as follows:

AS THOU WILT.

If in the sheltering circle of my arms
No little child of mine shall ever rest,
Nor I may feel the touch that thrills and charms
Of helpless, searching lips against my breast,
Yet for the sake of that beloved child,
Of whom my dream is ever, night and day,
Teach me the mother spirit, tender, mild,
That from no childish need can turn away.

And if the love that I had held so sure
Grow dim and distant till it vanish quite,
Grant me that changeless love that shall endure
Strong and sufficient for earth's darkest night.
Take from my heart all bitterness and pain
Until these futile, selfish strivings cease;
Use Thou the life I should but spend in vain,
And in the joy of service grant me peace.

Exquisite Baby Clothes.

They are all hand made.

Of soft white stuffs, they are very simply made, but beautifully fine and dainty.

There are dear little slips, with the tiniest tucks imaginable, and some finished with a frill of real lace.

Finer dresses, too, are tucked and embroidered and finished with real Valenciennes, and sometimes have ribbon rosettes for further elaboration.

There are even hand-made flannel petticoats, as well as handmade and hand-embroidered white petticoats, with scalloping or lace-finished ruffles.

Bootees, too, are hand-knit, and there are hand-made and embroidered pillow slips on which to lay his sleepy head.

The Three Scutars.

By this time we should all know enough about the near east not to confound the various Scutaris—the one in Albania, the one opposite Constantinople and the one in southern Greece. It is curious that each name comes from a different original form. The Greek Scutari is otherwise Scatari, the Albanian one is the Illyrian Scodra, and the Asiatic one is the Turkish Uskudar. This last means a courier carrying royal orders from station to station and commemorates the fact that this place, the ancient Chrysopolis, or City of Gold, was the starting point of the Asiatic couriers.—Youth's Companion.

Pale-Cheeked Girls
Tired-Out Women
Quickly Built Up

WONDERFUL RECORD MADE BY NEW BLOOD-FOOD REMEDY.

Certain Results Guaranteed.

Pale people have pale blood.

In other words, the blood is watery and lacks red corpuscles.

The stomach is wrong.

Assimilation is poor and food is not changed into blood. Naturally the system is robbed of vitality, lacks strength and reconstructive power.

Don't slip from vigor into weakness. Don't allow the appetite to fail, but instead use Ferrozone.

You're bound to feel rejuvenated and strengthened at once.

Appetite is braced up, digestion is stimulated, vigor imparted to the stomach. Everything you eat is transformed into nutriment that supplies what your thin, weak system needs.

Vital, life-giving blood that makes rosy cheeks and dancing eyes—that's the kind that Ferrozone makes.

The strength and buoyancy that defies depression and tiredness, that's the sort you get with Ferrozone.

Every pale woman can transform her bleached-out appearance with Ferrozone.

Not only will it improve looks and spirits, but by rebuilding all weak, tired organs, Ferrozone establishes a soundness of health that's surprising.

For women and girls who want to feel well, to look well, to be well, and stay well, nothing known in the annals of medicine is so certain as Ferrozone.

Won't you try Ferrozone?

EDUCATING OYSTERS.

How the Japanese Teach Them to Make Pearls.

In Japan there is a great oyster farm where the bivalves are taught to make pearls. It was Dr. Mikimoto, a well known scientist, who conceived the idea that oysters might be educated and made to work for man. After many years of costly experimentation he discovered the method in use to-day.

The farm has an area of about fifty square miles, and the water varies in depth from five to fifteen fathoms. The farmer selects the spots where the larvae of oysters are most numerous and then he plants small rocks and stones. These are soon covered with oyster-spat. They are then removed and placed in special beds, where they lie undisturbed until the third year.

An oyster will not produce a pearl unless it be irrigated by some foreign substance. As soon as it feels this it proceeds to cover it with nacre, layer on layer, until after a few years it has made a pearl. When large enough the oysters are taken from their beds and carefully opened; a tiny speck of some foreign substance is introduced into their bodies, and they are replaced in the sea. By the end of from three to two years the oyster has coated the foreign substance with nacre and this has become a pearl.

All the work on this oyster farm is done by women, who bring the oysters up and down by diving.

THE DOOR TO HEALTH

Is Through the Rich, Red Blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Actually Make.

The blood is responsible for the health of the body. If it is good, disease cannot exist. If it is bad, the door is shut against good health, disease is bound to appear in one form or another. One person may be seized with rheumatism or sciatica, another with anaemia, indigestion, heart palpitation, headaches or backaches, unstrung nerves, or any of the many other forms of ailment that comes when the blood is weak and watery. There is just one certain, speedy cure—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They make new, rich, red blood, and this good blood strengthens the whole system and brings good health and happiness. Thousands owe their present good health, some, life itself, to the pills. Mrs. Charles Goddard, Chatham, Ont., says: "Four years ago my nervous system was so run down that life seemed nothing but a burden. I doctored for two years with little or no benefit. I could neither work, eat or sleep well. While in this condition, A friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before doing so, I thought I would consult my doctor, and he told me he knew of no better medicine for building up the nervous system. I started to take the pills, and after a short while found they were helping me. I took the pills for nearly three months and am thankful to say that they completely cured me. Ever since I have kept a box of the pills in the house, but have not found it necessary to take them."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or they will be sent by mail postpaid at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Removing White Spots.

Probably you will find white rings on some of your varnished tables, left by vases that were not carefully wiped free from water. These need careful treatment if they are to be removed without injury to the surface of the table. Have ready three flannel cloths, one moistened with linseed oil, one with alcohol, and one with furniture polish. Rub briskly with the oil, then with the alcohol, being careful not to use enough to take off the varnish, and then apply the furniture polish last of all. The spot will disappear entirely.

PORTLAND CEMENT.

Secret of Its Contents Was Very Closely Kept.

Portland cement may be defined as a product made by burning limestone and clay, which have been mixed so as to form a certain composition, and grinding the resulting "clinker" to powder.

In the early days much mystery surrounded the manufacture of Portland cement when it was first discovered by a bricklayer of Leeds, England. He found that by mixing water with a compound of Thames chalk and Medway mud he could compound an artificial water cement and determined that no one should discover his secret. When employed in manufacturing his raw mixture he is said to have attired himself in a long black gown and the pointed hat of the mystic and to have recited mysterious incantations during his operations.

But a curious onlook who determined to ascertain his ingredients and methods had a sample analyzed by a chemist, whose result showed [illegible] phosphate of lime. Thinking that he had solved the secret, he began to calcine all the bones he could gather up in the village, much to the discomfort and objections of his neighbors, who finally induced him to desist. Following, however, the old system of cut-and-try, he finally solved the problem and eventually produced a cement equal to that of the original compounder, and the great industry began to thrive at once.

In this country the Portland cement industry had its beginnings in the Lehigh Valley in Pennsylvania, chiefly in Lehigh and Northampton counties, where John W. Eckert, a chemist, discovered that there occurred a limestone composed of approximately the correct ingredients necessary for the manufacture of Portland cement.—Smithsonian Institution Bulletin.

PROHIBITION AND CONSCRIPTION

(Chicago Tribune.)

Prohibition is a denial of free will. It asserts the right of the state to command the individual. If it were only for the right of personal selection would be merely moralistic meddling. It is not the part of Smith and Brown to determine by law what Jones shall do for his own good unless Smith and Brown prove that Jones by not doing what he ought to do imposes a burden on them.

They are justified in objecting to Jones' habits if those habits cause them trouble. They then are justified in putting a law on Jones.

The community is justified in interfering with the volition of its citizens only as it regards its own security as important and considers that its citizens, left to their own free will, might or would do injury to it.

There is no excuse whatever for any law requiring any kind of conduct from a person if that conduct injures no one but himself. So long as the individual alone is concerned his conduct must be left to himself. He will take the consequences.

There are many ardent proponents of restrictive and custodial laws. They intervene to say what people may see at the movies; what they may read; what they may drink; how long they may remain in saloons and restaurants; what they may see in the theatres. Occasionally we attempt to say what they may wear.

If the individual may be regulated thus and commanded thus for the benefit of the state, logic suggests that he may be compelled to do other things for the state.

When a state is in military danger it is in much greater danger than it is when saloons threaten its security. When it is in military danger we permit each man to consult his own will and his conscience, his desires and his timidity. We permit him to do as he wants to do, regardless of the needs of the state.

If he has a right to exercise his own judgment when the state is in great danger, he certainly has the right to do so when his own personal habits are concerned. We regulate as to habits and will not regulate as to duty. We may require a man to stop drinking because it is bad for the state, but we have not seen that it is necessary to compel him to serve the state if it is bad for the state to permit him to escape from service.

Prohibition and compulsory service are two pieces from the same bolt of logic.

A Word About Roaches.

The cockroach, according to the bulletin on that insect issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, is one of the most ancient and primitive of insects; for fossil remains of them abound in early coal formations, ages before our more common forms of insect life began to appear. Now, however, the species in existence are much fewer than at that time, which might with propriety have been called the "Age of Cockroaches"; for then the moisture and warmth were much more favorable to the multiplication of the family.

Nevertheless there are enough at present to afford considerable annoyance to the housewife, for the damage that they do is not confined to the consumption of food products, since they soil and render foul everything with which they come into contact. They leave wherever they are present in any numbers a fetid, nauseous odor, very persistent, which is known as the "roachy" odor. Any food tainted by it is hopelessly spoiled. The odor comes from the excrement, a dark fluid that is exuded from the mouth, and also from the scent glands on the body which secrete a disagreeable oily liquid possessing a distinct and very disagreeable odor. Dishes on shelves often become impregnated with the odor which becomes noticeable when anything is served in them.

The bulletin offers the following method for trapping them: "A simple and practical method of trapping roaches in large numbers was devised by a correspondent in Brockton, Mass. He took several tin bread pans with vertical sides, about three inches in height, greased the bottoms and sides with a little rancid butter and placed them where the roaches were numerous. Each pan in the morning contained hundreds of the pests unable to climb out because of the greased sides. The roaches were shaken out into hot water and the pans were ready for use again, without regreasing."

She Does Her Bit
In Patriotic Work

AND TELLS OF BENEFIT RECEIVED FROM DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

Mrs. H. A. Standish Strong, Hearty and Enthusiastic at Sixty-two, Advises Others to Use Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Ayers Cliff, Stanstead Co., Que., March 1.—(Special.)—One of the most enthusiastic patriotic workers in this district is Mrs. H. A. Standish. Though sixty-two years of age, her splendid health enables her to keep house for three hearty men and still have time and strength to devote to the welfare of the boys in the trenches. And Mrs. Standish will tell you she owes that abundant health to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I must say that Dodd's Kidney Pills are very good for sick kidneys," Mrs. Standish states. "I have recommended them many times for rheumatism, as they helped me very much for that disease. You can say for me that Dodd's Kidney Pills are beneficial for everyone who is troubled with bad kidneys."

The kidneys are the keystone of woman's health. Keep the kidneys right and the rest will be right. Dodd's Kidney Pills keep the kidneys right.

Speaking of Worries—

(A bit of philosophy passed around in the trenches.)

You have two alternatives: either you are mobilized or you are not. If not you have nothing to worry about.

If you are mobilized you have two alternatives, you are in camp or at the front. If you are in camp you have nothing to worry about.

If you are at the front you have two alternatives, either you are on the fighting line or in reserve. If in reserve you have nothing to worry about.

If you are on the fighting line you have two alternatives, either you fight or you don't. If you don't you have nothing to worry about.

If you do, you have two alternatives, either you get hurt or you don't. If you don't you have nothing to worry about.

If you are hurt you have two alternatives, either you are slightly hurt or badly. If slightly you have nothing to worry about.

If badly you have two alternatives, either you recover or you don't. If you recover you have nothing to worry about. If you don't and have followed my advice clear through, you have done with worry forever.

SERVICE TO ALASKA

C. P. R. Steamer Will Make Three Trips for Tourists.

As was the case during the past season, the C. P. R. steamship Princess Charlotte, will make three round trips in the Alaska tourist service next year, which becomes effective June [illegible], 1917.

The list of tourist sailings between Victoria, Vancouver and Skagway, which has just been announced by the B. C. Coast Service, provides for three round trip sailings for the Princess Charlotte, seven for the Princess Alice and seven for the Princess Sophia, making 17 round trip sailings all told for the summer season of 1917.

The advent of the palatial steamship Princess Charlotte in the Alaskan tourist trade last summer was such a pronounced success that the company had no alternative but to arrange for her return to the northern run next year, when it is expected tourist travel north will break all records. The schedule has been arranged earlier with a view to giving plenty of time for the arrangement of advance bookings.

The company proposes making a feature of this delightful travel route, and specially illustrated and descriptive literature is being prepared for distribution all over the continent. The accommodation on the Princess Charlotte will be largely reserved for parties booking in the east. A large number of inquiries regarding the northern tours have already been made in the east by parties who were unable to take the trip last summer.

CECIL SAYS THE HUN BLOCKADE IS A FAILURE

Seas Not Outlaw Waters, British Blockade Minister's View.

RIGHT OF SEARCH

Will Be Firmly Held, but Neutrals Will Be Used Leniently.

London Cable.—"The Western Atlantic, the North Sea and the Mediterranean are not outlaw waters. Murder may be committed on them, but the attempt to hold up all sea traffic there has not succeeded. It is the task of the western powers and their allies to vindicate once again the freedom of the seas."

This was the reply of Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of Blockade, to the question of the Associated Press as to whether he could say anything with regard to the effects of the new submarine warfare.

Lord Robert Cecil then entered into details, saying:

"So far, it has had very little effect on the entry of supplies to this country, but it has interfered to some extent with trade between neutral nations. For instance, as you know most of the vessels trading from Scandinavia and Holland to and from America put into the United Kingdom by agreement in order to avoid the trouble and danger of visit and search on the high seas. Some of these vessels are reluctant to continue this practice, foolishly, we think, since the danger of putting into a United Kingdom port is not serious, and the practice is very convenient for all parties.

"The German piracy decree is not, indeed, a bluff; it is far too murderous for that. But its terror lies not in anything like wholesale destruction, the actual number of ships sunk bearing a very small proportion to those getting through unscathed, but in its very uncertainty, its erratic strokes.

"However, we are very anxious to meet the wishes of neutrals in this, as in all other matters, even when we do not think they are well founded. We accordingly are arranging in certain cases, where we are satisfied the vessel concerned is not trading in the interests of our enemies, that they shall be examined at some other British port, such as Halifax.

"This course does not mean the abandonment of the right of visit and search, which, obviously, it would be impossible for us to abandon. All it means is that we substitute one form of exercising that right for another, and, in order to make our action quite clear, we are declaring at the same time that vessels trying to run the blockade with goods to and from Germany, directly or indirectly, will expose themselves to condemnation in a prize court. We are adding that if they fail voluntarily to enter a British port for examination they cannot complain if their conduct exposes them to suspicion, and, indeed, constitutes a prima facie case that they are engaged in enemy trade.

"This is the meaning of our new proclamation. It will not, I hope and believe, make any practical difference in the present system, which will proceed exactly in the same way it has proceeded hitherto, except that certain ships will be examined at Halifax instead of at Kirkwall.

"In regard to Belgian relief ships, we will not place the slightest obstacle in the way of any agreement whereby they may be able to reach Rotterdam, even should such an arrangement mean a different route from the one they now pursue through the danger zone."

The proclamation referred to by the Minister of Blockade is a new order-in-Council which will be issued to-morrow, covering the attitude of the British Government towards neutral ships.

KNOW HOW TO BEAT THE HUN

Allies Are Prepared to Win the War Now.

Willing to Let Hindenburg Strike First.

London Cable says—Arthur S. Draper, staff correspondent of The New York Tribune, says:

The campaign of 1917 is about to open with a great spring offensive that will perhaps be the decisive one of the war on the west front, for military observers are agreed. I have just returned from a visit to the British front in France, and I know how well prepared and how perfectly confident is every soldier, from General to Tommy.

The same condition is true throughout the French army, which, after two and a half years of terrible strain and sacrifice, feels that it knows how to beat the enemy.

From neutral reports, from admissions made by German prisoners, and from much other information, the military students have reached a belief that Hindenburg expects and has prepared for the supreme struggle of the war in the west.

Troops which have fought in Russia, others from Roumania, have recently arrived on the west front. The new divisions and the fresh drafts are concentrated there. The bulk of the munitions and the supplies are being or have been sent there.

The air service has been keyed up by frantic efforts to regain the superiority which the Allied fliers wrested from the Germans last summer. Hundreds of thousands of men are digging feverishly to strengthen the lines, and in every other way every possible preparation has been completed.

Where and when the first great blow will fall are the questions which the experts and the Generals are debating. The allies seem to be willing that the German should first—to let him break his battalions and expend his shells against their lines before they throw their reserves of both into a crushing attack.

A push by the Germans against Russia seems hardly probable; nor is there much expectation of a renewed campaign in Roumania. Macedonia is considered merely a sideshow, to be watched till the great battle develops. Italy is a poor battleground, especially for this season of the year.

The finest "fighting country" lies between Armentieres and La Bassee, nearer to the Belgian border, until a thaw turns the frozen earth of this sector into a sea of Flanders mud.

Hindenburg may strike north of Ypres or south of Arras, along the Somme front, or he may strike at several points simultaneously. He needs territory—some physical proof of victory—to buoy up the hopes of his countrymen and improve the morale of his soldiers, something to give the nation and the armies the feeling that they are winning.

Where Sir Douglas Haig will strike, and when the blow will fall, it is impossible to speculate. But I venture to predict that when he does strike the world will marvel at the power and the intensity of the effort of the British army, which has been schooled on the Plains of Picardy and has learned the grim lesson of modern war well.

BRITISH AGAIN ATTACK AT KUT

Occupy Two Front Lines of the Turks,

But Are Later Forced Out Again.

London Cable.—British troops on the left bank of the Tigris River, in Irak, took the offensive on Saturday afternoon against the Turkish positions at Sannaiyat, says a British official statement issued to-day, and occupied two Turkish front lines on a frontage of 350 yards and 540 yards respectively.

The Turks launched two heavy counter-attacks and forced back the British right wing to its original line. The British left wing repulsed a Turkish counter-attack, but when night came the troops were withdrawn from their newly won positions. The text of the statement follows:

"On the afternoon of Saturday an assault was made on the Sanaiyat position on the left bank of the Tigris and the enemy's two front lines were occupied on a frontage of 350 yards and 540 yards respectively.

"Two heavy Turkish counter-attacks were launched, the first one hour and the second one and a half hours after we had obtained possession of the trenches. The former counter-attack was repulsed, but the latter was partially successful, and forced our right back to the original line. Our left, however, held on till dusk, when it was withdrawn under cover of our artillery barrage.

"On the south bank of the Tigris west of the Shumran bend further progress has been made."

MANY SUBS HAVE NOT RETURNED

Germany Admits Many U-Boats Are Missing,

But Claims Results Have Been Good.

London Cable—Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent sends the following account of the Reichstag meeting in Berlin:

"The main committee of the Reichstag met Wednesday morning. Vice-Admiral von Capelle, in a long speech, affirmed that the expectation the U-boats had placed in unrestricted submarine war had been not only realized, but surpassed.

"In view of the systematic concealment in which the British press has been indulging at the instigation of its Government with regard to the number of ships sunk, it is naturally difficult to give definite figures. The figures of the tonnage sunk recently published in the Berlin newspapers are in no wise correct, as shown by the proof we already have. It would be well to discontinue such summary compilations until official data are available, as they are only used by our enemies to carry on an agitation against us and disparage the great success of the U-boat warfare.

"Although a number of submarines, because of their large radius of action and their instructions, have not yet returned to their bases, I can already assure the committee that the results achieved have surpassed the expectations entertained by the navy. It is very satisfactory that there is no reason to reckon with the loss of even one U-boat since the beginning of the unrestricted submarine war. The defensive measures, about which such a fuss has been made by the British press and Parliament, have remained within normal limits, according to the reports of the U-boats which have returned.

"There is practically no shipping in the North Sea. Neutral shipping is clearly as good as stopped. Altogether we can look forward with greater confidence to the further development of the submarine war. The expectations attached thereto by the German people have been fully justified by the results thus far."

INCREASING CONFIDENCE THAT U-BOAT MENACE IS MASTERED

Private Reports Say Mortality From Famine is High in Germany.

New York Report.—A cable to the Tribune from Francis W. Hirst, dated London, Feb. 20, says:

Chancellor Bonar Law's statement in the House of Commons yesterday has given great satisfaction. The city is curious to learn how much new money is represented by Treasury Bill conversion.

Public attention has now switched from the loan to the man power controversy and the national service scheme. Arthur Neville Chamberlain has just told the Stock Exchange that he expects the war to be finished this summer.

There has been little business in the Stock Exchange, gilt-edged securities being dull. Bank shares are recovering, now that the loan has been successfully carried through. Chinese bonds have been firmer, but Japanese bonds have weakened, owing to the cessation of sinking fund purchases.

The postponement of the Imperial conference is attributed to the continued political crisis in Australia, which will involve a general election as the Senate, dominated by the labor caucus continues to checkmate the Hughes measures.

Private letters and newspaper reports from Holland indicate severe suffering for the poor there, and high mortality from famine among the civilian population of Germany.

Shipping critics in the House of Commons are attributing our shortage of transport to the expeditionary policy. The Peers are complaining about the multiplication of bureaucrats in Whitehall.

Potato difficulties continue. The Irish crop, it is stated, is one-third less than last year.

Import of silks and wines may be stopped to make room for necessaries.

In well-informed circles there appears to be increasing confidence that the submarine menace is being gradually mastered.

BRITAIN ISSUES MODIFICATION OF HER NAVAL BLOCKADE RULES

Official Proclamation of the Change of Terms Published To-day.

London Cable says—An official proclamation, modifying the terms of the British naval blockade, was issued here to-day. It follows:

"First: A vessel which is encountered at sea on the way to or from a port in any neutral country affording means of access to enemy territory, without calling at a port in British or Allied territory, shall, until the contrary is established, be deemed to be carrying goods with enemy destination or of enemy origin, and shall be brought in for examination, and, if necessary, for adjudication before a prize court.

"Second: Any vessel carrying goods with enemy destination or of enemy origin, shall be liable to capture and condemnation in respect of the carriage of such goods, provided that in the case of any vessel which calls at an appointed British or Allied port for examination of her cargo, no sentence of condemnation shall be pronounced except on carriage of goods of enemy origin or destination, and no such presumption as laid down in article I shall arise.

"Third: Goods which are found on examination of any vessel to be goods of enemy origin or destination shall be liable to condemnation."

MUSICAL HUNS WANT RECORDS

Bernstorff's Party Had a Big Selection

But Suspicious Examiners Will Hold Them.

Halifax, N. S., Report.—The German party on board the Scandinavian-American liner Frederik VIII., held here by the British authorities for examination, seems to have a singular love for gramophone music. Its various members had laid in a very representative stock of records ranging from grand opera to ragtime. They will not be allowed to take those records to Germany, as the authorities regard them as contraband. The Germans contend that they want the records for the music on them, but the immigration officials who discovered them think that perhaps they like them quite as much for the rubber, of which they are partly manufactured, and which is badly needed in Germany just now. The records will also be ran off to see whether they contain messages. The officials think it possible that some noted singer in the United States might give a touching description in German of the movements of Allied warships to a setting of Aida music.

The records will be confiscated and a receipt given for them, so that, if their German owners have the same passion for this kind of music at home they can repurchase them, but it is likely they will have to wait until the end of the war.

The search of the passengers continues. Yesterday one man was made unhappy by the vigilance of the officials. They suspected that his coat contained something inside besides the lining. A tailor was fetched from shore and he took out the lining. It is understood that a package of documents was found. These will be examined to see if they contain matters of interest.

The sailing of the ship is expected the week-end.

FOOD PARADE BY N. Y. WOMEN

Tenement Wives Held Great Protest Meeting.

Sent Appeal to President for Relief.

New York Report.—The women of the New York tenements have taken the food situation in their own hands, and planned a series of public demonstrations to convince the Mayor and city officials that something must be done to reduce prices. One of the wildest protest meetings the city has ever known broke up early to-day, after making arrangements for a great parade of women and children, to march all day through Wall Street, and at night through Fifth avenue.

An appeal was sent to President Wilson, and a committee was appointed to demand that the city appropriate $1,000,000, to be used immediately for buying and distributing food among the poor at cost. Impassioned speakers called upon the poor of the east side to organize and pledge the financial support of the Hebrew trades union. The capitalists were blamed for the high cost of food on the ground that they were amassing wealth by sending it to Europe.

Mass meetings and demonstrations continued to-day. The police were on the alert to prevent a fresh outbreak of rioting such as put many pushcarts out of business on Monday and Tuesday. Mayor Mitchel, who was absent when several hundred women tried to force their way into his office yesterday, promised to receive a committee to-day if it came quietly.

A thousand or more women attended last night's mass meeting, and at least 5,000 more fought to get into the hall. Two hours elapsed before there was order enough for the transaction of business.

HUN PLOTS IN MIDDLE EAST ARE LAID BARE

Earl Curzon Discloses the Events Which Transpired in Persia.

TEUTON TREACHERY

Russian Army Acted as Defence to Britain's Indian Empire.

London Cable—In the House of Lords to-night Lord Curzon lifted the veil which has hung over events in the middle east for many months. In reply to Lord Bryce, who sought information regarding the position of Persia, mention of which has not hitherto been made, Lord Curzon explained that a force, under Sir Percy Sykes, had marched to Ispahan and finally to Teheran, through 1,000 miles of country, under circumstances of the most arduous and perilous character, and it had resulted in the establishment of order over a wide area.

Lord Curzon reminded their lordships that the last occasion on which a statement on the subject had been made in the House was in 1915. The position at that time was one of considerable convulsion. British Consul Shiraz had recently been arrested under circumstances of ignominy. It was common knowledge that before the war Germany had been engaged in intriguing for an extension of power in the Indian Ocean with a view of striking the dominion of Britain in India and taking from us the hegemony of the eastern world. Turkey was to become her slave in order that she might control the straits. Egypt was to be menaced, Persia controlled and Afghanistan stirred up. The plot dated far back to 1898 when the German Emperor made a theatrical entry into Jerusalem and afterwards addressed a great meeting and told 300,000,000 of the Moslem world to look on him as their true and only friend. The principal instrument in this policy was to be the Bagdad railway. The consuls of the Central Powers at Ispahan and other large towns were well organized. They had a number of machine guns and probably a large consignment of rifles.

100 BANDS OF GERMANS.

At one time there were quite 100 bands of Germans scattered about Persia terrorizing the peaceful tribes and offering bribes. They stirred up trouble among the tribes, who habitually are at peace with the central Government. Meanwhile Germany succeeded in getting a more powerful ally in the Turks. Intending to pay off old scores with their hereditary enemy and anxious to recover territory on the borders of Persia, Turkey penetrated into Persia and overran part of it. A Turkish army is still there. Stories were spread everywhere that the German Emperor had embraced the creed of Islam. The movement reached its maximum force in August last, when the Turkish military advance was exercising a disastrous influence on the situation in Teheran and the Persian Government was on the eve of evacuating the capital. Since then there has been a steady improvement. The Russian army recovered its position and effectively barred the way of the Turkish forces to Teheran. We found ourselves in a somewhat strange position, having the Russian army acting as a successful screen to the defence of our Indian Empire.

British Consul at Shiraz and a few male members of the community there who had been imprisoned with him have been released after eight months' harsh captivity, and most of the German agents in the country have been captured.

The march of the force under Sir Percy Sykes from Bander Abbas to Ispahan and finally to Teheran, a distance of 1,000 miles, has not been mentioned hitherto in this country. The object of Gen. Sykes was to organize the Southern Persian force into a military gendarmerie under the Persian Government, but officered by British with Indian training experience. That force was ultimately to attain a strength of 11,000 men. Gen. Sykes has at present a force of 5,000 men in addition to a military escort of 800 troops from India, his military position being strengthened by reinforcements now being despatched from India. A similar force of gendarmerie is being raised by the Bakhtiari tribesmen, who have always been friendly to us. I hope before long Sir Percy will be able to march from Shiraz, at which he now is, and clear the brigand camps and robber pests that are part of Persia.

AFGHANISTAN LOYAL.

On the eastern side of Persia similar success has been obtained by another force under a British officer, Major Keith, who succeeded in pacifying the whole of that considerable quarter. In Afghanistan the Ameer, in spite of offers of bribes, has remained entirely loyal.

The attempt to improve the general situation in Persia has been assisted by two independent movements of a military character outside the borders of that country. The first was the success of General Maude in Mesopotamia. Those operations resulted in casualties to the Turkish troops estimated at 15,000, and has drawn increasing Turkish forces from operations in the north, thereby improving the position of the Russian army. The second outside group arose from the movement of the Shereef of Mecca. The situation is not altogether free from anxiety, as Turkish troops are still to be turned out of parts of the Persian hinterland. In the Persian Gulf there is still disorder, but the position of the oil fields is practically secure. No one who knew anything about the East cared to venture a prophecy, but he hoped it might be said the worst is over. The great chain of German ambition and aggrandizement, stretching from Europe to Asia, has been twisted aside, if not broken.

PEACE BODIES MEET

In Conference at New York —Not United.

New York Des.—Representatives of nineteen organizations, devoted to the maintenance of international peace, met here to-day to discuss plans for harmonious action in the face of the national crisis. The conference is under the direction of the American Peace Party.

Evidence of differences among the pacifists came to life several days ago, in the declination of the World's Court League and the League to Enforce Peace to attend this conference.

Delegates to the Woman's Peace Party, who will attend the American Peace Party's meeting, have adopted a platform, urging that, if occasion arises, the Government submit the question of war to an "advisory referendum."

It is declared that the United States should under no circumstances ally itself with any of the belligerents, and urges American citizens, as a measure of patriotic duty, not to enter the danger zone.

BRITAIN TAKES ALL LEATHER.

Washington Report.—The British War Office has taken possession of all the leather in the United Kingdom, the Commerce Department was informed in a cablegram to-day from the American Consul General at London. Leather produced between now and March 31 also will be taken over. Another cablegram announced the seizure of all unsold stocks of raw jute and prohibition of dealings in jute.

GREEK KING'S TREACHERY HAD BAD EFFECT

Associated Press Writer Tells of Results of Entente Blockade.

VERY LITTLE FOOD

Coal Scarce Also—Government Complying With Ally Demands.

Athens Cable.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press)—This message is sent by hand on the first ship carrying passengers for America that has left Greece since the declaration of the Allied blockade of Greece on Dec. 8th. The only persons allowed to depart to-day were non-Greeks, who had previously obtained permission from the Allied authorities, and Venizelists, released from prison in compliance with the terms of the Allied ultimatum of Jan. 8.

The blockade of Greece is absolute. The only vessels of any nation allowed to make Greek ports are the rare Italian ones, themselves forbidden to discharge foodstuffs or mails for that part of Greece which is not Venizelist. The grain ships originally cleared for the Piraeus, which had been waiting seven weeks in the harbor for the blockade to end, so that they might dock, have all been ordered away. The Allied authorities have instructed them to proceed to Saloniki to discharge their cargoes for the use of the Venizelists in Macedonia. Were the blockade to end to-morrow, no foodstuffs from abroad could reach Greece under a fortnight. The price of ordinary canned goods has gone up 600 per cent. The banks refuse to accept drafts on foreign countries, as, owing to the stoppage of the mails, there is no way of forwarding them for collection.

The blockade was officially declared on Dec. 8, but had been in practical effect since the first of December. Government opinion at the time in Greece was that the available food supply of the country could hold out twenty-one days, and that satisfactory assurances could be given the Entente Powers within that period to insure the lifting of the blockade. No measures were therefore taken to conserve the food supply until Dec. 20. Then bread cards were issued, the bread ordered mixed with corn meal flour and barley, and seven-tenths of a pound allotted per person per diem. No definition of the Entente conditions for lifting the blockade was forthcoming until Jan. 8. Meanwhile the Greek Government was forced to issue, in addition to the bread cards, first sugar, then potato, cards. To save coal, the restaurants were ordered closed at 10 p.m., the moving picture theatres closed in the evenings, and the electric street lamps suppressed. Shops and stores were shut at 5 instead of 8.30, as usual. A sudden cold wave a week ago produced great suffering among the poorer classes throughout Greece, a large majority of whom were already out of work, owing to the stoppage of shipping and the putting down of all business for export. Both the Prime Minister and the King received hundreds of messages from all over Greece, begging that coal be sent to relieve the suffering of the people. The King gave permission that the Royal forest of Tatoi be cut to provide fuel.

After a week from the establishment of the Government control of foodstuffs, bran was ordered mixed with bread flour. To-day the bread is two-thirds bran.

All the wheat in private hands in Greece has long since been confiscated by the Government. The store of foodstuffs reserved for feeding the army has been reduced by half, and the portion thus rendered available added to the public stock.

On Dec. 9 the Hellenic Government sent a formal protest against the blockade to the other neutral governments, through their diplomatic representatives in Athens.

On Dec. 12 the Greek Government protested for the second time to the Entente Powers against a continuation of a blockade the conditions of raising which had not yet been formulated. A copy of this protest was also sent to the neutral Ministers in Athens. No telegrams, save official ones in cipher, reciting these facts, were permitted to pass the Entente censors.

Under these conditions Athens is and has been perfectly calm. From the evening of Dec. 2, following the withdrawal of the Allied troops from the capital of Greece, order has been easily kept by a company of sailors. A few attempts to raid bakeries in the early days of the Government food control were quickly suppressed, and have not been repeated.

The demands of the Entente Powers for reparation and guarantees, made in their ultimatum of Dec. 14, and finally formulated in the supplementary ultimatum of Jan. 8, are, according to the Allied military attaches, being fulfilled on the latter with all possible speed.

General Phillips, the head of the British military mission supervising the transfer of the Greek army to the Peloponnesus, expresses himself satisfied with the progress of the troop movements. No Greek artillery of any importance now remains north of the Corinth Canal, which is controlled by the Allies.

SOUTH DAKOTA GOING DRY

Sioux Falls, So. Dak. Report.—The Senate of the South Dakota Legislature late to-day passed an absolute prohibition bill forty-one to four. The bill recently was passed by the House and now goes to the Governor for approval. The bill will put into effect the prohibitory amendment to the State constitution in the last general election and will become operative July 1.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Good-bye, old February 1917. We're not sorry you're gone. Memories of your cold and storms make us shiver.

* * *

Everybody will be extra busy this year. Nearly every lot owner in Port Elgin tells us he intends to have a bigger garden than ever, and also intends to keep chickens. Potatoes and eggs should make good eating next winter.

* * *

Some cit'es are planning to double the taxes on dogs and to place a tax on cats. Just think of the money Port Elgin could raise by this method.

* * *

There is demand for more buildings suitable for housing convalescent soldiers, who need bright rooms, good air and exercise to bring them back to strength. How would the American hotel building do? If Port Elgin had a live citizens committee some use might be found for this fine property.

* * *

A despatch says Henry Ford was stalled at Waterford, Ont. through accident to the train on which he was travelling. It also says that he walked up town and had supper at the Teeter House It doesn't say whether he left a Ford car under his plate as a tip to the waitress

* * *

Owen Sound has good hopes of inducing a large Detroit manufacturing concern to locate there The industrial committee is proving a live organization. If Port Elgin business men desire to see their town grow in importance they will need to do something more than wish.

* * *

This is the year of jubilee, Canada having been a Dominion for 50 years. Plans are on for a fitting celebration next July. The event should be properly feted. But wouldn't it be better to postpone the celebration until the war is over, when the boys return, and make a good job of it?

* * *

An American named Palmer, returning to the U. S, said he saw the Deutsch land and 187 other German submarines chained together in an English harbor. Likely quite true, but it is to be hoped he won't tell it around. By this time there are about 400 German subs captured.

* * *

This is the year of Jubilee for Bruce county also. Judge Klein last year suggested a celebration for July this year, believing that the war would be over. But it is not over, and it would hardly seem the proper thing to have festivities suitable for the occasion with our battalion at the front. We suggest that the county officials begin plans for a week's celebration when the boys get back.

* * *

The Times extends its congratulations to Miss Caroline Schierholtz in securing the medal for highest marks in entrance exams. over all contestants in Bruce County. Caroline has brought great credit to herself, and her teacher also her parents and the Port Elgin public school. The tribute paid by Princial Shaw to the winner of the medal was splendid. It showed that punctuality, attentiveness and all-round good-nature had won, as it always does, the chief prizes in life.

* * *

Government House, the place where the Lieutenant governor makes his home, has cost the people of the Province of Ontario $1,006,894.81 to date. It takes a very ordinary imagination to see what a large expense this will amount to every year. With new knights created frequently, and other high-falutin, fol-de-rols, we should not be surprised that as these useless burdens are imposed on the people it will have a tendency to create discontent. Who can we blame for these conditions but ourselves. If the people would make public positions a little more uncertain for the politicians there would be less of this useless snobbery and expense.

* * *

Mr. Rowell, a lawyer, says Mr. Hearst, a lawyer, is not capable of administering the Agriculture Department for the Province, from a farmers' standpoint, and objects to the appointment of deputies, arguing that Mr. Creelman, the commissioner, should have been made the Minister of Agriculture. At present the people are paying the premier, a commissioner, and at this session the Govt., asked for an additional deputy. Why don't the politicians go at the thing in a business-like way and make one of the farmer members of the legislature the Minister of Agriculture? At the present rate of going the people are paying three prices, and then getting half a job.

* * *

Gone are the days when a whole load of hardwood, or a couple of bags of potatoes paid for a year's subscription.

* * *

About the time some of our farmers are opening up their pits we propose being near to make faces at them in the hope that they'll throw potatoes at us.

* * *

Toronto takes, and it deserves, a lot of praise for its gift of three and a quarter millions of dollars to the Canadian Patriotic fund for 1917. This is nearly $7 per head. Renfrew a town of hardly 5000, raised $60,000 the other day, or about $12 per head.

* * *

Provincial Treasurer Lucas reports a surplus of $1,121,000. By this token the government should not need the war tax they imposed. The opposition could do better work in endeavoring to show where taxation could be lopped off on account of the boasted surplus rather than arguing there is a deficit.

* * *

If the 160th battalion goes as a unit in the 5th division, and are in the big spring drive, there will be some heavy casualties, and great sorrow in many Bruce homes. It has not been the practice of late to put whole battalions in the front, but rather the plan of drafting.

"Money, or Your Life"

Several citizens have inquired as to what Port Elgin will do for the Patriotic fund this year. In 1916 $3,800 was raised. There is no doubt the demands are greater on the fund, and the town should do no less than it did in 1916, in fact if we are to take care of our share of the increases which the general fund at Ottawa must meet, we should do better.

It has been suggested that we begin earlier to pay our pledges, so that nine months might be used, instead of six, as last year. To do this we should begin now. On April 19, last year, the canvass was made. One of the larger givers goes so far as to suggest that a list be opened now and pledges taken, so that payments may be begun now, and fully paid by October 31st.

The suggestion is a good one. and if others feel favorable to it Treasurer Struthers is willing to open a list, and The Times will be only to glad to cooperate in keeping the lists before the public. The canvass campaign to come later.

Port Elgin cannot gain by putting this matter off. The obligation is ours. This is the year of the greatest struggle. Every soldiers family must be made free from all financial worries. In fact "It's money or your life."

Farmers Organizing

There never was a time in Canada when farmers were thinking and working more together than they are to day.

Many can still recall the days of the Grange, and still greater numbers the days of the Patrons of Industry.

The difficulty in past year organizations has been the inability of the farmers to keep their interests from being exploited by politicians.

The present way of organization is that of the Farmers' club in many districts of Ontario, while in the west the Grain-Growers are becoming powerful. The movement is being strengthened in the country by the sympathetic assistance which comes from the powerful organization in North Dakota, which state with its 30,000 members is organizing Iowa, Nebraska, Michigan and Wisconsin. In Western Canada farmers are much more powerful than in the east, and they have begun to reap some of the fruits of their banding together in better shipping facilities, and in the price paid for their wheat.

Another organization has sprung up which demands free trade, and soon, all over the continent the farmer is beginning to realize that he is the real power in this land, and that he has been, and is being, exploited by the politician and the middleman.

If those who represent the agricultural interests of our country could once realize the power they have and could select leaders from their ranks whose interests were really for the good of the producer, the common people would be rescued from the class of manipulators, and there would soon be found an easy way to the consumer by the producer.

TURNER'S

Owing to there being such a depth of snow in the bush the high price of wood does not seem to be a drawing card to the farmers as in the past years. By the time you dig the tree out and dig yourself in you've earned your big price for the wood.

Mr. John C. Pollock, of Port Elgin, spent a few days here.

James Hyde and daughter, of St. Helen's spent a few days at Archie Pollock's.

Toronto has nothing on this district for prices. Very ordinary 12 inch wood brings 2.50 a cord, potatoes about $2.15 a bushel, eggs 41c, butter 35c.

NORTH BRUCE

The Anniversary services of Wesley Methodist church were held on Sunday. The day was fair and the attendances were large. Rev. W. R. Buckborough was the preacher in the morning and the pastor Rev. Mr. Hawkn preached in the evening. The morning subject was "Christ's value to a man." It proved a very interesting and well thought-out address. The choir of the Underwood Methodist church furnished the music for the morning service, rendering two anthems which were greatly appreciated. In the evening the music was much enjoyed also. There was an anthem and a quartet and a chorus. The pastor delivered a fine sermon based on Mark text "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister," pointing out that service was the mark by which men are known. He drew attention to the service of the martyrs, in the past and those leading unselfish lives to-day. The call of the country just now was for service.

Mr. and Miss Able from 4th Bruce, visited at Mr. G. A. Brooks, on Sunday.

Rev. Thynne of Palmerston, had charge of the services at Queen Hill and St. Andrew's on Sunday last. He will also conduct the services next Sunday.

Big Success

There was a bumper crowd at Mewhinney's school No. 3 Bruce on Friday night when the teacher Miss Megrow and her scholars and friends gave a box social in aid of Red Cross and the fact that everything went so well and the record sum of $178 was taken in, shows the interest and appreciation in the school section. Geo. Brown made a good chairman and Auctioneer Pearce sold 103 boxes. The program was an excellent one, especially fine were the drills by the scholars, and the dialogs and recitations in fact the whole program was a treat to all. The draw for the fine centre piece donated by Miss Rosetta Glenn was won by Mrs. McColl. Miss Sadie Currie was accompanist for the drills. Good accommodation was provided for the horses. There were 35 horses put in Ed. Shipley's stables and 60 in Alex Mewhinney's, and both men speak highly of the splendid way in which the young men co-operated in stabling and taking away so many rigs. The tickets for the centre piece brought $12.

Miss Caroline Shierholtz Receives Fine Medal

There was a fine gathering of High School pupils, the 4th form of the Public school, trustees and friends on Wednesday night at the library to witness the presentation of the medal given by M. A. Halliday of Chesley to the pupil taking highest standing in Bruce county in the Entrance exams

Mr. E. Roy Sayles occupied the chair, and a program provided by the scholars was carried out as follows: Instrumental, Irma Stephenson, Nellie Avis; reading G. Parfitt; instrumental, Nellie McDuff; whistling solo, Miss McDonald; recitations, M. Rusnton, b. Goar; song, D McArthur.

The high school board was represented by Mr. Stevens and the public school board by Mr. Mitchell. Both gentlemen made brief congratulatory addresses, as did also Principal Shaw.

Inspector Reid, in appropriate language, made the presentation address, and pinned the medal on Miss Shierholtz.

Trustee Shierholtz, father of the young winner, made a reply of thanks, and at the conclusion three cheers were given for the Shierholtz family.

The medal is a very pretty and costly one, and shows the deep interest of Mr. Halliday in educational progress of the boys and girls in Bruce county. It is engraved on one side with the winner's name and the purpose, and on the reverse side the name of the donor

The medal is given for the highest marks obtained in entrance exams, by any pupil in Bruce County. Between five and six hundred pupils try these exams each year The past four years it has been won by pupils in the West Bruce Inspectorate.

Golden Wedding

OBITUARY

At Sandridge, Ont. on Saturday morning, Feb. 3rd, Mrs. Hugh Christie passed away to her heavenly home after a few days illness at the home of her daughter, Mrs. D. Valentine, at the age of 75 years 9 months and 22 days. For many years she had been blind, and on that account confined to her home, but there are those who remember her well when she, with her husband, was one of the first pioneers in the Tp. of Joby, cheerfully taking part in the struggles pertaining to the life of the first settlers.

The funeral took place on Tuesday, Feb. 6th to Strong cemetery. Many of her old friends were present to show their last tribute of respect to the deceased. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Moyes. She leaves to mourn her loss, two sons, John and Malcolm, who reside here, and the following daughters, Mrs John Cook, Mrs Valentine, Mrs. McDonald, Mrs. Murray, Grand Forks, B. C. Mrs. Christie was a former resident of Saugeen and will be remembered by many Times readers.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson IX. March 4, 1914.

Jesus Feeds the Five Thousand.—John 6: 1-21.

Commentary.—I. Many to be fed (vs. 1-4.) 1. After these things—What John now records took place about a year after what is given in the preceding chapter. He does not write with close regard to chronological sequence, but with the main purpose of establishing the doctrine of Christ's deity. Went over the Sea of Galilee—From the west side of the plain near Bethsaida Julias on the northeast shore. Tiberias—This name was applied to this sea later than the name Galilee, having been given to it by the Romans. Two other names, Gennesaret and Chinnereth, are applied to the Sea of Galilee. 2. a great multitude followed him—They followed Jesus, either going across the sea or on foot around the northern end. It is probable that the multitude was made up in part of residents of Galilee and in part of those who were on their way from other districts to attend the Passover at Jerusalem. They had seen his miracles of healing and were interested to see more of his work and hear his teachings. 3. Went up into a mountain—The other evangelists speak of the retirement of Jesus and his disciples into a "desert place" for a period of rest, but they were followed by the crowds. He sat with his disciples—It is natural to suppose that he was giving them instruction. 4. The passover ....was nigh—This verse gives us information regarding the time of year. The Passover was observed early in April.

II. A small supply (vs. 5-9.) 5. Jesus then lifted up his eyes—It was "when the day began to speak of feeding the multitude. A great company—Their interest in the mission and power of Jesus was great. There were five thousand men in the company besides women and children. He "was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd" (Mark 6: 34.) He saith unto Philip—Philip was apparently a matter-of-fact man (John 14: 8), a quick reckoner and a good man of business, and, therefore, perhaps more ready to rely on his own shrewd calculations than on unseen resources.—Dods. This is suggested as the reason why Jesus put this question to Philip, for it was intended as a test. Whence shall we buy bread—It was a "desert place" at a distance from villages where food could be purchased. 6. To prove him—This need not mean more than to try whether he would suggest any way out of the difficulty; but the more probable meaning is to test his faith, to try what impression Christ's words and works have made upon him.—Plummer. Knew what he would do—The miracle which he was about to perform was different from the miracles of healing and others already wrought, in that it involved a creative act. It was wrought not only for the relief of the multitude, but for the further instruction of the disciples and to confirm them more fully in their faith in his Messiahship. 7. Two hundred pennyworth .... is not sufficient—Philip must have cast his eye over the assembly and quickly made his estimate. The sum mentioned was equivalent to about thirty-two dollars, but it would buy much more then than the same amount would now. This would not buy enough to satisfy the thousands of hungry people. 8. Andrew—One of the first two disciples whom Jesus called. He was less calculating and more believing than Philip. 9. Five barley loaves—The loaves were round, flat cakes, about an inch thick. One loaf would not be sufficient for a meal for one person. They were barley loaves, the food of the poorest classes. Jesus had asked, "How many loaves have ye? go and see" (Mark 6: 38), and Andrew brought the answer, but asked, "What are they among so many?" Two small fishes—They were probably dried or pickled fishes to be eaten as a relish with the bread. The supply was too small, for one who reasoned from a merely human standpoint, to consider for such a multitude, but the Master accepted and multiplied it.

III. A miraculous increase (vs. 10-15). 10. Make the men sit down—Mark tells us that they sat down by companies and in ranks, "by hundreds, and by fifties," so that an orderly arrangement was maintained. Much grass—This indicates that the time was early spring. The men.. About five thousand—The women and children would sit by themselves. 11. Had given thanks—Jesus blessed the food and gave thanks in recognition that the Father was the giver of the temporal good about to be dispensed to the multitude. Distributed to the disciples—They were to act with Jesus in this miracle, and were to be in a position to receive the full benefit of the lesson Jesus was giving. The disciples kept on distributing the bread and the fishes until there was no more demand. As much as they would—As much as the people desired. 12. Were filled—There was no scantiness in the amount given out. There is no scarcity in the kingdom of grace. God gives abundantly. Gather up the fragments—Although there was an abundant multiplication of the food supply, there must be no waste. 13. Filled twelve baskets with the fragments—These were the small wicker baskets used by the Jews to carry food that was ceremonially clean, and were here used by the apostles to carry a supply of provisions for themselves. "In all things the Saviour set us an example of frugality, though he had an infinite supply at his disposal, and was himself economical though He was Lord of all."—Barnes. 14. Then those men, when they had seen—"When therefore the people saw."—R. V. This is of a truth that prophet—The people were looking for the coming of the Messiah, and this miracle was viewed in the light of a sign that He who wrought it was the Christ. Jesus had exercised divine power in the multiplication of the loaves and fishes, and He had done this for the relief of the hungry multitude. 15. Jesus not only saw the outward acts of the people as they wondered at the miracle He wrought and admired Him as a benefactor, but He knew their thoughts and their purpose. They believed He was their coming King, and in spite of His diffidence they would make Him the King of Israel; for it was their view that the Messiah should be a powerful temporal ruler. They probably expected to take Him up to Jerusalem and crown Him at the approaching feast of the Passover. To avoid any open conflict Jesus withdrew into a mountain by Himself to pray.

IV. A miracle on the sea (vs. 16-21). The disciples doubtless shared the belief of the people who saw the miracle of feeding the five thousand, that Christ should be crowned king, and they desired to remain with him. For this reason he "constrained" them (Mark 6: 45) to enter the ship and cross the Sea of Galilee to the other side, toward Capernaum. They were reluctant to go away, for if honors were coming to their Master, they wished to receive those that would naturally come to them as his intimate followers. It has also been suggested that the disciples did not wish to leave him alone, since it would appear like desertion. The disciples were in great distress during the night, for one of the sudden storms which sweep the Sea of Galilee from time to time had arisen, and threatened to wreck their boat. Their toiling in rowing had not been effective in bringing the boat far toward the desired landing-place. Jesus was spending the night in prayer while they were in danger of finding watery graves; but he was not unmindful of their distress, and toward morning he came to them, walking on the sea. When they were afraid at his approach, he assured them that it was he and they received him into the boat. The waters became calm and "immediately the ship was at the land whither they went."

Questions.—To what place did Jesus and his disciples go? For what purpose? By what conveyance? What time of year was it? Who besides the disciples were about Jesus? What question did Jesus ask Philip? Why did he ask the question? What was Philip's answer? What suggestion did Andrew make? What course did Jesus pursue? How many were fed? How large an amount of food was left? How did the people regard Jesus after the miracle? Describe the miracle that followed?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Food in the Desert.

I. Christ's gift to his hearers.

II. Christ's lesson to his disciples.

III. An occasion of human error.

I. Christ's gift to his hearers. John's gospel presents chiefly the discourses of Jesus. This narrative is given by way of introducing his great discourse on the bread of life. It is the record of a critical scene in Christ's work in Galilee, which followed a great miracle in Jerusalem, where he revealed himself as the giver of life in the healing of the cripple at the pool of Bethesda. In this record he is revealed as the Support and Guide of life. At Jerusalem the central teaching was upon the relation of the Son to the Father. In this case it is the relation of Christ to the believer. The place where the multitude gathered was a thoroughly secluded district, well fitted to prepare them for the lessons they were to receive. Jesus sought retirement from the fury of Herod and the chief rulers. The disciples required rest and retirement after their first missionary tour. They needed training in philanthropic work, as well as in spiritual things. The people were eager to hear Jesus' teaching. They evinced a confidence in him which he did not disappoint. He honored their imperfect zeal. We are here made to see Christ's ready discernment of all forms of human necessity, and his power to relieve them. What he would not do for himself, he instantly did for those who forgot their own comforts to learn of him. The compassion of Jesus was without respect of persons. He did not raise the question of race or religion. He did not wait until the people cried out from hunger. He provided food for them before they asked it.

II. Christ's lesson to his disciples. It was more to the disciples than to the multitude that the events of the day were significant. They had been taught by degrees what was involved in "leaving all" to follow Jesus. He now taught them what was their mission to the world they had left, and that they had left it that they might serve it more effectually, and were now to love it with a new love. Discipleship involved practical, laborious service. Jesus put questions to his disciples which they could not answer, and laid on them duties which they of themselves could not perform. His object was to prove them, and to reveal their ignorance and weakness, that they might appeal to him for help. The proffer of Jesus' own wisdom and power was the answer to his own question. In the reckoning of the disciples there was a large deficit. With Christ there was a great surplus. With the child's gift, blessed and multiplied, Jesus fed the hungry, and refreshed the weary with no diminishing of his supply. Having by the miracle taught a lesson of beneficence, Jesus inculcated a lesson in economy. A solemn warning was implied in the command to "gather," and in its reason, "that nothing be lost."

III. An occasion of human error. The human and the divine idea of kingship came into strong contrast as a sequel to the miracle. The multitude imagined that Jesus was the destined deliverer of Israel from the Roman yoke, and were prepared to support his claims as a temporal monarch. Though those Galileans were not representative men, they were fired with the national idea, and they attempted to carry out the national wish with regard to the Messiah. Time and place were, in their estimation, favorable for raising the standard of rebellion. Upward of five thousand resolute hearts would form a nucleus for an army, which they expected would soon include every true Jewish patriot. Instead of surrendering themselves to Jesus and his teachings as the Messiah, the multitude wished him to surrender himself to serve their purposes, and to accept their hosannas. Their proposal to make him king was sincere and enthusiastic. Jesus withdrew to frustrate their purpose, and thus to indicate the nature of the glory he sought. He had much to plead on behalf of the multitude on whom the miracle had been lost, and much to plead in behalf of his disciples, who had been greatly affected by the zeal of the multitude. He retired to the mountain, away from the political designs of men, to watch over his disciples as they toiled in their voyage across the lake.

SAVING MONEY IN THE FEED BILL

How to Figure Out Which Are the Cheapest Feeds to Use—Bran at $32 Per Ton is Too Expensive to Feed Economically—Cut Up Some Hay or Straw and Mix It With the Heavier Meals Instead.

Even though prices for finished cattle are about $2.50 per hundredweight better this winter than they were last winter, with the high price of food we must feed as economically as possible so as to make a reasonable profit. Early in the winter many farmers, despite the plentiful amount of roughage in the form of hay they had, got—to use a vulgar phrase—"cold feet," and sold, with the result that at present time of writing, Jan. 25, choice steers are bringing on the Toronto market almost as much as Christmas cattle.

For some time now we have been publishing on our market pages tables and figures showing the relative value of the different feeding stuffs, and in the present article I want to show how, by studying the information that is given from week to week a man may save a lot of money in his feeding operations.

Mangels (medium)	12.0	0.1	6.5	0.9	1:63.0

Suppose we are feeding our cattle: clover hay, 5 lbs.; oat straw, 10 lbs.; silage, 30 lbs.; barley 2 lbs.; oats, 2 lbs.; and bran 8 lbs. per animal per day, and we want to know if this is an economical ration, and if it is not, what we should feed.

The first thing to do is to figure out the composition of the ration we are feeding. When changing rations it is important to have the composition of the new rations as nearly the same as the old as possible. If not, digestive troubles are likely to occur, and indeed the animal may get a setback. In the composition of a ration only three things have to be considered, the amount of dry matter of protein and of starch equivalent. The table shows the composition of some common feeding stuffs. The figures represent per cent. or parts per hundred, so that it is a simple matter to figure out the composition of the ration. Five pounds of clover hay is being fed. From the table we see that 100 parts of red clover hay has 84 parts of dry matter. By dividing this figure by 100 and multiplying by five we get the amount of dry matter in five pounds of the hay. Similarly by dividing the figure given for protein by 100 and multiplying by five we get the amount of protein in the five pounds of hay. The following table shows the composition of the ration figured out in this way:

	Dry Matter	Digestible Protein	Starch Equivalent
Clover hay, 5 lbs.	4.20	.275	1.60
Oat straw, 10 lbs.	8.57	.100	1.70
Silage, 30 lbs.	5.40	.120	2.58
Barley, 2 lbs.	1.71	.160	1.35
Oats, 2 lbs.	1.73	.144	1.20
Bran, 8 lbs.	6.96	.728	3.40
	28.57	1.527	11.83

Having determined the composition of the ration, the next thing to do is to see if it is economical. By turning to the market pages of The Countryman we find the following table which shows us at a glance the relative values of the different feeding stuffs.

Feed	Price	Value of Nutrients bought for $1.
Clover hay, ton	$12.00	$1.52
Cotton seed meal, ton	50.00	1.37
Brewers' grains, dry, ton	35.00	1.15
Wheat (feed) bush	1.07	1.05
Oil cake, ton	36.00	1.05
Malt sprouts, ton	26.00	1.03
Brewers' grains, fresh.	8.40	1.02
Middlings, ton	29.00	1.03
Timothy hay, ton	15.00	.99
Corn, feed, bush	1.12	.98
Oat Straw, ton	9.00	.86
Barley (feed) ton	1.00	.84
Shorts, ton	26.00	.84
Oats, bush	.64	.83
Bran, ton	32.00	.82
Wheat straw	9.00	.48
Molasses, ton	40.00	.48
Turnips, ton	16.00	.21

We see that clover hay at $12 per ton is the cheapest feed we have. For every dollar spent in clover hay at this price we get $1.52 worth of nutrients as compared with only 86 cents worth in oat straw at $9 per ton. This at once indicates that it will pay us to sell our straw and buy clover hay with the money, if we have got sufficient on hand. Barley, oats and bran are all very dear as compared with some of the other feeds. Thus for every dollar spent in bran at $32 per ton, we only get 82 cents worth of nutrients, as compared with $1.05 worth in feed wheat at $1.07 per bushel and $1.45 worth in dried brewers' grains at $35 per ton. This shows us that at the prices given, oats, barley and bran are not economical feeds.

In making up our new ration we need not reduce the amount of silage given. Silage as a succulent feed is a valuable feed in giving palatability to the ration. If silage costs to produce as much as $4 per ton, it is a cheap feed. Clover hay, as has been seen is a very cheap feed, so that it will be well to eliminate the straw from the ration altogether and feed clover hay. Suppose we feed 15 lbs. per animal per day. Let us see what kind of a ration we have now got with the silage and clover hay. By using the tables as described above we get the following:

	Dry Matter	Digestible Protein	Starch Equivalent
Silage, 30 lbs.	5.40	.120	2.58
Clover hay, 15 lbs.	12.60	.825	4.80
	18.00	.945	7.38

We have not got sufficient of either dry matter, protein or starch equivalent. From the table showing the relative value of nutrients we see that after clover hay cotton seed meal at $50 per ton is the cheapest feed. By feeding 1 1-2 pounds of this with the hay and silage we would have as much protein in the former ration, but we would not have sufficient starch equivalent. This means that we will have to feed some other feed that has a wider nutritive ratio. The nutritive ratios of the different feeding stuffs are given in the last column of the table. After cotton seed meal dried brewers' grains are the next cheapest feed. Here again the nutritive ratio is too narrow, and to give the required amount of starch equivalent we would have to feed too much protein. Feed wheat, the next cheapest feed, has a wider nutritive ratio, and if we feed seven pounds in conjunction with the clover and silage we will have a ration that has approximately the same composition as the first ration.

	Dry Matter	Digestible Protein	Starch Equivalent.
Silage, 30 lbs	5.40	.120	2.58
Clover hay, 15 lbs	12.60	.825	4.80
Wheat, 7 lbs	6.06	.630	4.99
	24.06	1.575	12.37

The new ration has less dry matter than the old one, but this is a small matter, as the digestive tract of an animal readily adapts itself to variations of 10 or 15 per cent. in volume of feed given.

Let us now compare the cost of the two rations. Valuing the various feeds at the prices given in the table, that is, clover hay at $12 per ton, silage at $4 per ton, straw at $9 per ton, oats at 64 cents per bushel, barley at $1 per bushel, feed wheat at $1.07 per bushel, and bran at $32 per ton, we find that the cost of the first ration is about 34 cents as compared with 27 cents for the second ration. That is, the second ration means a saving of seven cents per animal per day. This may seem like a small matter; but if thirty head of cattle are being fed it means a saving of $2.10 a day and for a month a saving of $63. Studying the composition of feeds and basing their worth on the value of the nutrients that can be bought for one dollar is a paying proposition.

In feeding wheat alone without any lighter meal it will be necessary to cut some of the hay up very finely and mix it with it. This will prevent the wheat from lying heavily on the animal's stomach and prevent danger from digestive troubles. The great value of bran is that it is food proof. When bran is fed in the ration it is not necessary to cut up any of the hay and mix it with the meal ration, as the bran contains a large amount of fibre which stimulates the digestive juices and helps in the digestion of the other feeds.

In the United States a popular feed with cattle feeders is corn and cob meal. It is found that when this is fed the animals never go off their feed. The reason of this is simply that, like bran, the meal, on account of the large amount of fibre in the cob, does not lie heavily on the stomach, and not only that, but it actually aids in the digestion of the heavier meals. By mixing cut hay with the heavier meals the same results are obtained as if bran or corn and cob meal were fed but at considerably less cost.

Open the Eyes Under Water.

Practise opening the eyes under water in swimming, for while favorable conditions there is much to be seen and enjoyed in the queer, ghostly light below. The ability to see when below the surface may some time prove of priceless value. It is one of the attributes of swimming, and it may be readily mastered. But do not open the eyes until well below. The closed lid is an ample protection when one is plunging from any height, and it should remain closed until the first swift downward rush is ended.—All Outdoors.

Sciatica Vanishes Instantly if Nerviline Is Used

CAN YOU BEAT THIS CASE?

No ordinary liniment will even relieve Sciatica. Nothing but the most powerful kind of a remedy can penetrate through the tissues and finally reach the Sciatic Nerve. You can always depend on the old-time "Nerviline." Nothing made to-day is as good for Sciatica as Nerviline was when first produced about forty years ago. All this time the same old "Nerviline" has been curing Sciatica, Lumbago, Rheumatism, and is considered to be without an equal in relieving pain or soreness anywhere. "'Nerviline' couldn't be made stronger or better," writes James E. Edwards. "The way it cures Sciatica is to me simply a miracle. For years I suffered frightfully. I ruined my stomach with internal dosing. I rubbed in gallons of oils and liniments—none were strong enough. One good rubbing with Nerviline relieved. I kept on rubbing and shortly was cured. My father cured rheumatism in his right arm and shoulder with Nerviline, and my mother cured herself of chronic lumbago with Nerviline. Our family simply swears by Nerviline and we are never without it in our home. We find that for external pain, for coughs, colds, earache, such minor ills it is a veritable family physician. 25 cents at all dealers.

Better Than the Echo.

A certain glen in Scotland had the reputation of having a splendid echo. An English gentleman visited the place and asked the guide about the echo.

"Just shout 'Two bottles of liquor,'" said the guide.

The gentleman did as requested, and after waiting for several minutes he turned to the Scot and said:

"But I do not hear any echo."

"Maybe no," chuckled the Scot, "but here's the lassie comin' wi' the liquor."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Codfish Balls.

Take a cupful of cod.

It is washed and shredded.

Add two cups of quartered potatoes.

The potatoes, of course, have been peeled.

Cover with boiling water and cook for 25 minutes.

The potatoes, however, must be cooked till they are done.

But they must not be overcooked to the point of sogginess.

Now drain thoroughly, mash and beat with a fork until light.

Add the butter, mix and partly cool. Add a beaten egg and two tablespoons of cream.

Make into balls, cover with egg and bread crumbs and fry in smoking hot fat.

Spanking Doesn't Cure!

Don't think children can be cured of bed-wetting by spanking them. The trouble is constitutional, the child cannot help it. I will send FREE to any mother my successful home treatment, with full instructions. If your children trouble you in this way, send no money, but write me to-day. My treatment is highly recommended to adults troubled with urine difficulties by day or night. Address,

FRETFUL BABIES

Mrs. John M. Weaver, Blissfield, N. B., writes: "I can speak very highly of Baby's Own Tablets. I have used them for my children and find they are the best medicine a mother can give her little ones. I would strongly recommend them to all mothers who have fretful babies." The Tablets regulate the bowels and stomach; break up colds and simple fevers; expel worms; cure vomiting and indigestion, and make teething easy. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A PUZZLING CASE

Sitting down in a comfortable chair opposite him I pointed solemnly to a glass of brandy and soda standing at his elbow.

"You should not fly to that for consolation."

Dallas turned his lack-lustre eyes on the drink and then looked at me with a bitter smile.

"Don't preach, major," he said, harshly, "you don't know what it is to have loved and lost, therefore you are no judge as to what means should be taken to quieten one's conscience."

"Quieten one's conscience," I repeated, significantly; "is there need of that?"

"Need of that," he said, rising to his feet with a frown, "yes, great need."

"Why, did you treat her badly?"

"On the contrary, she treated me badly," he cried, walking to and fro in a state of uncontrollable agitation, "still I might have restrained my anger and we would not have parted."

"Parted where?"

"In Italy. Oh, yes! we were great friends in Milan; I saw her at the opera and she was so beautiful that I fell in love with her. Del Orto introduced me to her, and as I was English she took a great fancy to me."

"Why because you were English?"

"Like drawing to like, I suppose. She was English also."

"What?" I cried, in amazement; "Mazzucata English?"

"Or Irish, if you wish to be particular, major. Yes, her real name was Megallan, but of course she took an Italian name when she went on the stage, and from Mary Megallan changed to Marietta Mazzucata."

"I never knew that before."

"There are a good many things you don't know."

"You are right. For instance: how she came to her death."

Dallas was leaning against the mantelpiece, looking listlessly at the carpet; but at my last remark he looked at me with blazing eyes.

"What the deuce has that to do with you?"

I am an old man, but, nevertheless, my temper is as fiery as that of a young one, and I would have resented Dallas' remark very promptly, but that a thought of my desire to learn all about Mazzucata from him restrained me. With this in my mind I therefore answered quietly, though I was more disposed to show my sense of the man's impertinence by leaving the room.

"It has nothing to do with me, certainly, but I would like to know who killed the woman."

"So would I! So would I!" he repeated, vehemently; "if I did I would strangle him—or her."

"Do you think the crime was committed by a woman?"

Dallas looked at me keenly, then crossing the room resumed his seat and finished the brandy and soda.

"How should I know. It's none of my business."

"Considering what you said last night about killing her and what you say this morning about quietening your conscience, I should think it was a good deal of your business."

The young man sat quite still as I said these words, but I saw the knuckles of his fingers grow white as he suddenly clutched the arms of his chair.

"Major Granby," he said, at length, in a measured voice, "do you think I killed Mazzucata?"

"I don't know."

"Thank you, major, I am much obliged to you for your good opinion. So you have come here to spy out traces of the crime, and put a rope round my neck, eh?"

I kept quiet as long as I could, but evidently I was not born to be a detective, for at this last insulting speech I arose to my feet and poured forth the vials of my wrath on Dallas.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself speaking like that to a man old enough to be your father," I cried, excitedly; "I came to you out of friendship and to ask you to put my mind at rest. You say I suspect you of killing this woman. God knows I do not wish to suspect you, but look at the way you spoke last night—look at the way you speak this morning. If you are not guilty, why do you act as if you were—I only came to warn you not to speak to others as you did to me, lest they suspect you of what I am sure you are innocent."

"Oh!" he said, sneeringly, "so you are sure I am innocent."

"I bid you good morning, Mr. Dallas," I replied, in a dignified manner, and walked towards the door. Before I reached it, however, he bounded across the room and stood with his back to the door, thus barring my exit.

"Major Granby," he cried, in a voice shaking with passion; "I want a plain answer to a plain question, and until I get it you do not leave this room. Do you think I am a murderer?"

I certainly felt that I occupied a very undignified position, for in my desire to begin unravelling this mystery I had unwittingly sought to know more of my friend's inner life than I had any right to. It seems to me that in becoming a detective, it is absolutely necessary to cast off all gentlemanly feeling so that one can press home questions which good taste demands should not be asked. Now, at this eleventh hour, I felt inclined to retreat from the position I had taken up, but so strongly was I seized with the detective fever, that crushing down all objections on the part of my conscience, I answered Dallas, if not directly, at least boldly.

"I think you know more about the affair than you admit."

"Admit," he retorted, scornfully, "I have admitted nothing."

"And will admit nothing, I suppose?"

"I may do so—to the proper authorities."

"In that event you may get into trouble."

"Oh, that's your opinion, is it, major?" he said, derisively, "but you are wrong. I am afraid you will find but little romance in this affair."

"A beautiful woman with two lovers, both at the theatre on the night of her death. It seems to me, Dallas, that there is a good deal of romance there."

"Oh! so you suspect Tressinger also," said Dallas, returning to his seat, and flinging himself down with a frown on his mobile face.

"I dont suspect Tressinger and I don't suspect you," I retorted, irritably, "if you will give me leave to speak plainly, I will tell you what I think."

"Very well! Speak as plainly as you will."

He filled himself a glass of soda and leaned back in his chair, while I sat down on the sofa and began to talk freely.

"Lawrence! have you ever had detective fever?"

"No!"

"Then I hope you never will have it, for it makes one feel the meanest man out."

"Oh! and you have detective fever?"

"Very badly! That is why I came to see you this morning."

"But what have I to do with your disease?"

"Simply this. Mazzucata is dead—murdered by an unknown person, and I wish, for the sake of gratifying my own curiosity, to find out the name of that person."

"You will never find out," replied Lawrence, gloomily. "How can you trace the owner of a bouquet, thrown from the centre of a crowded theatre?"

"Perhaps not in that way; but you know Mazzucata's early life, and can perhaps tell me of some one who wished her death."

"Beyond myself I know of no one who wished her death."

"You don't mean to admit that you killed her!" I cried, in a horrified tone.

"No, my friend. I'm too fond of my own skin to admit such a thing. It is true that I said I wished her death, but that was merely an expression of rage from a jealous man."

"Then who do you think killed her?"

Dallas turned his face away.

"I don't know," he said at length, in a husky voice.

"But you suspect," I persisted, feeling sure he was concealing something from me.

"No! No!"

"Yes, you do, Dallas. Tell me her name."

"Her name!" he cried, fiercely. "What right have you to think a woman is guilty of the crime?"

"Well, from what you said——"

"I said nothing, and I say nothing. Major Granby, if you are a wise man, you will leave this affair alone. Mazzucata is dead—I am sorry she is dead in one way, because I loved her. I am glad she is dead in another way because she deceived me. What my suspicions are I decline to say, but merely tell you that you will never find the person who threw the bouquet."

"I'm not so sure of that," I retorted, now growing suspicious; "at all events I will try."

"As you please. Try, and fail."

"I will not fail—if you will help me."

"I won't help you," retorted Dallas, harshly, rising to his feet. "I will not lift a finger to avenge the death of a woman who deserved to die."

I arose to my feet and walked slowly towards the door.

"Where are you going, major?" asked Dallas, coolly.

"I am going to see Gilbert Tressinger, and find out from him what you refuse to tell me."

"He can tell you nothing."

"You are wrong. He will tell me what [illegible] you and [illegible] woman in Italy."

Dallas grew pale. As I looked at him steadily I seemed to see a guilty look on his face, but this was probably only my fancy, and I therefore opened the door to depart when he called me back.

"Major Granby!"

"Yes!"

"You are going to see Gilbert Tressinger?"

"I am."

"To ask about my former acquaintance with Mazzucata?"

"Precisely!"

"Well, if you want to learn more than you think, ask him about that flower."

"What flower?"

"The Black Carnation."

"What do you mean?"

Dallas came swiftly across the room and pushed me gently outside the door with a mocking laugh.

"Ask him about the Black Carnation," he said, sneeringly. "Good day, Major Granby."

MAJOR GRANBY'S THEORY.

I firmly believe that Lawrence Dallas murdered the singer Marietta Mazzucata, and my reasons for such belief are as follows:

Last night he said that if he discovered she loved another man he would kill her.

Last night he discovered she was in love with Gilbert Tressinger, and doubtless thereupon determined to kill her.

Mazzucata was killed by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge concealed in a bouquet of white flowers, with one dark one in the centre.

Dallas threw Mazzucata a bouquet of white flowers with a dark one in the centre, and immediately after it was thrown the explosion occurred.

To-day Dallas says he is glad she is dead, and refuses to tell me anything about his past connection with this singer.

CHAPTER III.

So far as I could see, up to the present I had made but little progress in my efforts to unravel the opera house crime, and in my interview with Dallas had gained no definite information. Certainly, those doubts of his criminality which I had entertained before my visit were more or less confirmed, as his whole attitude seemed to favor the idea of his guilt. If he were innocent he certainly acted in a way likely to cause suspicion, yet, on the other hand, if he were guilty, as I began to believe, he was crafty enough not to commit himself in any way. As he very truly observed, it was an impossibility to trace the owner of the bouquet, and until such a result was achieved, there was no chance of Mazzucata's assassin being brought to justice.

Without doubt, judging from his conversation and demeanor, he might have thrown the bouquet which contained the explosive, and I myself saw him throw Mazzucata some flowers, but, as I said before, I am not prepared to say whether it was Dallas' bouquet she picked up, and so brought destruction on herself. Dallas denied his guilt, and taking everything into consideration, there was no chance of proving anything against him so, having thus failed in one interview, I [illegible] time in seeking another with Tressinger, in the hope that I would be more successful in finding a clue.

At this moment I recollected that I had already a clue, for the mention by Dallas of "A Black Carnation," suggested a starting point, from whence one could hope to advance with a considerable degree of certainty. For myself, I was puzzled to know what was meant by a Black Carnation, as I had never heard of such a flower; and unless it were the password of some secret society, I was completely bewildered as to what it could be. As to the term "secret society," I argued it out in this way:

Mazzucata was destroyed by an infernal machine on a small scale, hidden in a bouquet of innocent looking flowers. Such a mode of death suggests Nihilism, Anarchism, Communism, and these three words separately and collectively at once suggest a secret society. Now what was more likely than that Mazzucata was mixed up in some way with conspirators, and belonged to a secret society entitled The Black Carnation. As is usual with such leagues, the members are bound to secrecy by oath, the breaking of which entails death. Mazzucata had cried out in alarm the moment before her death, and in the light of the above argument I could now understand her cry, for she had seen in the centre of the bouquet a Black Carnation, which was to her the symbol of a violent end.

"Yes," said I, exultingly, on coming to this conclusion, "there is no doubt now in my mind that this is the true explanation of the mystery. Dallas cannot be guilty of her death, nor was the cause of such death a love affair. Mazzucata, doubtless, belonged to a secret society whose sign of death was a Black Carnation, and having betrayed the secrets of such a society was condemned to die. The black flower—an artificial flower, I suppose, since no natural flower is black—was placed in the bouquet to warn her she [illegible] her cry of horror, and before she could throw away the dangerous bouquet the explosion took place which killed her. Yes, I am right this time—she was a Nihilist and suffered the death of a traitor."

I could see all this plainly enough, but still it did not solve the riddle as to who threw the flowers. Dallas knew about the Black Carnation, so perhaps he also was a member of the society and had been appointed by the association to carry out the fatal order. Then again, he denied that he had killed Mazzucata and had referred me to Tressinger for information regarding the Black Carnation. Could it be possible that Gilbert had killed her? Was he also a member of this Nihilistic club? Had the carrying out of the death sentence devolved on him? Impossible, for he loved this woman; and no orders, no oaths would have led him to commit such a crime. Love that laughs at locksmiths would also laugh at Nihilism, and had it come to Gilbert's knowledge that Mazzucata had been condemned to death, he would have at once warned her to fly, and not been base enough to carry out the vile commands of a parcel of villains.

All these arguments were truly admirable, but as yet they had no very solid basis of fact. The Nihilistic idea might be true and it might not. All I knew was that Dallas had told me to question Tressinger about a Black Carnation, and as this at least was a starting point, I determined to call on Gilbert at once and demand an explanation of this mysterious flower.

In addition to the title and the income, Gilbert possessed a very pleasant little house in Curzon street, admirably fitted up in a bachelor fashion. The late Sir Ralph having been a misogynist, had remained single all his life, and being extremely well off had made himself very comfortable in a selfish male fashion. Indeed, I often envied him that perfect establishment in Curzon street, which would have suited me excellently, for I have the tastes of a duke and the income, if not of a pauper, at least of a city clerk. It is true I have my half pay, and this, in conjunction with a few thousands invested in consols, is all I have to live on. Fortunately, however, I know a great many people and dine out nearly every night, while on other nights I enjoy myself at the O. F. club, which possesses an excellent cook.

The O. F. Club to us who frequent it—the Old Friends' Club to the world, and the Old Fogies' Club to graceless young men—is situated in St. James' street, and is very select. No one under forty years of age is admitted, and we prefer bachelors to married men, so that our club consists of men of experience, you can guess that everything is conducted in the most admirable manner. We are all good judges of wine, of dinners, and of cigars, so that when we insist upon the cellar and the cuisine being perfect, as it is—if it were not, the Old Friends would dissolve, as a desire for good living holds us together. Sometimes a member will introduce a young man into the sacred dining-room of the Old Friends as a treat, but modern youths do not appreciate the triumphs of our Vatel as they should do, and we generally discourage these introductions. I myself on one occasion took Gilbert Tressinger to dine there, and, in contrast to the rest of his compeers, he appreciated our menu so much, and complimented us so highly that he was invited again, and became quite a favorite with our members. In fact, we were very indulgent to him, and were always glad to see his merry face in our smoking room, therefore, when I called in at the Old Friends' on my way to Curzon street, I was not at all astonished to find Gilbert ensconced in a large armchair in the writing-room.

The Barrel Coat.

It is first cousin to the barrel dress.

And it is just about as attractive as the frock.

It is not inexpensive—one model cost considerably over $100.

It has a wide braided collar and a wide belt—this latter, plain.

The skirt of the coat is the part which resembles the barrel—it narrows a bit at the waist, widens out below the hips, and then slopes in at the hem.

And [illegible] deserves its name—you'll see the resemblance at once.

OPEN LETTER TO THE WOMEN OF CANADA FROM LADY GWENDOLEN GUINNESS

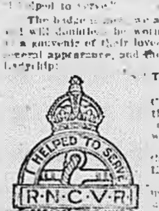
Captain the Hon. Rupert Guinness, A.D.C., C.B., C.M.G., R.N.V.R., Senior Officer of the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, and his wife, Lady Gwendolen Guinness sailed a few weeks ago for England after having spoken in almost every town of any size in Canada from Sydney and Halifax on the Atlantic to Vancouver and Victoria on the Pacific.

Their aim was to organize Committees to secure recruits for the Overseas Division of the Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve, and the work which they launched and which was unreservedly helped along by the Hon. Mr. Hazen for the Canadian Government, has already had splendid results, and hundreds of good recruits have joined the Navy under the auspices of the R. N. C. V. R.

Before leaving, The Lady Gwendolen made arrangements to have a specially designed souvenir pendant distributed through the various recruiting centres to the Mothers, or Wives or Sweethearts whose influence had helped to secure recruits.

This pendant is a very pretty one of silver-gilt and bears the motto "I helped to serve."

The badge is now, we are informed, being distributed by the Committees, and will doubtless be worn by many women as a badge of honor, as well as a souvenir of their loved ones. The illustration gives some idea of its general appearance, and the following is the open letter written by her Ladyship:



The Pendant Offered by Lady Gwendolen Guinness.

To the Women of Canada:

In a journey throughout the Provinces of Canada, from Atlantic to Pacific, I have had the opportunity of personally witnessing the splendid spirit and untiring work of patriotic women everywhere in the Dominion.

I am convinced that here, as in Great Britain, the debt which is owed by the Women of the Empire to our Navy is not forgotten.

The iron hand of Naval Dominion alone shields us from the ruthlessness of an enemy who has not scrupled to make war on the helpless and defenceless. The power of the Navy protects our loved ones on their journey to the battlefields, and preserves our homes in safety and prosperity. Recognizing this debt I am sure that every Canadian woman will do her utmost to secure that support for Naval defence which has been asked for from Canada.

I am asking every woman who obtains a recruit for the Overseas Division of the Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve to accept a small silver badge, as a souvenir of her effort and sacrifice towards upholding the Cause of humanity and Civilization and bringing the struggle in which we are all engaged to a speedy and a triumphant issue.

(Signed) GWENDOLEN GUINNESS.

The new menace of unreserved Hun piracy adds further interest to the campaign for Naval Recruits and enforces the necessity of increasing naval effort and it is hoped that a still more generous response will be given to the Naval Recruiting Committees Call.

In the meantime, we feel we voice the feelings of many of our readers in extending our thanks to the Lady Gwendolen for the happy thought her gift embodies and to Captain Guinness and herself for their tireless exertions on behalf of the Cause.

Spring Suggestions.

New sports suits of silk and wool jersey combined—the colors are charming.

White satin collars with points in the back. Or you may have them square or round.

Lustrous corduroy skirts in the soft-pretty sand color—suggestive of the coatless times coming.

Smart new shoes of Russian calfskin, in tan, with white buckskin tops, laced, of course, and finished with moderately high heels.

New sports hats, in large and becoming shapes, in vivid orange color—but only for the brunette.

The Egg Boycott.

Let the subject not be broached;
I refuse to eat them poached.

'Tis in vain the hen has toiled,
I decline to eat them boiled.

Any weakening I spurn;
From an omelet I turn.

Till the prices downward slide
I shall scorn to eat them fried.

Till they grow more circumspect
Any scramble I reject.

Though I take my stand alone
I shall not receive them thrown.

But it might be—well ahem!
I perhaps may weasel them.

If they fail—your money back for the asking. Be sure you get the yellow box, and insist on being supplied with only Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut, 25c at all dealers.

Forty Sandwiches.

No, not for forty thieves.

At any rate, this is the way of it.

Open a can (15 cents) of tuna fish.

Wash and chop three or four stalks of celery.

When ready to mix there should be equal parts.

Many like a chopped green pepper added to this.

Mix all this with mayonnaise dressing and spread lightly on thin sandwiches.

They are delicious, much like chicken sandwiches.

INCONSISTENT.

Miss J. MacKay, Port Elgin, is a visitor at Mr. J. H. MacKay's.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Thos. Robinson took place to Tiverton cemetery on Saturday afternoon. Deceased, although not strong, was in her usual health, but was suddenly stricken with pneumonia, and in spite of medical attention, she passed away on Thursday night. Great sympathy is felt for the sorrowing husband and family, bereft of a mother's care.

Communion services were held in the Presbyterian church, on Sunday.

Quite a number from here were in attendance at the Agricultural Society dance held in Tiverton last Friday evening.

Some men who make their abode in the neighboring district to the South, should read about the $[illegible] fines for using too much joy water. Nuff sed.

Death claimed another of the older men last Wednesday, when Mr. Wm. Inkster passed away in his [illegible] year. Deceased has been in failing health for some time. The funeral took place to [illegible] cemetery on Friday afternoon. Services were conducted at both house and grave, by Rev. McNabb.

Quite a number of the children here are laid up with whooping cough.

Mr. Wm. Sumpton's two brothers from the west, spent a couple of days with him last week.

A happy time was spent at Mr. Allan MacKay's when his eldest son Pte. John A. McKay was presented with a wrist watch, signet ring, and a fountain pen. He enlisted from [illegible], Man., with the [illegible] battery, Winnipeg. There was a good program of speeches and songs, those taking part being, Mrs. A. Bruce, Mrs. R. Struthers, Miss M. Drummond, Mrs. S. George, Mr. Angus MacKay, Mrs. R. Robinson, Mrs. J. West, Mrs. G. K. Potter, Margaret Brown, Minnie Schell, Peter Matheson, Alexander Brown. During the evening Pte. MacKay was the recipient of the watch, ring, and pen, and a fine address read by Mr. R. McKinnon, also presented the watch, Sam George the fountain pen, and Miss Ella Brown the ring, on behalf of the gathering. Pte MacKay made a brief reply offering his sincere thanks to the home folks. Lunch was served and a dance followed. The address was signed by Geo K. Potter, John West, Robert Struthers, Dan Brown.

Mr. Travis and Mrs. John E. Jones of Granum, Alberta, return on Monday to the west. They have had a fine visit to the old home friends.

Hockey Notes

Southampton Juniors played at Port Elgin on Monday night and were defeated by a score of 11-2. The two teams were tie in games and this was played to break the tie. The game was fast and clean, and proved to be very exciting.

The home boys took the lead at the first of the game and by good combination and many fast rushes steadily piled up the score. Ted Scammel and Christian played well on defence, stopping many rushes, and feeding the forward line, Christian especially showed his good points by making some brilliant rushes in which he nearly always succeeded in registering a goal.

Harmon, Thomas, Miller and McCullouch played well on the forward line, keeping up good combination and scoring several goals. Waskel was a star in stopping shots, as usual.

For Southampton Matheson and Wilson were the stars, each scoring one of the two goals. The team worked hard and the boys took their defeat in good spirits. M. Haug refereed.

The teams were Port—Waskel, Christian, Scammel, Miller, McCullouch, Harmon, Thomas. Southampton—Hockely, Matheson, Sparling, Schuler, Wilson, Baker, Grasser.

A Vegetable Garden for Every Home

IN this year of supreme effort Britain and her armies must have ample supplies of food, and Canada is the great source upon which they rely. Everyone with a few square feet of ground can contribute to victory by growing vegetables.

Four Patriotic Reasons for Growing Vegetables

1. It saves money that you would otherwise spend for vegetables.
2. It helps to lower the "High cost of living."
3. It helps to enlarge the urgently needed surplus of produce for export.
4. Growing your own vegetables saves labor of others whose effort is needed for other vital war work.

The Department of Agriculture will help you

The Ontario Department of Agriculture appeals to Horticultural Societies to devote at least one evening meeting to the subject of vegetable growing: manufacturers, labor unions, lodges, school boards, etc., are invited to actively encourage home gardening. Let the slogan for 1917 be, "A vegetable garden for every home."

Organizations are requested to arrange for instructive talks by practical gardeners on the subject of vegetable growing. In cases where it is impossible to secure suitable local speakers, the Department of Agriculture will, on request, send a suitable man.

The demand for speakers will be great. The number of available experts being limited, the Department urgently requests that arrangements for meetings be made at once; if local speakers cannot be secured, send applications promptly.

The Department suggests the formation of local organizations to stimulate the work by offering prizes for best vegetable gardens. It is prepared to assist in any possible way any organization that may be conducting a campaign for vegetable production on vacant lots. It will do so by sending speakers, or by supplying expert advice in the field.

To any one interested, the Department of Agriculture will send literature giving instructions about implements necessary and methods of preparing the ground and cultivating the crop. A plan of a vegetable garden indicating suitable crops to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free of charge to any address.

Write for Poultry Bulletin

Hens are inexpensive to keep, and you will be highly repaid in fresh eggs. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens.

Councillor Begg Resigns

Owing to the fact that Mr. R. S. Begg has sold out his business and contemplates taking up farming in the west, he tendered his resignation as a councillor on Friday night and it was accepted by the council with regret.

Councillor Begg has served the town faithfully and well for several years and in his contemplated removal Port Elgin loses a good citizen. It is to be hoped, however, that after he takes a look around that he will find it to advantage to remain in this locality.

Mr. Begg has always allied himself with the best interests of the town, and he has shown his sincerity by giving of his time and means to aid in every good cause.

Councillor Begg's resignation means that the regular form of an election will have to be gone through, that is, the clerk will set the day for nomination, and if there be more than one standing for the vacancy an election must be held.

FORBES AMOS

Makes Supreme Sacrifice

A former Port Elgin young man, son of Mrs. S. G. Kinsey, who now resides in Chatham. Forbes is well-known here and remembered by many of the young people of school days. He was 17 when he left Port Elgin in 1910. A few years ago he took up land at Kincourth, Sask. When the war broke out, the call was clear to him and he came back to Chatham and enlisted there.

Forbes was a crack rifle shot and served as a sniper for same time, when he was slightly wounded, later tranferred to the 4th C. M. R. and while fighting at the Somme in October last received his fatal wounds. His grave is in sunny France in the cemetery at Rouen. He was 24 years of age.

The Buyer's Guide will advertise my wares,
Will free me from many trials and cares,
By sending people flocking to my store.
Resulting in such splendid sales galore,
That fortunes huge will welcome my gray hairs."

The Buyer's Guide will give me such a lead
In advertising what and how to read,
The Port will crowd the Library
So eager each and all will be
To cram their heads with knowledge, See?

The Buyer's Guide is surely splendid, too,
In advertising which and what and who,
Be he a bishop, clod or clown,
A visitor to your wee town
Is sure some welcome to receive from you.

Try advertising in the Buyer's Guide
Where we always like to look,
Just before we decide
Which store is the best to take our pocket book.

Try advertising in the Buyer's Guide
For the high cost living
We always look for bargain-giving,
So if the store keepers are wise,
They will use the Buyer's Guide to advertise.

If you would advertise in the Buyer's Guide,
In a limousine soon you would ride;
In the business world you'd be sure to rise,
Prosperous you'd be till your demise,
And peace with you, aye, will sure abide.

Do look up the Buyers' Guide
Said the young and anxious bride,
For I to the shops must go
And The Times will let me know,
Of bargains fair, our stores provide.

If you the Buyer's Guide will try,
Customers to your store will fly;
Then you'll wear a smile
On you're face all the while,
And that will induce them to buy.

Mrs. Adam Esplen Dead

About 6 o'clock on Wednesday evening, while reclining in her chair, Mrs. Adam Esplen passed peacefully into eternal rest. She had been ailing many years from Bright's disease and was practically an invalid for the past nine years, being tenderly waited on and cared for by her sister, Mary.

Mrs. Esplen's maiden name was Annie Geddes. She was born in 1844 in Perth Parish, Ayrshire, Scotland, and came to Canada in 1860 with her parents and the family, when a girl between 15 and 16, to the Township of Arran. About six years afterwards she was married to Adam Esplen, and took up their home on the old Owen Sound road near Burgoyne, where she lived until about nine years ago, when she moved to Port Elgin where she has resided since.

Her husband predeceased her over eleven years. She was of a happy and cheerful disposition, kind and hospitable and the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Esplen was open house to all comers for years. She was passionately fond of flowers as the homestead on the old Owen Sound road, gave evidence to passers-by. She was a life-long member of the Presbyterian church, and an unitiring worker with her late husband, who was an elder in the Burgoyne Presbyterian church for years.

There were three children, one daughter and two sons. Mary died in 1873. A. G. Esplen, storekeeper in Arkwright, and Adam J., on the homestead. Also three adopted children to whom she stood in the place of a loving mother, Mrs. A. Legge, of North Dakota, Mrs. A. Beatty of Toronto; and Samuel at Nelson, B. C.; also two grandchildren. There are also five brothers and a sister to mourn her loss.

The funeral on Friday was very largely attended, many persons from town and country being present to pay a last tribute to a good woman, whose Christian character and kindness will be long remembered.

Referring to the death of Mrs. Peacock, reported in last issue, The Advocate says: "Seldom has it been our duty to record so sad a cutting off of human life as in the case of the death of Mrs. Thos. Peacock (nee Miss Ida Grant), of Con. 14, Elderslie, who passed away Saturday last, just nine days after giving birth to twin sons. The deceased was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Grant, of 14th Elderslie, and was in her 31st year. She was born on the farm home, where she played as a child, developed into beautiful womanhood, and in January of last year was married and went out to help establish a home of her own. In the life of the community Mrs. Peacock has taken an active and useful part in social and church circles. Singularly beautiful in her home life, and possessing rare qualities which made every outside associate a friend, her sad death comes with crushing force to the young husband, the parents and and brothers, also to a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

Arrangements For Afternoon of Prayer

On Monday the following gentlemen met in the Library to make final arrangements for the afternoon of prayer: Rev. Messrs Mann, Scanlan, Glaebler, Buckborrough, Hallman, Brubacher, Messrs J. B. Muir, Arch Bell, C. Riebel, G. Falconer, H. H. Stevens, E. R. Sayles.

Rev. Mr. Mann presided, as Reeve Christie had not returned from Toronto. It was decided to hold Thursday afternoon March 15th from 4 to 6 o'clock as the time, and the service will be held in the Presbyterian church. Should there be more people than to fill the church, the town hall will be used. A committee of laymen will look after the heating, seating and ushering at the town hall, and the program committee will divide the speakers.

Reeve Gilbert Christie will be the chairman at the church while Clerk Elliott will be vice chairman at the town hall.

Township school trustees are requested to co-operate by closing schools and giving children an opportunity to accompany their parents.

Stevens Hepner employees will have the privilege of attending, while business in the town generally will be suspended.

It was the idea of the meeting to endeavor to have all work set aside for the prayer service.

Various committees were appointed to look after the details for the day.

An offering will be taken, for Red Cross work.

A suitable musical program is being arranged for both the church and town hall.

The laymen nominated by the ministers to be on the general committee were:—Mennonite, A. B. Reinhart; St. Andrew's, J. B. Muir, Alex Bell; North Bruce, N. McGillivray; Baptist, J. J. George; Evangelical, H. Ebert, Presbyterian, G. Falconer; U. B., C. Reibel; Methodist, R. H. Fenton; general secretary, E. R. Sayles. Mr. H. H. Stevens was appointed to have charge of the musical part of the services.

FLORAL ARISTOCRATS.

Orchids Are Not Parasites, and It is Difficult to Raise Them.

Aristocrats of the flower kingdom—and probably the least understood. You hear them called parasites, which is only one of the common mistakes made about the orchid. You see a hundred different shapes and a dozen different colors grouped together, each shape perhaps a distinct family and each with a separate name.

In the first place, orchids are not parasites. A parasitical plant is one which gets nourishment from another plant. Certain orchids live on trees, but they get their food and drink from the air by means of aerial roots. We call them epiphytes. Other orchids get their nourishment directly from the ground. They're called terrestrial orchids.

People don't understand, either, why orchids cost so much. They fail to see why a tiny plant is sold for, say, $1,000. If they realized that rare orchids may have cost a long trip into a tropical jungle to obtain and that it takes from eight to ten years to raise a plant from the seed, with patient care and treatment, they could see why these flowers remain in the aristocratic class.

Only the orchid grower can understand all the details of his art, but the flower lover can easily learn to distinguish the various types.

Progress.

(Chicago Tribune).

Because we travel in automobiles and aeroplanes, because we build skyscrapers and enjoy the movies, because the whole machinery of our physical life has been complicated, accelerated, and upholstered in luxury, we put this down as progress and charge little or nothing off against it.

We can be sure that we have paid roundly for this, and one of the largest items is registered in our mental habits. An acute observer of American life, long a resident of this country, has said that the most serious of our faults is our refusal to submit to persistent mental effort. We are mentally lazy, in short.

The charge is true and undoubtedly we can find its explanation in the rapidity of our external life and our inevitable preoccupation with it. We substitute for the hard and persistent effort mere surface apprehension and easy, though shallow, generalization.

We pride ourselves on our knowledge—that is, our information—but we do not sift this industriously and patiently. We know thousands of facts our forbears did not dream of, and we do not stop to think that many if not most of them are pragmatically valueless. The men of former times had less to think about and thought more of what they had to think about. They had to hold their facts longer and came nearer to a mastery of them.

The newspaper is responsible for this in large degree. It has widened men's horizon and increased men's stock of information. In so doing it has performed a service of value, but the service has been paid for. Our command over life, which is the test of real knowledge, is not greater in proportion to our increased informedness. We are tempted to move rapidly with a swiftly running current of reported events which we do not take the time and effort necessary to relate to one another and interpret.

Reading, which maketh a full man, if it is orderly, purposive and well digested, may become a mere anodyne or a pastime. We read more extensively than our fathers and probably think less of what we read. The short story displaces the three decker novel, the movie the five act drama, the newspaper the essay and debate.

The Germans have a word which we may translate "longsittingness." It is a significant word expressive of the solid, determined, untiring digging upon which alone a solid structure of real culture, of lasting achievement, can be built. There is nothing more needed in American life.

Why People Feel Depressed In the Cold Weather

Why is tiredness and languor so prevalent just now? A physician explained that the cold of winter drives blood from the surface of the body to the liver. Nominally one-fourth of the whole blood supply is in the liver, and when more blood is accumulated in that organ everything goes wrong.

No better remedy exists than Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are composed of such vegetable extracts as Mandrake and Butternut, and possess wonderful liver stimulating powers. It's a marvel the way Hamilton's Pills clear the blood of the poisonous humors. They put new life into worn out bodies, build up the appetite, bring back a reserve of nerve energy, tide folks over the cold days of winter and the depressing days of spring. For your health and body comfort get a 25c. box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills today.

Universal Service and Four Men.

(St. Louis Republic.)

Universal service, according to a common sense plan, would not mean the putting of a rifle upon the shoulder of every boy. Far from it. It would simply mean that every boy, on reaching a certain age, would be fitted into the scheme of his country's defence. If the nation needed him it would know where to find him, what he was good for, and how to use him.

Let us take, for instance, four men of 24 years each, who have been fitted into this scheme. The first is a laborer of 160 pounds weight; sound and strong. He has been given, during selected periods between the ages of 17 and 21, the training of an infantry man. He is called to the colors in the hour of need and a rifle is put into his hand. He is a trained soldier, available for immediate service. The second man drives a motor truck. He is not put into the line with a rifle, but is attached to the ambulance corps or quartermaster's department as a part of the army's transportation system. Both of these men are in perfect health and condition.

But the third man has a blemish—a stiff knee. He could not march three miles a day. He is a machinist—the expert operator of a turret-lathe. He is as necessary and valuable a part of the military machine as the soldier or the motor truck driver, but his place of service is in the munition shop instead of in the field. The fourth man is slight and delicate; he is under weight and lacks in chest expansion; he would not last sixty days in a strenuous campaign. But he is a skilled accountant and will be invaluable as the army's representative in the accounting department of a factory which has been taken over as a munition plant, and to this service he is assigned.

Universal service, rationally organized, would not attempt to put every man into the fighting line; such action would insure—not preparedness, but unpreparedness; it would involve a topheavy fighting force on the one side and a depleted sustaining force on the other. Practically carried out, universal service would so organize the manhood of a nation that, in the event of war, every citizen would be placed, with the minimum of delay and friction, in the position where he would be of the greatest value to his country.

Instead of wasting the energies of the nation's manhood upon useless and barbarous tasks, a rational scheme of universal service would make forever impossible just such wasting of energy as has been witnessed on the Mexican border during the last few months. And it would have a most powerful influence upon the preparedness of the nation for the conquests of peace. How many boys do you know who have lost years by "drifting" before they found out the thing to which they were best adapted? What kind of effect upon the citizen would it have if the Government looked over every boy at the age of 17 and saw to it that he received, in school or shop or mine or railroad yard or plowed field or counting room or laboratory, the training best calculated to enable him to do the thing which would help his country most in the hour of its need? Can anything be thought of which would be a better preparation for the citizenship of peace than this?

Antiquity of Passports.

Passports are a very ancient institution. Some of the old monkish chroniclers mention as an achievement on the part of King Canute that he obtained free passes for his subjects through various continental countries on their pilgrimages to the shrines of the apostles Peter and Paul at Rome. Each pilgrim was furnished with a document in the nature of a passport called "Tructuria de Itinere Pergenta." Hall in his "Chronicle" makes reference to a system of passports in the time of Edward IV., and the enforcement of this system is known to have been very strict in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I.—London Mail.

True Blue.

The expression "true blue" which we hear so often; has not even an English parentage, but is said to have been a Spanish saying which meant that the blood that filled the veins of the aristocracy of Spain was blue in color, while that of the inferior mortals was more or less black, and the proverb that "true blue will never stain" instead of meaning, as is generally supposed, that "a noble heart will never disgrace itself," actually refers to the "blue aprons" worn by butchers on account of their not showing blood stains—a far jump this from the blue blood of the haughty Spanish aristocracy to the humble apron of a butcher's boy.—London Express.

TEETHING TIME A TIME OF WORRY

When baby is teething is a time of worry to most mothers. Baby's little gums become swollen and tender; he becomes cross; does not sleep well; is greatly troubled with constipation; colic or diarrhoea and sometimes even convulsions seize him. During this period nothing can equal the use of Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels and stomach, and make the teething so easy that the mother scarcely realizes baby is getting his teeth. Concerning the Tablets, Mrs. Arthur Archibald, New Town, N. S., writes: "I used Baby's Own Tablets when baby was getting his teeth and I found them an excellent medicine." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Minard's Liniment Used by Physicians

Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

We may not share his views in many ways,
Or claim connection with his race or creed,
And party's call receives but languid heed
In battle times. But Laurier earns this phrase
That tongues of gall can never his fame abase;
Or sully the clean grandeur of his life;
The future crowns him o'er the transient strife;
His honored years wear garlands of bright days.

Traducers prate as winds of summer blow,
A little dust that eddies swiftly past,
While sunlit vistas keep their undimmed glow.
A great man's genius is its own sure charm,
Unwounded by the spite-shot bolts of harm;
His light shines clear while fades destruction's blast.

Why Cats Purr and Lions Roar.

One of the most interesting discoveries made lately is that of Sir Richard Owen that the lion roars, instead of purring, simply because the hyoid bone in his throat is loose.

In the cat this bone is stationary, so that the cat purrs and cannot roar, but in the lion and tiger the hyoid is loose, and therefore even when calling to their mates the larger members of the cat family roar. The roar of the jaguar and leopard are like "hoarse, barking coughs, an interval of about one second separating the expiratory efforts," says this observer. They may be easily reproduced or imitated by sawing a piece of thin board with a coarse toothed saw. The cheetah, however, calls with a decided mew, very much like that of the cat.

R. I. Pocock, superintendent of the London Zoo, explains that those felidae or cat family that have an elastic ligament between the ceratohyal and the upper elements of the suspensorium (lion tiger, leopard, jaguar) roar, but never purr; while all the other species of the felidae, with normally constricted hyoids, purr, but never roar, and among these are the cheetah and puma.

PANCAKES.

Nine Good Recipes for All the Year Round Breakfasts.

Winter or spring, summer or fall, pancakes hot from the griddle are a welcome and relishing addition to the morning repast.

Times readers will find in the following recipes a delicious variety from which to choose:

Bread Pancakes—Take one pint of sour milk or buttermilk. At night put into this enough dry bread to take up the milk. In the morning mash the bread with a fork, add one egg, well beaten, salt to taste, one-third teaspoonful baking soda, mix in flour enough for a medium stiff batter. Serve with sugar and cream.

Mincemeat Pancakes—These delicious cakes are made the same as the ordinary wheat cakes. Fry and spread with hot mincemeat, rolling them in the same manner as French pancakes. Sprinkle with confectioner's sugar and serve immediately.

Cornmeal Pancakes—Mix two teaspoonfuls baking powder with one pint cornmeal, one-half pint flour, and a little salt, and two well-beaten eggs and enough sweet milk to make a batter. Or put one teaspoonful soda in one pint sour cream, add a beaten egg, a little salt, four tablespoonfuls of flour and enough cornmeal to make a soft batter. Fry brown on both sides in hot fat.

Green Corn Pancakes—One can of sweet corn, two well-beaten eggs, three tablespoonfuls milk, one tablespoonful melted butter, salt and pepper to taste, two teaspoonfuls baking powder and flour to make a batter. Serve with butter.

Sour Milk Griddle Cakes—Put into bowl one cupful sour milk, and one cupful sifted flour (one-third of this cup may be entire wheat, fine corn meal or rye meal). Before mixing sift on the flour one teaspoonful each of salt and soda, then add one beaten egg and one tablespoonful of melted butter. Beat well, cook on a hot griddle. Flours and meals vary, so if the first cake is not right, add more flour or moisture as needed.

Almond Pancakes—Cream one tablespoonful of butter with three tablespoonfuls sugar, add two well-beaten eggs, pinch of salt, one-half cupful of cream, stir in one half cupful of flour, ounce of ground almonds. When done sprinkle with powdered sugar and roll and serve.

Hominy Griddle Cakes—To one pint warm boiled hominy, add one pint milk or water, one pint flour. Beat two eggs and stir into the batter with a little salt, fry as any other griddle cake. They are delicious.

Rice Griddle Cakes—Two cupfuls cold boiled rice, one pint flour, one teaspoonful sugar, one-half teaspoonful salt, one and one half teaspoonfuls baking powder, one egg, a little over a cupful of milk, sift together salt, sugar, flour and baking powder, add rice, free from lumps, diluted with beaten egg and milk. Mix into a smooth batter. Have griddle well heated. Bake nice brown, not too thick; serve with maple syrup.

Royal Buckwheat Cakes—This is the most delicious of all the griddle cakes. Two cupfuls pure buckwheat flour, one cupful wheat flour, two tablespoonfuls baking powder, one half teaspoonful salt, all sifted well together. Mix with sweet milk into a thin batter and bake at once on a hot griddle.

Sandy Goulette, Now Strong and Hearty, Tells How he Found Health After the Doctors Had Given Him Up.

Old Fort, Bay, Labradore, Que., March [illegible] (Special.)—"Do I believe in Dodd's Kidney Pills? Well, I telegraphed two hundred miles to get two boxes of them." The speaker was Sandy Goulette, an old settler here. Nor did Mr. Goulette require to be pressed to tell the rest of his story.

"I was swollen out of shape from head to foot. I was so short of breath I could hardly speak. The doctor could do nothing for me. The minister gave me the holy sacrament, and a good priest came and told me I could not live much longer.

"Then I telegraphed for Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took three pills the night they came and I got relief before morning. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me. I am able to do my day's work now as well as I was ten years ago."

Mr. Goulette offers to answer any letters written to him regarding his case. He feels that he owes his health if not his life to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

ANCIENT ARMIES.

Only Ones Approximately in Size Those of To-day.

When King Xerxes of Persia invaded Greece in 480 B.C. he was said by Herodotus to have brought across the Hellespont an army of 5,700,000 men, gathered from all western and much of Central Asia, including the Greek cities on the coast of the Aegean sea. There has been a good deal of skepticism about these figures, says Robert Ellis Thompson in the Irish World, on the ground that such a body would have been found utterly unwieldly, and it was too large for any system of supply of food, and that nobody can be sure that it was counted correctly. And from that time to our own no army of one million or more was ever mustered into fight, unless it were the horde of Huns, who fought the battle of Chalons in A. D. 451, with the Goths and Romans, and left 250,000 of their number dead on the field of conflict.

While fighting still went on in the Middle Ages, within and between the nations into which the Roman Empire was divided in that century, armies may be said to have ceased to exist.

The military forces were composed of feudal tenants of the several kings, who left their peaceful occupations at the call for troops, and went back to them when the war was over. But with the invention of gunpowder a great change came, and standing armies in the services of the kings began to arise, with the result of overthrowing the rude system of popular control of kings and princes, which the feudal system had preserved. But still armies were numbered by the ten or at most the hundred thousand, and millions, disappeared from military arithmetic. Even the wars of the French Revolution did not engage such vast numbers. At Wagram some three hundred thousand were engaged, and Leipzig the Allies alone numbered as many. This was the maximum.

We got back to the millions with the United States Civil War, as more than 1,000,000 soldiers were under arms in the national service when the struggle came to an end. At that moment America was the greatest military country of the world, and the knowledge of this fact lent force to our demands for the evacuation of Mexico by the French, and for the payment of the Alabama claims by the English.

Nearly Every Girl Can Make Herself Pretty and Attractive

SOME WHOLESOME TRUTHS EVERY GIRL SHOULD THINK ABOUT.

Probably you know just such a girl. Perhaps she is sixteen—good to look at, and pretty—quite interesting because she reflects the graces and charm that give promise of happiness to herself and others. But she is not strong. The color in her cheeks, once so rosy, has faded away—her eyes are listless—the buoyancy of spirits and vigor she once possessed are sadly lacking. Parents, friends, this girl needs Ferrozone—needs it that her blood may be renewed—needs it to restore the nerve force that growth, study and the development of her fresh youth have exhausted. This girl will become a queen with Ferrozone—which will restore her color—bring back her old-time energy—give brightness to her eyes and vivacity to her spirits. In Ferrozone every girl finds strength—then she can do things. In Ferrozone there is endurance—that drives away morning tiredness and languor. For the girl or woman that wants to be happy, healthy, winning—who values rosy cheeks, laughing eyes and abundant good spirits, nothing can compare with Ferrozone, 50c per box, or six boxes for $2.50. Get it today from any dealer in medicine, or by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

Quivers Were Really Full.

It seems very doubtful whether even war will stop the falling of the birth rate. The tendency is for it to go down—down—down in nearly all the countries of Europe.

It is in pioneer settlements in new countries that families are generally largest. Out on the prairie life is deadly dull if there aren't plenty of little feet running in and out.

Alice Morse Earle, who writes so delightfully of Colonial days and Colonial ways, has much to say about the large families of the early settlers of New England. In those days large families were eagerly welcomed. Children were regarded as a real blessing—happy the man that had his quiver full of them.

For the Colonial farmer, and especially to the frontiersman, every child is an extra help on the farm. In New England, when land was apportioned out, there was in the early days a portion for every woman and every child in the family, so that if each child was not born with a silver spoon in his mouth, it came into the world in the proud position of a landed proprietor.

Families of twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen were so common that no one considered them remarkable at all. Sir William Phips was one of the twenty-six children, all with the same mother; Green, a well-known Boston printer, was married twice, and had thirty children.

Among the clergy large families were the rule. One widely known had twenty-six children, another twenty, another eighteen and so on.

"Going up on High?"

Better try the low gear first. The human engine must have the right kind of fuel-food. Power to do things comes from food that is rich in muscle-building material, that is easily digested. Shredded Wheat is a high-power food, the kind that fits a man or woman for the day's work—just enough muscle-making material, just enough heat-making material to keep the body in top-notch condition. Shredded Wheat is ready-cooked, ready-to-eat. Two Biscuits with milk make a nourishing meal at a cost of a few cents. Made in Canada.

GERMANS STILL RETREATING, BUT STIFFENING RESISTANCE

More Villages Taken Both Sides Of Ancre---Enemy Abandons Heavy Guns.

French Writer Says British Effort, When Told, Will Astound All.

Paris Special Cable says—The La Liberte correspondent in North France concludes his despatch as follows: "Examination of the German positions showed the enemy's retreat was fairly precipitate. He put out of action several heavy guns which he had not time to remove by nightfall. His front has not yet become fixed. When the British communiques display less reserve the British effort will astound everybody."

Andree Tudesq, the Journal's correspondent of the British front writes: "The final defences of Bapaume have fallen. Without fighting the Germans fell back rather than run the risk of disastrous casualties. The mystery of this simple victory is especially due to the terrifying efficiency of the new gas shells which were tried at Beaumont-Hamel in December and Grandcourt in February. The art of long distance killing has been carried to a wonderful pitch."

London Cable.—Additional progress has been made by the British forces north and south of the Ancre region in France. In the Ancre district the village of Ligny, south-west of Bapaume, has been occupied, and north of the stream the western and northern defences of Puisieux have been taken from the Germans, according to the British official communication issued to-night. The communication says:

"We have made further progress north and south of the Ancre. During the night we captured the village of Le Barque. To-day we have occupied Ligny and established ourselves in the western and northern defences of Puisieux.

"We raided the enemy's positions this morning southward of Lens and destroyed a number of dugouts and machine-gun emplacements and took a few prisoners. Another successful raid was carried out by our troops during the night east of Armentieres on a front of a half mile. Three lines of hostile trenches were entered and considerable damage was done the enemy's defences. We captured 17 prisoners and brought back searchlights and machine-gun.

"Artillery activity has continued on both sides north and south of the Somme."

RETREAT CONTINUES.

Headquarters of the British Army in France, Cable.—The German retreat has not yet come to a stand. To-day, however, the rearguards stiffened their resistance in places. There was an example of hard fighting between Gommecourt and Puisieux. In every case the enemy was forced to continue his retreat. Nightingale Wood, southeast of Gommecourt, was the scene of the heaviest engagement. We now occupy part of it. It was a clever and successful little action, which seems to have deranged the Boche plans, for he is showing signs that this was not the thing he meant. Last night we advanced further into Puisieux, a considerable village. It was defended by scattered detachments, which were soon torn out of their hiding holes. Our patrols pushed on to Ilex wood, at the north-western side of the town, crossed the Gommecourt-Puisieux road, and arrived at Rossignol wood before the Germans expected them, for their searchlights began to play in an agitated way. Puisieux is not much knocked about, the main fighting having been done by snipers and machine guns, there planted in barbed wire.

STRENGTHEN OUTPOSTS.

British Headquarters in France, Cable.—There was sharper resistance all along the line of the German retreat to-day than at any time since the movement began. There is no indication as yet of a fixed purpose by the Germans to make a definite stand, but they are doing everything possible to hold up and interfere with the British advance. To the rear, outposts were immensely strengthened, and this led to stiff fighting with the British forward patrols.

The Germans prepared carefully for their retirement, apart from choosing the moment when thawing was just beginning, bringing with it new depths of clinging mud. Belt after belt of barbed wire marks the German trail. Always great believers in this method of defence, the Germans appear to have outdone all previous efforts in the way of wire barriers in the Somme and Ancre areas.

The British, however, pushed forward to-day all along the eleven mile line stretching from south of Gommecourt to west of Le Transloy. They pushed further into Puisieux-au-Mont southeast of Gommecourt, in which more fires were visible last night. Searchlights were also playing anxiously about.

The present objective of the British is a crest which overlooks the high ground running between Achiet-le-Petit to Bapaume, where the Germans may attempt to hold for a time. Puisieux has not been so completely knocked about as most of the other battle villages, its standing walls offering cover for the defending troops.

Every bit of ground taken reveals further evidence of the thoroughness of the destructive methods adopted by the Germans just prior to retiring. Their carefully built and long occupied dugouts have been converted into a mass of wreckage by explosives and fire.

SAYS WILSON TOOK ORDERS FROM BRITAIN

German Chancellor Talks in Reichstag On Break With the States.

STILL FOR VICTORY

Says Central Powers Will Break "Tyranny of the Seas."

Berlin Cable.——Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg's address to the Reichstag, postponed from last week, was delivered to-day.

After dealing with the problem of domestic food, the Chancellor briefly recalled his last speech in the Reichstag, in which he announced that a proposal had been transmitted by Germany and her allies to their enemies to enter into peace negotiations. He continued:

"Their answer was more rude and more presumptuous than any sensible person in our country or in neutral countries could have imagined."

The Chancellor then turned to the establishment of the barred zones around Britain, France and Italy, and to the answers received from neutrals to the communication made by the Central powers.

He said: "We by no means underestimate the difficulties caused to neutral shipping, and we therefore try to alleviate them as much as possible. For this purpose we made an attempt to supply raw materials, such as coal and iron, needed by them, to neutral States within the boundaries of our sea forces. But we also know that all these difficulties, after all, are caused only by Britain's tyranny of the seas. We will and shall break this enslavement of all non-British trade.

BREAK WITH U. S.

"One step farther than taken by European neutrals has been made—as is known —by the United States of America. President Wilson after receiving our note of January 31 abruptly broke off relations with us. No authentic communication about the reasons which were given for his step reached me. The former United States Ambassador here in Berlin communicated only in spoken words to the State Secretary of the Foreign Office of breaking off relations, and asked for his passports. This form of breaking off relations between great nations living in peace is probably without precedent in history.

"All official documents being lacking, I am forced to rely upon doubtful sources—that is, upon the Reuter official version of the contents of the message sent by President Wilson on February 3 to Congress. In this version the President is reported to have said that our note of January 31 suddenly and without previous indication intentionally withdrew the solemn promise made in the note of May, 1916. To the United States Government, therefore, no choice compatible with dignity and honor was left other than the way which had been announced in her note of April 20, 1916, covering the case if Germany should not want to give up her submarine method. If these arguments are correctly reported by Reuter, then I must decidedly protest against them. For more than a century friendly relations between us and America have been carefully promoted.

"Since the beginning of the war things have changed on the other side of the water. Old principles were overthrown. On August 27, 1913, during the Mexican troubles, President Wilson, in a solemn message to Congress, declared that he intended to follow the usage of international law by a prohibition of the supplying of arms to both Mexican parties at war against each other. One year later, in 1914, these usages apparently were no longer considered good."

NO VITAL QUESTION?

Speaking of relations with the United States, the Chancellor said:

"I would fully understand it, if the United States, as a protector of international law, should have battled for its re-establishment in equal fashion with all belligerents, and if desiring to restore peace to the world had taken measures to enforce the end of the bloodshed. But I cannot possibly consider it a vital question for the American nation to protect international law in a one-sided fashion, only against us. Our enemies and American circles which are unfriendly toward us thought that they could point out an important difference between our course of action and that of the British. Britain, they have satisfied themselves, destroys only material values, which can be replaced, while Germany destroys human lives, which are impossible to replace.

"Well, gentlemen, why did the British not endanger American lives? Only because neutral countries, and especially America, voluntarily submitted to the British orders, and because the British, therefore, could attain their object without employing force. What would have happened if Americans had valued unhampered passengers and commodities traffic with Bremen and Hamburg as much as that with Liverpool and London? If they had done so, then we should have been freed from the painful impression that, according to America, a submission to British power and control is compatible with the essential character of neutrality, but that it is incompatible with this neutral policy to recognize German measures of defence. Gentlemen, let us consider the whole question. The breaking off of relations with us and the attempted mobilization of all neutrals against us do not serve for the protection of the freedom of the seas proclaimed by the United States. These actions will not promote the peace desired by President Wilson. They must, consequently, have encouraged the attempt to starve Germany and to multiply the bloodshed.

"We regret the rupture with a nation which by her history seemed to be predestined surely to work with us, not against us; but since our honest will for peace has encountered only cheering for war on the part of our enemies there is no more 'going backward.' There is only 'going ahead' possible for us."

SUB. ONLY DEFENCE

The Chancellor then insisted that Britain obviously endeavored to declare that the use of the submarine weapon was the greatest crime of history, since, he said, Britain considered herself the ordained ruler of the oceans and the benefactor of humanity. He recalled the opinion expressed on July 19, 1894, by Sir Percy Scott, to whom he referred as one of the greatest British authorities on naval history. Sir Percy, he said, predicted a submarine warfare exactly as it had come about during this war, and declared that no objection to it would be possible on the grounds of law or morality. Sir Percy, the Chancellor added, obviously could not have considered that the present submarine warfare would become the only German defensive measure against the entente allies and the British starvation blockade.

The Chancellor continued:

"Britain did not abandon the isolation of Germany, but, on the contrary, intensified it in the most reckless fashion. Our adversaries were not made to respect the principles of international law, universally recognized before the war, nor made to follow the laws of humanity. The freedom of the seas which America wanted to restore, in co-operation with us during the war, has been still more completely destroyed by our adversary, and America has not hindered this. All this is common knowledge.

"Even at the end of January, Britain issued a new isolation declaration for the North Sea, and in this period since May 4, nine months had passed. Could it then be surprising that on Jan. 31 we considered that the freedom of the seas had not been re-established, and that we drew our conclusions from this? But the case extends beyond that of formal importance. We, who were ready for peace, now by mutual understanding fight for life against an enemy who from the beginning put his heel upon the recognized laws of nations. The British starvation blockade, our peace offer, its rebuke by the Entente, the war aims of our enemies purporting our destruction and the speeches of Lloyd George are known also in America."

WAR VOTE OF $100,000,000

Immediate Response of U. S. Congress to President.

Expected to Back Up Wilson at Once.

Washington Report.——President Wilson to-day took the inevitable step and asked Congress for authority to use the forces of the United States to protect American ships and lives against the German submarine menace—to put the nation in a state of armed neutrality.

The immediate response was the introduction in the House of a bill, approved in advance by the President, empowering him to furnish guns and gunners to American merchantmen and to "employ such other instrumentalities and methods" as may become necessary; and providing for a $100,000,000 bond issue, to be used in his discretion for war insurance to encourage American commerce to brave the submarine peril. The bill may be brought up in the House to-morrow, with special rules for its immediate consideration.

A similar bill will be considered to-morrow by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Every confidence is expressed at the White House that Congress ultimately will act as the President asks, taking into account his efforts of more than two years to preserve peace as sufficient evidence that he does not desire to plunge the country into war.

No steps toward the arming of merchant ships are to be taken until Congress acts. The convoying of merchantmen is not approved by naval authorities as an effective or desirable strategic policy.

Without being specific as to terms President Wilson this afternoon asked Congress for authority to use the army and navy and the necessary money to make them effective. Behind the rights of Americans, the President declared, he was thinking of the rights of humanity, but through it all, he proclaimed to the world a policy of peace, if peace be possible.

"No course of my choosing, or of theirs," said he, "will lead to war. War can come only by the wilful acts and aggressions of others."

18 KILLED IN R'Y COLLISION

Freight Plows Into Penna. Railway Sleeper.

Outside of Altoona, Pa., in the Dark.

Altoona, Pa., Report.—18 persons, seventeen passengers and a negro porter, were killed in a rear-end collision between an express train and a freight on the Pennsylvania Railroad at Mount Union Station, 45 miles east of this city, early to-day. The accident occurred shortly after midnight, and the bodies were so badly mangled that six hours later only nine had been identified. They are: Chester A. Minds, Ramsay, Pa., his wife, two children and a nurse; Charles Levine, New York; Philip B. Polland, New York; J. S. Melley, Brooklyn, and T. N. Bright, the porter.

By checking up the tickets, however, it was established that of the others, three were from Pittsburg, three from Altoona, one from Birmingham, Ill., and two from points in Wisconsin. Minds, who is a coal operator and former member of the football team of the University of Pennsylvania, was taking his family to Utica, N. Y., to attend the funeral of Mrs. Minds' father. All of the dead were occupants of the sleeping car Bellwood.

The passenger train, which left Pittsburg at 7 o'clock last night for New York, and is known as the Mercantile Express, had stopped at Mount Union to discharge passengers, and was testing the airbrakes when the collision occurred. It carried four sleepers, two mail cars and a combination day coach. The freight plowed into it with such force that the rear sleeper, the Bellwood, was completely cut in twain. Two other sleepers were partly telescoped, but, aside from a terrific shaking up, none of their occupants were hurt. All were of steel construction, and were wedged together so tightly that it was several hours before workmen could extricate the bodies of the victims.

A relief train, carrying railroad officials, physicians, and nurses, was rushed to the scene from this city, and W. W. Creighton, general superintendent, left later to conduct an investigation into the accident, the cause of which has not been determined. The relief train was pressed into service, and, together with another train, took the passengers who escaped injury, eastward.

TWO CHILDREN KILLED.

Later.—Information from Pennsylvania Railroad sources shows that twenty persons were killed in the wreck. It has been learned that, in addition to those already accounted for, two small children were killed. As no tickets were required for them, they were overlooked when the passengers were checked up by the train crew.

2 AMERICANS MISSING FROM THE LACONIA

Many Canadians Were On Board the Cunarder When Torpedoed.

SIX VESSELS SUNK

By U-Boats, in Addition to the Big Liner, in War Zone.

TWO AMERICANS MISSING.

London Cable.——According to a Central News despatch from Queenstown, Mrs. Foy and daughter, who were aboard the Laconia, are missing, and are supposed to have been drowned.

It is probable that Mrs. Mary E. Hoy and Miss Elizabeth Hoy, of Chicago, are the passengers referred to. They were in the first cabin.

London Cable.——The Times says The Cunard Line steamship Laconia was torpedoed without warning on Sunday night. She had about 300 on board, practically all of whom were saved. There was a heavy American mail, and it is feared this is lost. We understand the survivors were expected to reach Queenstown late last night. The United States Embassy received an intimation from the Admiralty that there were no American passengers on board the steamship which rescued the Laconia's passengers and crew. They also picked up one boat which contained 14 survivors of another British steamer which was sunk by a submarine while en route. The steamer also has on board survivors of the steamer Falcon, already reported torpedoed.

A Liverpool special to the Times says that officials of the Cunard company are unable to give reassuring news. There is reason to believe that practically all on board save one were saved. The ship carried 295 people including about 80 passengers. Half of the passengers were traveling first class.

THE NEWS IN NEW YORK.

New York Report.——No steerage passengers were on board the ship, and the passengers were mostly English or Canadians, many of the latter being on their way to England to engage in Government service, or returning to duty after leaves of absence at home. The Canadians on board were: Lieut. Russell D. Bradshaw, Edmund Duggan, William Irvine Robinson, Geo. Forster, Thos. E. Parker and Wm. Harnett, of Toronto; Hon. Bawkes, Galt; Arthur Holland, Montreal; H. G. Pope, St. Catharines; Frank Pauling, Vancouver; William Eva, Montreal; Frank Evison, Winnipeg; Gus Dansen, Peachland, B.C.; Fred. G. Holden, Montreal; E. J. Inchbold, Montreal; Mrs. Irene M. Gore, Victoria, B.C.; William Mansen Winnipeg; Robert Marshall, Vancouver; Robert Moore, Montreal; Mrs. J. M. Reid, Vancouver; Mr. and Mrs. W. Rowley, Winnipeg; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Wells, Montreal, and Fred. Sage.

There were also 26 citizens of the United States on board, six of whom were cabin passengers and 3 paid members of the crew, including stokers, coal trimmers, wipers and seamen.

It was positively stated by officials of the line that there were no explosives on board.

In addition to cargo and passengers, the Laconia carried 5,000 bags of United States and Canadian mail, 1,300 sacks of which had been transferred from the American liner St. Louis.

The Laconia, when she left here, was armed with one defence gun, mounted aft. The report that the ship was torpedoed at night and without warning, indicates that no opportunity was given to make use of the defence gun, according to officials of the line.

TORONTO MEN ON LACONIA.

Four residents of Toronto and four others who booked their passage in Toronto were passengers on the ill-fated Cunard liner Laconia, torpedoed off the coast of Ireland on Sunday night. The Torontonians are: Lieut. Russell D. Bradshaw, 3 Schofield Avenue; Lieut. Edmund Duggan, 536 Huron Street; William Irvine Robinson, 74 St. George Street; Geo. A. Forster, 5 Hepbourne Street. Those who booked through the local offices of the Cunard Line are: Thomas E. Parker, Cameron, Ont.; Henry G. Pope, St. Catharines; Frank Pauling, Revelstoke, and William Hartnett.

Lieut. Bradshaw is a member of the Royal Flying Corps and a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Bradshaw. His uncle is Hon. Dr. David Jamieson, Speaker of the Ontario Legislature. Lieut. Bradshaw was returning to the front after one month's leave of absence.

Lieut. Edmund Duggan, also of the Royal Flying Corps, is a son of Mr. Edmund H. Duggan, clerk of the Tenth Division Court. He was wounded in the leg and shoulder some time ago, and had been granted three months' leave.

SIX MORE SHIPS SUNK.

London Cable.——Including the Laconia, a vessel of 18,099 tons, the latest report shows that known tonnage aggregating 24,222 has been sent to the bottom since Sunday night. An official report from Germany says that since the commencement of the war 4,595,500 tons of shipping belonging to Entente and neutral nations has been destroyed or condemned as prizes by the Central powers.

The following ships have been reported sunk: The Algiers, British, steamer, 2,361 tons; Eros, British steamer, 1,342 tons; Kilber, French sailing ship, 277 tons; Maria Adriana, Dutch, sailer, 55 tons; Vigda, Norwegian, steamer, 1,854 tons; Laconia, British, liner, 18,099 tons.

Lloyd's report that the crews of the British steamships Iser and Belgier, the sinking of which has been announced, have been landed.

HUN TREACHERY AIDING WILSON

Opposition to His Appeal for Power is Dwindling

On Knowledge of Plots Against the States.

Washington Report.——A special rule for immediate consideration of the Flood bill to empower the President to arm and protect ships "under United States registry" was favorably reported to-day from the House Rules Committee.

Washington Report.—Spurred by increasing menace from Germany, house leaders today planned to seek action before night on the bill authorizing President Wilson to arm ships and rush it to the Senate, where an agreement exists not to pass any similar measure before to-morrow. Opposition dwindled rapidly as members of Congress learned of the German plot to involve Mexico and Japan in war with the United States, and additional reports came in of the torpedoing of the Laconia and the detention of four American consuls in Germany.

It became known authoritatively to-day that the President endorses the Senate bill, which includes the "other instrumentalities" clause, and carries no insurance prohibition for ammunition vessels. The Administration plan is to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, and try to force the lower body to accept the change.

The State Department last night sent to the Berlin Government a request for immediate release of four American consuls, held there pending receipt of word that German consuls in the United States have been permitted to go to allied ports in South and Central America.

As a result of the increasing gravity of the German situation, the Administration is known to be giving extraordinary attention to preparedness measures, particularly to the question of universal military training, even though passage of a bill providing this seems unlikely at the present session.

ONTARIO RAILWAY BOARD.

Toronto, Report.—An important amendment to the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board act was announced by Attorney-General Lucas introducing a bill in the Legislature yesterday.

The main section gives the board power to enforce its orders by way of direct action itself in imposing fines and penalties. Provision is made for a penalty not exceeding $1,000, where there is default or disobedience regarding an order made by the board, and where this continues each successive day shall be deemed a separate offence.

AUSTRIA WILL BACK GERMANY

London Cable.—The Austrian reply to the American note in regard to the submarine issue will be handed shortly to the United States Ambassador in Vienna, and will probably endorse the position of Germany, according to a Reuter's Amsterdam despatch quoting a Berlin telegram to the 'Weser Zeitung,' of Bremen. The telegram says that the Vienna Government will clearly express the view that there is no turning back for the Central Powers.

PROVINCIAL FORESTER.

Toronto, Report.—Hon. G. Howard Ferguson introduced his bill in the Legislature yesterday to preserve forests from destruction by fire. It provides that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may, upon the recommendation of the Minister, appoint a Provincial Forester for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act and the regulations. One of the leading provisions is the control of fire by permit.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

No Robins yet! Where are the boys of the old days with the splendid eyes, ears, and imaginations, too?

Votes for women, and in time for next election, too. But now that the ladies have them, what will they do with them?

A daily newspaper headline says: "All you need is a spade, some ground, seed potatoes, and the intention." This writer probably works nights and sleeps daytime.

Time was when measures brought up by one party were always opposed by the other. In the temperance issue, and votes for women both parties made it unanimous.

In two years the municipal war tax has brought to the provincial treasury about $4,000,000. One million was given to the Patriotic Fund and $3,362,000 spent on an hospital in England where Canadian soldiers are treated.

• • •

The decline in liquor licenses last year amounted to $500,000 but this was more than made up by the amusement tax. The expense which the license system made necessary should soon be recognized somewhere as a receipt.

Premier Lloyd George has ordered the production of beer in England to be cut down one fourth. Why not go the whole way? Other nations and British possessions, have shown the evil can be put away entirely to good advantage.

Stephen Leacock, professor of political economy at McGill University, says we shall have a world famine before the war ends. Mr. Leacock is usually a writer of very happy sentences, but this latest one is surely gloomy enough.

Owen Sound is interesting the government to establish a convalescent hospital in that place. The suggestion of The Times in last issue that Port Elgin should seek to interest the government in the American property should be followed up.

Some Agricultural Societies are offering good prizes for vegetables raised and shown by children at the annual fair. This is good. We pass the suggestion on to the directors of our North Bruce and Saugeen Agricultural society.

Just as the sun begins to shine on both sides of the fence there are rumors of the lower gasoline prices. But don't be deceived. As soon as the cars are purchased and the wheeling gets good, the price of juice will be raised accordingly.

• • •

The News says the government is committed to a courageous land settlement policy. What it should have said is that the government will confiscate the hard earned cash of the people in old Ontario to make the going good for its railway enterprises in isolated parts in New Ontario.

A leading shoe manufacturer says that shoe prices will drop because England has shut out not much more than a million dollars worth of shoes from Canada. If shoes drop because of the amount sent to England what will happen to canned salmon, which amounts to $5,000,000 excluded from England. Cotton goods are also likely to be cheaper.

Middlesex county has naturally swung into line on the good roads plan, especially since a big trunk road scheme is proposed to run from Montreal to Windsor. And why shouldn't it? There are only a few counties whose legislators cannot see far enough ahead to know that to stay out means to pay the shot for the other fellow, both for building and upkeep. The good roads idea has come to stay.

• • •

The suggestion made by Reeve Christie in January, that an afternoon should be given over to prayer on the part of the people in this district, when our soldiers and sailors and the allies might be presented for Divine favor, has taken hold. An afternoon has been chosen when all business and work generally will be closed, and the service of praise and prayer attended. The people have earnest desires to remember at the throne of grace the millions of brave men and the thousands who sorrow for those fallen in battle. Let the meeting for prayer be much on the hearts of all our men and women for the next few days.

An item for $684 spent for cut flowers for the Lt-Governor's residence was brought to notice in discussing public accounts in the Legislature. The save and serve idea preached by the politician is most amusing.

A week's canvass of 600 unmarried civil service employees at Ottawa by recruiting officers for recruits brought four men willing to enlist, but all were unfit. The civil service at Ottawa contains the names of 1700 unmarried men who are eligible. But, of course, no more should be expected of these men than any other class. No doubt they would accept their obligations of compulsory drafts quite as readily as Canadians in general.

Owen Sound Sun complains that The Port Elgin Times gives a wrong interpretation when it says "that at a meeting of the 1000 League Col. Rorke had called slackers rats." The Sun editor says some other things about "getting the sense of an article" etc. What The Times actually said was: "The Colonel seemed to have lots of names of young men who wouldn't enlist in his battalion, some he characterized as rats." The Sun explained in a later article, the colonel wanted it pointed out that the rats he referred to were those leaving Canada at the time to escape military service. The Sun has had some explaining to do recently because of the extended publicity it gave to that League meeting, but it hasn't helped itself a great deal by misquoting The Times.

In his most momentous speech to the House last week Lloyd George said the main obstacle to inducing farmers to increasing cultivation was lack of labor. In some English counties young farmers have flocked to the colors, and there was no one to stop them. The putting in force of the military service act shows there are 60,000 farm laborers eligible for service, but the authorities have only called up 10,000 to bear arms, counting it better service to produce crops. To a greater extent than most people imagine this same condition has come to Canada. The farms this year in the province of Ontario will only be one-third worked. It is time the Government of Canada put some definite plan into the recruiting methods, leaving men on the farms, and setting forth a plan under which the cultivation of farms can do most for the Empire.

Is It Fair?

The Owen Sound Sun last week rapped in good hard style the practice of holding up, the merchants and business men for all sorts of causes good, bad and indifferent. It says:

The merchants along the main street are subjected to almost a continuous bombardment by people begging for one cause or another. Several new causes have been pointedly brought to the attention of the merchants this last week, when subscriptions were asked for assistance to a certain church in a neighboring village on grounds that the residents of that village had given so much for patriotic purposes that they could not afford to give sufficient to keep the church in good financial condition. Another request for funds was made by a patriotic society in a neighboring township for their work.

In both cases the causes were worthy ones. But why are the merchants and their clerks being made the target always? They are having very hard times, some of them, to meet expenses, and is it just because they are in a position to be almost forced to give that they are asked? The threat is never made positively, but a couple of good customers go into Mr. Jones' store, tell their story, and that they have seen Mr. Brown in his store and he has subscribed. Mr. Jones simply has to do as Mr. Brown did and so on from store to store.

The whole scheme is an injustice to the merchants.

What conditions exist in Owen Sound exist also in every village, town and small city. The practice is an old one and it is about time it was done away with. If those who do the soliciting would just pause for a moment and ask themselves the question "Is it fair to put this off on someone else?" and be honest with themselves when they put the question, there would be less of the soliciting done.

Towns are not made by men afraid
Lest somebody else get ahead.
When everyone works and nobody shirks,
You can raise a town from the dead.
And if, while you make your personal stake,
Your neighbor can make one, too.
Your town will be what you want to see.
It isn't your town—it's you.

Mr. A. Caldwell, of Calgary in renewing his Times says: "We were pleased to see my old friend Dr. McClure, in The Times looking hale and hearty. We had a week of very cold weather here, but it is fine weather since and very little snow in Calgary."

The Last Days of 20% Sale

Wed. Mar. 14th

Wednesday night, March 14th at 10 o'clock we close our big sale and your chance of getting 20% off goods bought here passes.

WE have had a splendid trade, far beyond our expectations, and satisfied customers have gone from our store by the score.

THIS week and the last days of the sale we draw your attention to two lines you must have:

Shoes and Raincoats

No. 1, Shoes for Men and Women

For instance, Ladies' $4 50 fine stylish boots and our 20 per cent off means $3.60 Where can you buy a late model of good leather at that price?

Again: Take a man's fine, solid leather $6 shoe, and hard to get at that price, knock off 20 per cent and you have a pair of shoes you cannot buy for $6 anywhere. You get them here at $4.80. Better buy now You know how prices are climbing.

No. 2, Raincoats

Spring is coming and that means rain, rain rain. Don't spoil good clothes with wet. Keep your clothes neat by one of our standard English-made MacIntosh's. These swell coats sell regularly from $6 to $12, for either ladies or men. By rights you should add 25 per cent to the price because you simply can't get rubber goods at same old prices. Instead of adding, this store is deducting 20 per cent; and you get the finest coat in our store for $9.60. Think it over. It pays to buy the best. But if you took a cheaper one, a $6 one, you'd get it here for $4.80.

Remember our 20 per cent off sale closes Wednesday, March 14th at 10 p. m. Don't ask for it after that time.

Briefs from the Boys in France

Gunner R. J. McQuarrie, in a letter to his mother here, says; "Received your parcel, and very thankful for it, I have been on leave, and visiting Edinburgh. We also visited London and attended St. Paul's cathedral Sunday morning. There we heard the grandest music and singing I have ever heard. While I was working in the quarter-master's stores to-day, I saw some brushes made by Stevens-Hepner Co. It soon brought me to thinking of old days. Mother, this is a grand old country, and it is worth defending."

Writing from France on January 12 Eldon Dell says: "I was in France for Christmas dinner. We had lots of turkey, plum pudding, etc. We get lots to eat in France. Have had a slight attack of grippe, but am operating a transport truck in good style again. We have to operate near to the trenches and the German shells come close sometimes."

Writing on January 31st Pte. Dell further says: "The weather is cold now. The people say the coldest in 20 years, but it's not cold to we Canadians. The ground is frozen, therefore our transports run easier and the big guns can be moved without road making. I think old Fritz will remember 1917 for many years to come. Big preparations here."

Since Art Christian won the Military Medal we note he has also been promoted to sergeant. Writing on February 4th to his mother here he says: "It has been cold of late, and rather uncomfortable. This is Sunday and am just back from church parade. When my medal comes I will have it sent to you for safekeeping. I saw Jack McDuff. He has been on leave, and was looking fine. Haven't run across any other Port boys, but expect I will when the Bruce Battalion gets here. Tell the people to write. A soldier likes letters, also send The Times."

Jack MacDuff, in a letter home to his mother under date of Dec. 21st tells of a fine visit to London and to Scotland. He says: At Glasgow I saw the Wilkies. They were in good health, and made me very welcome. My visit to the land o' cakes was most enjoyable."

Writing under date of January 21st Jack further says: "We've been busy, and it's so cold it's hard to find a place to write. There is some snow here and it is quite frosty. I met Frank Geddes a few days ago. He looks well but was like the rest of us, plastered with mud. Frank says Ralph will soon be in the trenches again."

The Times is also privileged to print a letter from Sergt. Davis, who is a prisoner in Germany. He is a friend of the MacDuff family, and the letter is sent from Gefangenenlager, Minden, Germany, and is addressed to Miss Eva MacDuff: "I was pleased to get your letter and to know that Jack is well. He deserves a good rest after being so long on duty without a break of any kind. Since I am a prisoner my correspondence is limited. We are allowed to write only two letters and four cards per month. You ask how things are with me. You will see I have been moved from Dulman to Minden. It is not so good here. We could see quite a piece of the country there, but we can only see the sky here, as we are cased in by barrack rooms. But never mind, I suppose I should think myself lucky after escaping from the awful attack and bombardment by Jack Johnsons."

Buried Here

The funeral took place here on Thursday noon last of Mary Douglass, wife of the late Dr. Wm. Douglass, formerly of Port Elgin. She died at her home in Chicago, on Feb. 27, 1917. Mrs. Douglass lived on the old Lakeview Farm, Goderich road north. In 1898 she removed to Chicago where she resided until her death. She is survived by two daughters, Anna C., and Elizabeth M., both of Chicago: and five sons, James H. of Utah; Chester H., of N. Dakota; Wm. S. and Chas. H., both of Washington; and Dr. Frank C., of Chicago. The Douglass family are remembered by many residents in town and community.

Good Prices Always

Everything at the auction sales these days bring good prices. Last week Auctioneer Cavin sold for Geo. Bannerman a good list of stuff, cows bringing $150 and $140, a yearling heifer $110. Five cows and five yearlings brought $1000.

At Norman McLeod's sale in Arran Tp. there was a good crowd of bidders, cows sold as high as $120; two grass steers brought $122 each, and a three-year-old colt $160.

Farm Changes Hands

Wm. W. MacDonald has sold his farm on the 12th of Bruce to Geo. Collins for $5100. The farm contains 100 acres. Mr. D. C. Cavin negotiated the deal.

Mr. Collins is from Kincardine Tp. Mr. MacDonald has not decided just what he will do.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson X. March 11, 1917.

Jesus the Bread of Life.—John 6: 22-40.

Commentary.—I. Seeking for Jesus (vs. 22-29). 22, 23. On the day following the feeding of the five thousand, a part, at least, of the multitude desired to see Jesus again. They saw that he did not enter the boat to go across the sea with his disciples, and they expected to find him on the east side. 24. They also took shipping—Boats had come across the sea from Tiberias, a city built by Herod Antipas on the west side of the Sea of Galilee, and made by him the capital of his province. These boats were used by the people in going to the west side of the sea in their search for Jesus. They landed in the plain of Gennesaret, a few miles south of Capernaum. Seeking for Jesus—Their search was to be richly rewarded, but not in the manner they were expecting. 25. Rabbi—Master, teacher. When camest thou hither—Their seeking for Jesus was prompted largely by curiosity. This question shows that they were living upon a low plane. "They expect something miraculous. Christ does not gratify their curiosity. If the feeding of the five thousand, which they had witnessed, taught them nothing, what good would it do them to hear of the crossing of the sea?"—Cam. Bib. 26. Verily, verily—This word repeated has the effect of a solemn oath. Jesus is about to rebuke them for their unworthy motives, that he may lead them to something vastly higher. Not because ye saw the miracles—The miracle had been wrought primarily to convince the people of the Messiahship of Jesus and secondarily to relieve hunger. They who had asked Jesus the question were not affected by the first consideration, but were by the second. The sign, the miracle, in itself had not appealed to them, but the plentiful supply of food had. Because ye did eat of the loaves—This would be a severe charge for one who was merely human to make, but Jesus, the Son of God, saw clearly the motives of those who had questioned him, and his judgment of them was absolutely correct. They were seeking for material benefits. There are multitudes in that class to-day. If there is any material advantage to them in being religious, they are ready to be known as Christians. They have no conception of spiritual blessedness. They mind earthly things and are wholly unconcerned respecting spiritual values.

27. Labor not for the meat which perisheth—Jesus would not have us indolent or neglectful of our physical needs. He would have us diligent to provide for our households, but this should not be our chief concern. That meat which endureth unto everlasting life—He urged upon the people the necessity of giving first attention to the interests of the soul. This is in full harmony with his words recorded in Matt. 6: 33. The meat spoken of here is spiritual sustenance, grace, salvation. Which the Son of man shall give—The benefits which Jesus urges his hearers to seek would come through himself alone. Him hath God the Father sealed—The Father attested, or authenticated, the Messiahship and Sonship of Jesus by the prophecies of the Old Testament, by the voice from heaven and by the miracles which were wrought by him. The recent miracle east of the sea, which they had witnessed, sealed this great truth. 28. What shall we do—The attention of the people had been drawn from the material to the spiritual, to some extent, at least. They wished to know what works they might perform to secure the "meat" that would endure to everlasting life. 29. This is the work of God—This is the work God would have you do. This should absorb your interests and employ your energies of soul. Believe on him whom he hath sent—The work of God is to believe on his Son. To do this one must turn away from his sins, submit himself fully to the divine will and receive Jesus by faith into his heart and life. This will accomplish such a change in one that he becomes a new creature in Christ Jesus. This faith will free him from condemnation, and as he walks in the light, it will bring to him the cleansing of his heart from all sin (1 John 1: 7.) It is by a steady and continuous faith in Christ that one is kept pure in heart.

II. Asking for a sign (vs. 30-34). 30. what sign shewest thou—Christ's hearers understood from what he had said that he claimed to be the Messiah, and they asked for a sign as a proof of the correctness of his claim. They did not consider the miracle of feeding the five thousand sufficient. "As Jesus claimed the right of teaching them, and, as it was manifest that he would teach them differently from what they supposed Moses to teach, it was natural to ask him by what authority he claimed the right to be heard."—Barnes. 31. our fathers did eat manna in the desert—Reference is made to the supply of food the Lord gave to the children of Israel during their forty years' wandering in the wilderness. They who were questioning Jesus would have it understood that Moses gave the manna, and yet he was not the Messiah; and Jesus must give a greater sign than that or they would not believe in him. he gave them bread from heaven—Moses was divinely appointed to lead Israel to Canaan, and through him he communicated with the people, but it was the Lord who provided the manna, and not Moses. 32. Moses gave you not that bread from heaven—Their statement was wrong in two particulars. In the first place, it was the Lord that gave the supply of food. In the second place, it was food for the body that was given in the wilderness; while the Father was offering the world that which would nourish the soul, "the true bread from heaven." 33. the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven—That which feeds the soul, imparting and sustaining spiritual life, is the bread of life, but the direct statement is not made until a little later. 34. evermore give us this bread—This petition was based on a low conception of what Jesus was offering them. "Whatever miraculous supply he has at command, they would like to receive, not transiently, like the great repast, but permanently—evermore." — Whedon. This request reminds us of the water that Jesus offered her. She would be glad to have it, so she would not be obliged to come to the well to draw (John 4:15.

III. Jesus the bread of life (vs. 35-40). 35. I am the bread of life—In v. 32 he spoke of himself in the third person, and now he speaks unmistakably of himself, using the first person. Jesus is the bread of life, not only because of his life-sustaining power, but also because he gives life. The manna of which his hearers had spoken satisfied only bodily needs temporarily, but Jesus satisfies spiritual needs eternally. He that cometh ..... he that believeth—The conditions upon which Jesus gives himself to the individual are that he leave all other systems of religious trust and come to Jesus as his only support and believe in him with all his heart. Soul hunger and soul thirst are fully met in Jesus. 36. Ye also have seen me, and believe not—Their opportunities had been great, for they had heard his instructions and had seen the miracle which he wrought on the other side of the sea. "They had even seen him, and yet did not believe on him," is the sense of the passage. 37. All that the Father giveth me shall come to me—Those who come at the call of God, he is representing here as giving to Christ, because it is through his blood alone that they can be saved. God, by his spirit, convinces of sin, righteousness and judgment; those who acknowledge their iniquity, and their need of salvation, he gives to Christ, that is, he points out to them the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world.—Clarke. I will in no wise cast out—This is a precious promise and it has comforted myriads of sin-burdened souls as they have looked to Jesus. 38-40. It is clearly the will of the Father that all shall come to his Son, and to those who thus come he will impart life, spiritual life; and those who receive and retain this life shall be raised up at the last day and shall be forever with the Lord. He wills the highest good of all.

Questions.—Who were trying to find Jesus? What reason did Jesus give for this desire to see him? To what did Jesus seek to call their attention? Why did they ask for a sign? What did Jesus tell them to do if they would please God? What did the people say about manna? What did Jesus mean when he said that he was the bread of life? Quote a rich promise contained in the lesson. On what conditions will Jesus become the bread of life to us?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Imperishable food.
I. The gift of God.
II. Received by faith.

I. The gift of God. Christ's knowledge of the human heart was shown in exposing the false motives of those who followed Him. He did not pronounce it wrong for the multitude to feel the cravings of nature or to rejoice in the miraculous supply afforded them in the desert. They were not rebuked for following Him. The defect was in their lack of spiritual perception and the desire for eternal life. They were moved by their stimulated appetites without any gratitude or devotion. They did not recognize the Giver in the bread, nor the Bread of life in the Giver. Jesus rebuked excessive attention to the body to the neglect of the soul. He proclaimed the essential superiority of the food which endures. He gave a striking and just representation of Himself. He revealed Himself plainly as the Bread of life. He intimated that there was in Him that, which if properly received, would communicate eternal life. He passed gradually from figure to reality. From the miracle of the loaves the multitude would gladly have received Him as their king. They would have headed an uprising to make Him such, but on being informed directly of His divine origin and His mission to earth, and that they must believe on Him as their Saviour from sin, they demanded further evidence. The difficulty was not that the Messiah's origin should be mysterious. The popular opinion was that when Christ came no one would know from whence He came. The Jews supposed they knew exactly who Jesus was, the son of Joseph and Mary. His miracles could not undo the impression made on their minds by the circumstances of His life at Nazareth. He was still but the carpenter's son. Jesus did not alter His words to meet the moral difficulties present in their minds. He proved His claim, that of having been sent into the world by the Father to perform a specific work. He asserted that it was not Moses, but God who fed the people with manna. Hence there could be no comparison between Moses and Jesus. The Bread of life was not limited to one people, but offered to the whole race of mankind. Jesus proceeded to speak of His Father's placing His people in the care of His Son as the Mediator. God the Father was declared to be the Author of the plan of salvation, Jesus claimed a power within Himself to constrain wanderers to return to God.

II. Received by faith. Jesus urged the supreme importance of motive in religion, the transcendent value of the salvation of the soul and that faith in himself which would lead to eternal life. He declared that believing in him is the greatest of all works, the comprehensive summary of all true work. The requirement to believe on him comprehended a full consent to be saved by him. It was this simple and implicit trust which created the difficulty. They imagined there was some higher work yet to be done than any commanded by the law of Moses. They believed themselves to be prepared to do whatever needed to be done. Jesus saw the spiritual nature of man in all its priceless capacity, and to this he addressed himself when he bade his hearers eat of his flesh and drink of his blood. He would have them understand that the true aim in life is not the attainment of material good, but the attainment of spiritual life in him. To feel his love, to do his will, was the aim in life worthy of their pursuit, worthy of the nature with which their Creator had endowed them. The very purpose of Christ's mission to earth, his teachings and miracles, his sufferings and death, was that he might give himself to the hungering heart of humanity. Belief in him consists of the turning of the soul to righteousness. Inner conviction determines action. Believing is the inner process, work is the outer process. Belief is the motive, work the result. Belief is the cause, work is the effect. Faith in Christ is God's appointment as the sole means of salvation. The primary element of all true faith is simple reliance on the gospel testimony that Christ is all sufficient for the purpose of salvation. The amazing love of the fathers appears in choosing and drawing guilty men to be saved. Every stage of the Redeemer's life confirmed the comforting fact that "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world." The Father sends his Son to men, and men to his Son.

HOW TO FEED FARM POULTRY FOR PROFITS

Egg Production Depends Largely Upon Proper Methods of Feeding, and Upon Egg Production, Especially Winter Egg Production, Depends the Profits—Anyone Can Follow This Practical Advice.

One of the leading principles in poultry keeping is successful feeding for egg production. The number of eggs laid by a farm flock decides, to a very great extent, whether the flock is a source of profit or loss to its owner.

To obtain the best results from successful feeding the flock must be composed of well matured birds. These birds should be strong, healthy and vigorous when put in the laying pen in the fall of the year. Any birds that contract colds or other ailments should be removed from the flocks. This is essential to prevent disease from spreading.

Experiments have shown that birds lay more eggs during their pullet year period of usefulness. The farmer should see that the large majority of his flock is composed of pullets. To be exact, the flock of one hundred hens should consist of seventy-five pullets and twenty-five yearlings. The yearlings should be kept primarily for breeders, and the pullets maintained to serve as winter egg producers. The twenty-five yearlings should be selected during the laying season of the pullet year and, if possible, during the winter months. Those birds which are winter egg producers should be selected and leg banded and the remainder sold in June or July.

STIMULATING EGG PRODUCTION.

The pullets should be forced to secure a large egg production, but the yearlings should be fed rather sparingly during the early part of the winter. High feedings would tend to stimulate egg production, and this is not desirable, as it affects the fertility of the eggs and also weakens the vitality of the chickens. The breeding yearlings should be fed liberally before the breeding season opens, to stimulate egg production. Hatching eggs should be available about March 15th, and mating should be done at least ten days before that date.

Egg production is largely controlled by the method of feeding. Abundance of litter should be scattered on the floor of the hen house. Even as much as ten to twelve inches is often advisable in order to provide exercise for the birds. The grains should be scattered in the litter, which should be dry and light. It is a good practice to stir the straw or chaff with a fork directly after feeding. By which practice being followed the litter can be kept from forming into a compact state and the grains given become incorporated readily in the loosened material. To secure her food the hen must work, and this is the best possible way of making the birds take their daily exercise.

The laying hen must have an abundance of good, palatable, nutritious food. A variety of feeds should be fed, as each kind of grain serves a different function in the production of eggs. Certain grains are known as heat producing foods, others serve to maintain and build up tissues and organs of the body, others furnish energy to carry on the various functions of the body, and still others to supply material for egg production. When it is understood that each kind of grain performs its special duty, the importance of variety can be readily appreciated.

It is a well-known fact that fowls prefer whole to ground grains. The larger part of the ration, therefore, should consist of whole grains. Such grains as corn, wheat, oats and buckwheat are used to a very great extent to supply the whole grain ration. Corn is an excellent winter feed, being a great heat producing food, and very appetizing. It has great fat producing qualities and should be fed with judgment. As the weather becomes warm in spring the amount of corn in the laying ration should be gradually decreased. Wheat is undoubtedly one of our leading poultry feeds. While good, sound wheat is preferable to any other grade, good results can be obtained by feeding shrunken or frozen wheat, provided the grain is not too badly damaged. It is often more economical to feed slightly damaged wheat than wheat of good milling qualities. Oats make a good poultry food when they are of good quality and contain a low percentage of hull. Poor oats should never be used for poultry feeding. Oats may be fed either whole or crushed with good results. Buckwheat makes one of the best poultry feeds we have, but being a strong laxative feed must be fed with considerable judgment. It is high in flesh and fat producing qualities and can be fed to good advantage in late autumn and winter. Buckwheat should never be fed in spring or summer, and at no time should it constitute more than one-third of the laying ration.

The best laying ration we know of in whole grains is as follows: two parts corn, two parts wheat and one part buckwheat or oats. Feeding should be done twice daily, early in the morning and about three o'clock in the afternoon. The grain should be thrown in the litter and enough fed in the morning to keep the hens busy for several hours. Feeding in the afternoon should always be done early enough to enable the birds to pick up a full meal before going to roost. Any grain which may remain in the litter over night will be picked up the following morning before the attendant makes his morning visit. The amount of feed required must, in all cases, be regulated by the attendant. No definite amount can be given from day to day. A good plan is to brush away some of the litter and see if there is any grain remaining before feeding. The litter should be free from grain at least once each day.

DON'T OVERFEED WITH WET MASH.

In addition to the whole grain ration already mentioned, some ground grains should be given. Such feeds as wheat bran, ground or crushed oats, middlings and cornmeal serve feeds with high protein content, such as linseed meal, gluten meal and beef scraps, should be added to the ground grain ration. A good mash mixture is composed of as follows: wheat bran, 200 lbs.; ground or crushed oats, 100 lbs.; middlings, 100 lbs.; middlings, 100 lbs.; cornmeal, 50 lbs.; beef scraps, 49 lbs.; linseed meal, 20 lbs.

This mash should be fed in a self-feeding hopper, which should be before the birds at all times. Before putting the mash in the hopper it should be thoroughly mixed. This mash can also be fed as a wet mash by moistening it with water or sour skim milk, preferably the latter. Care must be exercised not to overfeed with wet mash, as overfeeding causes laziness and a retarded egg yield. The wet mash should be fed in troughs and only what the birds can pick up in a very few minutes. When properly fed, wet mashes, due to their palatability, stimulate egg production. Dry mash feeding is more largely followed with large flocks, as by this method labor is minimized but when the flock is moderate in size both methods could be followed with good results. Wet mashes should be fed every other day, or at least twice a week, for best results. The proper time for feeding this mash is at noon or shortly after dinner hour.

Beef scraps supply the animal food so necessary for maximum egg production. Green cut bone can also be used to good advantage providing it is fresh. Great care must be exercised in feeding green cut bone and very small quantities used. Overfeeding with cut green bone upsets the digestive organs and reduces the egg yield. Sour milk is also a good animal food and should be more largely used on poultry feeding.

During the winter months some form of green food must be supplied. Mangels, turnips, cabbage, sprouted oats, clover or alfalfa hay may be fed. Mangels are perhaps the best and should be fed if possible. Split the mangel in two and spike the pieces to the wall and the birds will consume large quantities of them. The same method can be used in the feeding of turnips or cabbage. Sprouted oats can be grown in a warm room or basement by soaking the oats for twenty to twenty-four hours in lukewarm water and then spreading them out in a layer about one inch thick on the floor. They must be kept moist and occasionally stirred to prevent moulding. As soon as sprouting commences they must not be disturbed, but should be watered daily. Feed to the laying stock when about three inches in length. Clover or alfalfa hay, if of good quality, also make excellent green food for laying hens and should be fed regularly, either cut and steamed, or fed dry as litter, allowing the birds to pick off the leaves.

Oyster shells and grit should be kept before the birds at all times. Oyster shell is largely composed of lime from which the hens make egg shells, and grit aids in the process of digestion.

As the egg is composed largely of water it is very important that water or sour milk be kept before the birds at all times. The milk should be sour and thickened, and the water fresh for best results. If milk is used the drinking utensils should be kept perfectly clean.

To obtain the best results from feed and labor expended the birds must be properly housed. It is not necessary that the house be warm or costly, but it must be comfortable, dry, and free from draughts. These, together with plenty of light, are the essentials for poultry housing. Each bird should be allowed four to four and one-half square feet for Leghorns or other light breeds, and five square feet for utility breeds such as Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds or Orpingtons. The smaller the house, the more costly will be the housing problem. It has been found that hens can be most economically housed in lots of about one hundred. To accommodate one hundred hens the house should be twenty feet square. This gives the maximum floor space with the least possible outlay. The windows or curtains should be on the south side, and the roosts on the north wall.

Only by proper breeding, judicious feeding and comfortable housing can the highest egg yield be expected from any flock of laying hens.

THE VAMPIRE.

Queer Beliefs That Cling About This Old World Superstition.

The vampire, according to the belief of eastern Europe, is the physical body of a dead person, male or female, that maintains itself in a sort of half life in the grave by returning to its former haunts and nourishing itself on the blood of living persons. This superstition is characteristically Slavonic.

The vampire superstition is strongest in White Russia and the Ukraine, though it also pervades the popular belief in Poland and Servia, among the Czechs of Bohemia and the Slovaks of Hungary and is to be traced as far as Albania and Greece. Comparative philology proves it to have had a common origin with the equally hideous legend of the were wolf, a human being who could at will assume the appearance and ferocity of a wolf, which if wounded in its nocturnal pursuits in the head or limbs could not efface its injuries or escape detection when it returned to its human form.

The vampire is to be detected during his visits to the haunts of man by his extreme pallor, his unnaturally long and pointed canine teeth and his fetid breath. The vampire also throws no shadow either upon the ground or on a looking glass, and is never seen to eat or drink. How he leaves and re-enters his grave is an undecided point, because no one is ever supposed to have had the courage and address to see, but the belief is that locked doors and closed windows are no bar to his movements.—London Globe.

Puss and the Bell.

Cats are certainly not so demonstrative as dogs, but, according to many cat lovers, they are quite as sagacious. Archbishop Whately has recorded that his mother's cat habitually rang the bell whenever it wanted a room door opened. On the first occasion that Pussy made her wish known in this way the family had retired to bed.

"In the middle of the night," says the archbishop, "the parlor bell was rung violently. The sleepers, startled from their repose, proceeded down stairs with poker and tongs to intercept, as they thought, the predatory movements of a burglar. But they were equally surprised to find that the bell was rung by Pussy, who frequently repeated the act whenever she wished to get out of the parlor."—London Spectator.

How to Recoup.

Curdled Custard.—Suppose your boiled custard curdles. Try putting it in a very cold basin and beating it briskly. Another plan is to add a teaspoonful of corn flour mixed to a paste with water. Cook this for a few minutes, then strain the thickened custard into a glass dish.

To Thicken Batter.—In mixing any pudding made with batter you may add too much liquid if you are in a hurry. If your batter is too thin, thicken it with white breadcrumbs.

When cream doesn't whip stand it where it will get very cold, then add to it the white of an egg and beat them together thoroughly.

If mayonnaise curdles put the yolk of an egg into a very cold basin and add the curdled sauce drop by drop, stirring steadily all the time.

A PUZZLING CASE

Major, I was astonished; not at seeing him there exactly, but at the idea that instead of remaining in seclusion after the tragedy of the previous night, he had ventured out into society so soon. Upon my word, considering how he professed to love Mazzucata, it was hardly decent, but the young men of the present day have no hearts, nor palates, either, seeing they appreciate neither women nor dinners to the extent which such delights demand. Now, when I was a young man—but there, I must digress no longer, but come back to the story and to Gilbert, who, as I said before, was seated in the writingroom looking at an envelope he had just addressed.

So absorbed was he in his own thoughts that he did not notice me when I entered, and as we had the apartment to ourselves, I determined to try the effect on him of a little surprise. Evidently he was thinking of the Mazzucata tragedy, so if I suddenly asked him about the Black Carnation, he would be so startled that he might blurt out the truth, whatever it was, about that ridiculous flower. My interview with Dallas had put me on my guard against giving a man time to collect himself and tell lies, so I judged it wisest for my purpose in this instance to startle Tressinger, and, so to speak, bounce all he knew out of him. Having thus made up my mind I stole quietly behind him and sharply uttered the cabalistic words used by Dallas an hour previous.

"What about the Black Carnation?"

Such a cry as he gave I never heard before and I trust I never will again for it made my blood curdle to hear it as he sprang to his feet with a horrified face.

"Major Granby," he gasped at length, "Major Granby!"

Being an old soldier, I have always my wits about me, and therefore seeing he was more upset than I bargained for, I touched the bell and ordered a glass of cognac when the waiter appeared.

"Major!" said Gilbert, again recovering himself with an effort, "what do you mean?"

"About the Black Carnation?"

He put up his hands to his face with a kind of groan and fell back in his chair as though in a faint. I own I was much puzzled at this extraordinary behavior, and would have spoken at once so eager was my curiosity, when, fortunately, the brandy arrived. Having sent the waiter out of the room, I took the glass in my hand and approached Gilbert, who still remained seated in the armchair, with his face covered.

"Here, my boy, take this," I said, in a kind tone, for I felt sorry for the way in which I had startled him. "Drink it down and you will feel better."

With a sigh, he removed his hands from his face and took the glass, the contents of which he drained at one breath, then looked up into my face with a forced smile which he strove to render as careless as possible, but the attempt was not successful with me.

"Well, Major Granby, you rather startled me."

"So I see; but why should my remark startle you?" I asked, looking at him sharply.

"Because I did not know you knew anything about the Black Carnation."

"Nor did I until this morning."

"Who told you about it?" asked Gilbert, nervously.

"Dallas."

"Dallas!" he repeated with a start, "the fellow to whom you introduced me last night?"

"The same."

"And what does he know about the Black Carnation?"

"I am not aware of the extent of his knowledge. I call on him this morning, and when I was going he said, 'Ask Tressinger about the Black Carnation.' What he meant I do not know."

"I know, however," muttered the young man, thoughtfully; "yes, I know, so I have no doubt she told him also."

"Who told him and what?"

"Mazzucata told him about the Black Carnation."

"What is the Black Carnation?" I asked, desperately curious regarding this mysterious flower.

Tressinger hesitated a moment and looked steadily at the carpet, then raised his eyes and met my eager gaze.

"I don't know why I should not tell you," he said, at length, in a low voice; "it is a flower."

"An artificial flower?"

"No, a real flower."

"Rubbish! whoever heard of a Black Carnation?"

"No one; but it exists for all that."

"I don't believe it."

"I do! I must, because I have seen it."

"Seen a Black Carnation! You are joking, Gilbert."

"Upon my word of honor I am not. I have seen a natural carnation as black as your hat."

"Dyed or painted!"

"No! grown by nature."

"Impossible. Nature does not indulge in such freaks."

"Perhaps not often, but in this case she has created a black flower."

"Well," said I impatiently, "whether this flower be natural or artificial, what has it to do with the death of Mazzucata?"

"It was a sign that she was to die."

"Why? did she belong to a secret society?"

"I don't know."

"Do you belong to a secret society?"

Tressinger looked at me in some surprise at my question.

"I? No! Why do you ask?"

"Oh, because—because—well, I hardly know how to explain myself."

"Major Granby," said Gilbert, after a pause, during which he eyed me keenly, "you seem to take a great interest in the death of Mazzucata."

"Yes, I do. I want to know who killed her."

"And your reason?"

"Not a very worthy one. I have detective fever."

"In this instance I would advise you not to have detective fever."

"In Heaven's name, why?"

"Because you will never find out who killed Mazzucata."

"You, too!" I cried curiously; "why, Dallas said exactly the same thing to me."

"Dallas said the same thing," repeated Gilbert, with lively interest; "why, what has he to do with it?"

"That's just what I wish to find out."

My companion rose to his feet, and took a few turns up and down the room with a perplexed look on his face.

"I can't conceive why Dallas should say that," he muttered, after a pause; "he cannot suspect her."

"Her!" said I, overhearing this remark, which was not meant for my ear, "oh, it is a woman, then?"

"No, no! certainly not," replied Gilbert, sharply; "who said such a thing?"

"Not Dallas, then you."

"What! did Dallas say that the crime had been committed by a woman?"

"Well, he hinted as much, and now yet—"

"If I said anything I meant nothing. It was a slip of the tongue."

"Slips of the tongue sometimes tell more than the most carefully prepared speech," I answered, with a shrewd nod of my head.

"I wish you would stop talking like a sphinx," cried the young man, in an ill-tempered tone, resuming his seat. "What do you mean by all this questioning?"

"I wish to find out who killed Mazzucata."

"Then you never will find out."

The agreement of Dallas and Tressinger on this point puzzled me greatly, and it seemed as though I were likely to learn as little from the latter as I had done from the former, when, in desperation, I determined to appeal to his love of life by showing him the perilous position in which he stood.

"Listen to me, Gilbert," I said, gravely, laying my hand on his shoulder: "I knew your uncle intimately and promised him before he died to do all I could for his nephew. The time has now come when I can do a great deal—that is, if you will be plain with me."

"What do you want me to tell you, major?" he asked, in a wondering tone.

"Tell me all about Mazzucata and this Black Carnation."

"To what end?"

"Because I want to find out who killed this woman, and it seems to me that there is a clue to be found in this flower you speak of."

Tressinger remained silent for a few moments in deep thought, and then spoke out plainly.

"I will tell you all I know, but I am afraid it will neither solve the mystery nor go any way towards elucidating it. I know no more than you do who killed Mazzucata."

"You know that it is a woman."

"No, I do not, it is only my fancy."

"Then why are you and Dallas agreed on this point?"

"Dallas puzzles me," said Gilbert, evading the point of my question, "and I cannot conceive why he should make any mention of the Black Carnation."

"Confound you and this Black Carnation. What does it all mean?"

"I wish I knew. However, I will make you as wise as I am myself, and then you can draw your own conclusions."

I waited impatiently for the story, and seeing this he began without further preamble, which was just as well, seeing that my curiosity was bringing on a fit of bad temper.

"I met Mazzucata some six months ago at Monte Carlo, where she was then singing. You know I was brought up to be a singer, and have studied at Milan, so on being introduced to her she took a great interest in me on this account. From interest we rapidly passed into a state of affection for one another and from thence to ardent love. I really believed she loved me truly. Oh, yes, I know what you are going to say, that she had many lovers before she met me. I am aware of all that—she told me all about her past life, and believe me, major, she was not so bad as people make out. Every singer's reputation is at the mercy of a scandal-loving public, and because my poor Marietta disregarded the conventionalities she laid herself open to censure, therefore her fair fame suffered, but I believed in her, despite all scandal, and would have made her my wife, had she lived."

"Dallas also."

"I know all about Dallas' infatuation. He met her eighteen months ago in Italy, and persecuted her with his attentions, but beyond accepting such attentions as a pretty woman is accustomed to receive from a man, she gave him no encouragement. Still, notwithstanding her coldness, he persisted in his suit and offers of marriage, so she promised to give him an answer when he returned from his tour in the east. Meanwhile she met me, and as I tell you, we fell in love with one another; she promised to become my wife when we heard that Dallas had returned."

"You heard yesterday, I suppose, for he only told me he only came back to town in the morning."

"Exactly, ill news travels fast, you know. Well, she was going to tell him to-day that she intended to be my wife, when the catastrophe of last night occurred and robbed me of the woman I adored."

He buried his face in his hands much affected, and respecting his grief, I remained sympathetically silent until he recovered himself.

"But what has all this to do with the Black Carnation?"

"Everything; listen. Marietta would not tell me anything of her girlhood, and to this day I am absolutely ignorant of her name."

"It is Mary Magillan, according to Dallas."

"Mary Magillan," he replied, scornfully, "that is a lie she told Dallas to keep him quiet, but it is not her real name, for she told no one, not even to me. No one knows her real name, least of all, Dallas, and my knowledge of her life does not extend further back than her debut in La Scala three years ago as Marietta Mazzucata."

"She is Irish."

"Yes, I am aware of that, but I don't know which part of Ireland she came from."

"Do you know if she had any enemies?"

"Not that I ever heard of, but she must have had some unknown enemy, for on several occasions she told me she would die a violent death, and would receive a warning in the shape of a Black Carnation."

"Which you saw?"

"Well, to tell you the truth I did not believe there was such a thing in existence as a Black Carnation, but she assured me there was, and that she would receive one and be killed shortly afterwards."

"Well, did she receive the warning?"

"Yes! Two days after she arrived in England I called at her hotel, and without a word she handed to me a flower, which was nothing more than a carnation, coal black. She then said she would be killed shortly, but refused to tell me any more, so I know nothing of the person who sent her the token, or who killed her."

"[illegible] a warning [illegible]"

"Yes! she was in a terrible state of mind, and wanted to forfeit her engagement. Indeed she did so, and was going back to Paris to-day with me, where we were to have been married at once."

"But why did she sing last night?"

"The manager persuaded her, and she told me that she felt safe on the stage, as no one could kill her before a thousand people. Yet you saw what happened. Oh, the demon who killed her, if I could only find out who it was!"

I took his hand and comforted him as well as I was able. "We will search for the assassin of Mazzucata together, Gilbert."

MAJOR GRANBY'S THEORY.

Number Two.

Discarding the theory that Dallas murdered Mazzucata out of sheer jealousy, I firmly believe that she met her death at the hands of an emissary of some secret society, and that the Black Carnation was the official notice of her death. My reasons are as follows:

She was Irish, and therefore likely to be connected with some organization for the purpose of freeing her country.

She refused to tell Tressinger from whom she expected the token of a Black Carnation, and was doubtless sworn to secrecy, on that and other points.

She duly received the fatal token and expected her death.

She was killed by an infernal machine, which is plainly the method employed by secret societies.

The explosion took place in public so as to show all other members of the society that nothing could protect them from death if they once incurred the wrath of their organization.

CHAPTER IV.

My conversation with Gilbert afforded me much food for reflection during the next few days, as it tended rather to deepen than to solve the mystery of Mazzucata's death. I must own that the episode of the Black Carnation seemed to favor the idea that she had fallen a victim to the vengeance of a secret society. This being the case, as I now began to believe, my suspicions regarding the criminality of Dallas were set at rest, and I sought him out with the idea of securing his co-operation in hunting down the dastardly assassin who was guilty of this wicked crime.

On calling at his rooms, however, I found that he had departed from town for a few days' rest, being, as his valet informed me, quite unnerved by the opera house catastrophe. His servant was unable to give me further information, so, considerably disheartened by this unforeseen absence of Dallas, I came away in a very downcast frame of mind.

It was now nearly a week since that tragic occurrence, but up to the present no arrest had been made in connection with the crime, and it seemed as though the mystery would never be solved. It is true that the papers notified the public that the police had a clue, which would undoubtedly lead to the discovery of the assassin, but the papers always make that statement, though, in nine cases out of ten, it is quite untrue. Scotland Yard, infallible as it deems itself to be, knew nothing further than that Mazzucata had been killed by the explosion of an infernal machine, while the curious episode of the Black Carnation, which might have given them a key to the riddle, was quite unknown to the authorities.

As to Gilbert Tressinger, he and I had many conversations together about the tragedy, but neither of us could come to any satisfactory conclusion, and, indeed, differed considerably in our theories on the subject; for while I leaned to the opinion that it was the work of a secret society, he thought it more likely to be the outcome of some circumstance connected with the unknown girlhood of the singer.

Things were thus at a standstill when I inquired for Dallas and found this matter, for my detective fever was more virulent than ever. I went straight to Gilbert's house in Curzon street, with the idea of ventilating a theory, which I had lately formed concerning the Black Carnation.

Gilbert was engaged with some visitor in his drawing-room, so I took my seat in the smoking room, which was very comfortable, and read the morning papers. While thus occupied, I heard the sound of voices raised in anger, and became aware that Gilbert and his visitor were having high words. Only a thin wall divided the rooms, and though I could not make out what they were fighting about, I heard a word here and there which roused my curiosity considerably. One of the voices was Gilbert's, the other that of a woman, and it was this latter that seemed to be the noisier of the two. First imploring, then wrathful, this woman seemed to be urging Tressinger to do something against his will. That it was connected with the opera house crime I knew perfectly well, for I twice caught the words "Black Carnation" pronounced by the woman in a menacing tone of voice.

ST. VITUS DANCE AFFECTS MANY CHILDREN

The Trouble Can be Cured Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

St. Vitus Dance is much more common than is generally imagined. The trouble is often mistaken for mere nervousness, or awkwardness. Usually attacks young children, most often between the ages of six and fourteen—though older persons may be affected with it. The most common symptom is twitching of the muscles of the face and limbs. As the disease progresses this twitching takes the form of spasms, in which the jerking motion may be confined to the head, or all the limbs may be affected. The patient is frequently unable to hold anything in the hands or walk steadily, and in severe cases the speech may be affected. The disease is due to impoverished nerves, owing to the blood being out of condition and can be cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which enrich the blood, strengthen the nerves, and in this way restore the sufferer to good health. Any symptom of nerve trouble in young children should be promptly treated as it is almost sure to lead to St. Vitus Dance. The following is proof of the power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to cure this trouble. Miss Hattie Cummings, R. R. No. 2, Peterboro, Ont., says:—"I was attacked with what the doctor said was St. Vitus Dance. Both my hands trembled so as to be practically useless. Then the trouble went to my left side, and from that to my right leg, and left me in such a condition that I was not able to go out of the house. I took the doctor's medicine without getting any benefit. Then I tried another remedy with the same poor results. At this stage I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and did so, with the result that they fully restored me to health, and I have not had the slightest symptom of nervous trouble since. I can recommend these pills to anyone who is suffering from nervous trouble, and hope they will profit by my experience."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any drug dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PORK AND PORCELAIN.

And the Venus Shell of the Shores of the Mediterranean.

"You remember the comment of the wag who declared that if fish should be served only on plates adorned with fishes and seaweed, pork should be served only on porcelain. And you probably saw no connection whatever. It is remotely possible that the wag saw no connection, either—beyond the sound of the words.

Curiously enough, there is a deep inner connection between pork and porcelain, a connection that happens to drag in a certain kind of fish that was found on the shores of the Mediterranean. That fish was the Venus shell, and it inhabited a house more beautiful than any Italian palace. The top of the shell was oval and arched, and when it was covered with a fine gray seaweed the children who played along the shore called it "porcella" the little pig.

In time the Venus shell came to be known as the porcella, perhaps because the people who gathered the shells for their commercial value were more familiar with the pig than with the luminous goddess of love, whose radiance was supposed to be reflected in the iridescent house of the creature who dwelt in the sea from which Venus is said to have arisen.

The luster of that shell was well known all over Europe, and when a potter of [illegible] succeeded in producing a glaze on earthenware that was very hard and luminous, he called it "porcelain," because it resembled the shell of the "porcella." He was not thinking of "porco," the Italian hog, nor of "porca," his spouse, nor yet of "porcella," the little pig, but he gave his ware a name that quite [illegible] suggests pork.

Nerviline Ends Neuralgia, Brings Relief Instantly

No Remedy Like Old "Nerviline" to Cure Pain or Soreness.

That terrible ache—how you fairly reel with it—that stabbing, burning neuralgia—what misery it causes. Never mind, you don't have to suffer—use Nerviline, it's a sure cure. Not an experiment, because nearly forty years of wonderful success has made a name for Nerviline among the people of many different nations. "There is nothing speedier to end Neuralgic headache than old-time Nerviline," writes Mr. G. C. Daigleish, from Evanston. "It is so powerful and penetrating that it seems to eat up any pain in a minute. My family couldn't get along without Nerviline. We always keep a bottle handy on the shelf, and use it to end chest colds, sore throat, coughs, earache, toothache and pain in the back. My wife swears by Nerviline. For cramps its effect is astonishing, and we believe it is better and speedier than any other household family remedy." At all dealers.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto—Wholesale trade is better than for last week, while the crisis which confronted industries through a scarcity of coal has been relieved for a time by liberal shipments during the week. The railway situation is still a depressing influence on general trade, although the immediate danger of shutdowns has been removed. Dry goods wholesale houses report increases, and while dressgoods are behind last year, gents furnishings, carpets, woollen goods, etc., show increases, placing the general trade in a satisfactory condition. Current orders are fair. Hardware lines are only seasonably active, as February is normally a quiet month. Grocers are only moderately active. Country collections are good, and city payments are fair.

Montreal—The railway congestion is less acute than last week, although manufacturers are still handicapped by the inability to get raw materials, and wholesalers and jobbers find it impossible to get deliveries of goods expected several weeks ago. Wholesale trade is fairly good, and travellers are already sending in satisfactory orders for fall delivery while current orders are fair. All manufacturers of textiles are behind in their deliveries, but wholesalers are satisfied to take goods whenever they can get them, in consideration of the appreciation in value in the meantime. Fur dealers report that stocks are well cleaned out. The hardware trade is seasonably quiet. The tea market was steady at last week's advance, and the general grocery trade is fair. Leather is firm, with the small stocks holding values steady. Collections are fair to good.

Ottawa—Better communication has resulted in heavier orders from salesmen. Wholesale trade is fair; furs have been fairly active for the season, and stocks are well cleaned out. Commercial obligations are being fairly well met.

Hamilton—The coal situation is less acute than it was a week ago, as a lessening of the blockade at the frontier has made it possible for local industries to secure fairly good supplies. Wholesalers state that spring trade looks exceptionally good. Liberal orders are being shipped out, and autumn orders are already coming in. Hardware lines are seasonably quiet. The building trade is rather inactive. Money is plentiful, and collections are well up to normal.

London—Western Ontario trade conditions are quite satisfactory, and the outlook for the 1917 crop is very promising. Wholesalers have shipped good spring orders, and buying for fall requirements has been satisfactory from the wholesale points of view thus far. Country trade is good through Western Ontario, and payments are good.

Winnipeg—Mercantile business is fair. Spring goods are being received from jobbers and wholesalers, and the business community is preparing to meet an active inquiry for spring commodities. Payments are good, especially in the country.

Calgary—Business conditions in Alberta show a great deal of improvement over the same period of last year. Retail trade is fair, and wholesale [illegible] the better firms have considerable stocks of goods bought at lower prices. The buying movement is quite well sustained.

Vancouver—Retail trade is holding up well, and the general feeling in trade circles regarding the future is one of optimism. Collections are more satisfactory, and the volume of business is quite satisfactory to wholesalers and jobbers, as well as to the retail trade.

Quebec—Wholesale trade is showing up favorably, dry goods are fairly active, wholesale and retail, other lines are up to the average. Collections on the whole are fairly satisfactory.

We all have our ups and downs, but [illegible] from being called down.

"The Village Doctor" Brings $300 For Red Cross

Florence P. Young, is the energetic teacher at Ribey's school 12th of Bruce She and her friends and trustees succeeded in making a record for Red Cross receipts by producing "The Village Doctor" an interesting play, and giving it in connection with the box social Friday night.

The school was jammed with people. Trustees and others expected a crowd, and erected a gallery in the school, but even this would not hold all. The young people kept splendid order despite the fact that they were packed in like sardines. $94 was realized on the 60 lb. can of honey donated by Wesley Jones and won by Jack Reoch. John Nelson gave 40 lbs. of red clover seed from which $7.50 was realized. It was won by Wm. Aitto. Mr. R. C. Pearce auctioned the boxes off in good style, while Mr. Wesley Jones very capably officiated as chairman. The instrumental part of the program was given by McLean brothers and W. Howe. The play lasted two hours, and created keen interest and enjoyment. The young doctor comes to the village and rents Mrs. Crane's parlor for an office. Mrs. Crane has a daughter, Jane, who much against her mother's will trains for a nurse. Mrs. Crane tells all her griefs to the young doctor and he forms his own opinion of Jane and he gets quite a surprise when he sees her.

The doctor has numerous patients with various aches and ills. Mr. Solomon Wiseacre, the old man with a sore back, Mr. Lovejoy, who is in great distress with a compound fracture of the heart because of his infatuation for two young ladies in the village.

Mrs. Groan who had all the pains and aches imaginable until the Dr. prescribed low diet for her and she left the office wonderfully improved. Miss Knowing and Miss Clinger two society ladies called on the Dr. and invited him to join their literary club and further impressed the doctor with the strong mind of Jane. Miss Clinger herself being much interested in the Drs affairs. Mr. Brief the young lawyer trying to run opposition with the young doctor.

Widow Ware and children were in a sad plight and the kind heartedness and skill of the Dr. were fully brought in to the way he attended to their sad plight.

Mrs. Grabbe who who was in very poor health. The doctor advised her to go on a trip. But Mrs. Grabbe was quite opposed to this. Mrs. Crane was quite interested in the doctor's affairs. Mrs. Frost was trying to sympathize with her. Tom Bravo was congratulated when arriving from the war. Everyone was amused to see Mr. Archie McLean act his part as Dr. Old in the runaway accident, he let the nurse care for the Dr. to restore him to health again But after all the Dr. won the fair Jane after all his trials and troubles. They held a reception and all were invited, everyone telling Jane what a lucky girl she was. Mr. Brook attempted to make a speech but he was unsuccessful. The Doctor certainly acted his part well and great credit was given to Mrs. Crane for the success of the play.

Those taking part were:
Dr. Young—Mr. Roy Salmon.
Mrs. Crane—Mrs. Neil McGillivray.
Jane Crane—Florence P. Young.
Miss Knowing—Mrs. Wm. McCulloch.
Belinda Clinger—Pearl Nicholson.
Lawyer Brief—Mr. Wm. Nicholson.
Simon Grabbe—Isadore Sieffert.
Mrs. Simon Grabbe—Mrs. Thos. Howe
Solomon Wiseacre—James, McKenzie.
Mrs. Ware—Ruby Jones.
Mrs Frost—Sadie Cameron.
Tommy Ware—Harold Jones.
Johnnie Ware—D. J McKenzie.
Mrs. Groan—Miss Mamie Matheson.
Mr. Samuel Lovejoy—Mr. Elmer Ribey.
Dr. Old—Mr. Archie McLean.
John Brook—Joshua Howe.
Tom Bravo—Orval Ribey.

It is understood that the young people may produce the play both in Port Elgin and Tiverton, many persons desiring to see it.

NOTICE

Mr. Karcher will buy hogs for me at Turner's. People should gave hogs to the men stationed there. I ask the farmer is it not fairer to give hogs to the men who buy there? We pay the top price always, which is generally known. Remember our butcher shop when you want choice meats. We always try to have the best, and you have your choice.

L. Hamilton.

Red Cross Acknowledgements

Beginning with this month Mrs. Kennedy, treasurer, will report in the first issue of each month the donations she has received for Red Cross in the previous four weeks.

It so happens that in some one week there is little or anything to report, and this method of reporting once a month the receipt of public monies will work out better for the treasurer and as well for those who are working in Red Cross interests.

The report this time contains the receipts of the tea rooms since their beginning.

$5 from Mr. H. McLaren, Sr.

ONTARIO FARMERS!

Existing war conditions demand that you give the question of seed special attention this year. Seed of desirable varieties and high germination power will be factors influencing yields. If you have not secured your seed

Let the Ontario Department of Agriculture help you

Farmers having seed grain or potatoes for sale may forward samples to this office stating varieties, price and quantity.

Farmers wishing to purchase seed are also invited to communicate with this office stating variety, and quantity, and an effort will be made to put them in touch with farmers having seed for sale.

Recruits Wanted for Production

Just as surely as lack of food is strangling Germany day by day, so plenty of food is winning the victory for the allies. The French armies, for instance, were never better fed than now, for France cannot forget the awful lesson of 1870—the failure of her food supply. To this she attributed the loss of that war.

To feed the French soldiers around Verdun, more than 25,500,000 pounds of food a week were required. This gives a faint idea of the colossal task of feeding an army. Canada and Britain have a huge army of fighting heroes on the line; every man MUST have plenty of food, in spite of a world shortage. Upon Canada's food production all principally rely.

The Farmers of Ontario Urgently Need Help

The Department of Agriculture appeals to men and boys to enlist in the farm help campaign. The Department appeals to men unfit for military service, or who find it impossible to enlist in the army. Do your "bit" by helping to increase production of foodstuffs. This is your hour of opportunity.

The farmers of Ontario need the help of retired farmers, of men following no occupation (retired), of business men who can spare a portion of their time. We appeal to all who can so arrange their ordinary affairs to plan to help some farmer friend, particularly in seed time and harvest.

Confer with your county District Representative of the Department of Agriculture, or write, "Farm Help Campaign," care Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

Wheat—Up or Down?

A very prominent milling president says he believes that wheat will go to $1.50 before July. In discussing this item with a prominent farmer, who had sold wheat here last week at $1.78 he said he preferred to get rid of his wheat before the snow left. He had usually noted that grains slumped in price when spring opened and grass was green for pasture. While the green grass may not have any effect on the stocks of wheat, or the price, it would be interesting to keep this little episode in mind, just to see who is the prophet the miller or the producer.

Alex Stewart, the farmer near Harriston, whom John Rowland reported for disloyal talk, was sent up for trial. He was given bonds for $3000 bail.

Congratulations are being extended to Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Ribey. On Saturday they celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. A large number of invited friends and relatives were present in honor of the occasion.

Don't forget the Red Cross dinner in the public library, on Saturday (St. Patrick's Day), from 4 to 8 p. m. The ladies of Port Elgin and surrounding country are asked to contribute baking, butter, eggs, meats, cream, etc. A hot dinner will be served. Admission 25c.

Miss Maggie Webb Wins Medal Contest

There was a fine gathering at the town hall Friday evening to hear the contest in elocution for a medal presented by the W. C. T. U.

There were nine contestants, those taking part showing splendid training and as a result the contest was keen.

The judges were Principal Aylesworth, Rev. W. J. Watt, and Principal Holley, of Southampton. They had quite a task, because the contestants, at least three of them were very close in the race. The readings are provided by the department presided over by Mrs. Van Slyke, who arranges the contest, and makes the allotment of the readings. The judges are provided with charts, and the decisions are arrived at on points gained.

Maggie Webb was the winner of the coveted medal, and from the applause of the gathering it proved the judges had made a selection which met approval. Miss Webb is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Webb, of Saugeen.

The other contestants received a very pretty maple leaf pin. They were Pearl Begg, Elsie Miller, Vera Eidt, Robt. McDonald. Ruth Thornburn, Margaret McEwing, Olive Lyness, Alice Carr. The presentations were made by Mr. Aylesworth.

The musical part of the program was very enjoyable, and was contributed by Miss MacDonald. Miss Hazel Webb. Misses MacDuff and Avis, Mrs. Walker, Mr. R. E. O. Smith.

A nice sum was realized by the W. C. T. U., which will be used by the organization for patriotic purposes

Mr. E. R Sayles presided as chairman.

A bag of Early Eureka seed potatoes will be offered at the Red Cross Dinner next Saturday. These potatoes have been donated by Mr. Jas. H. Johnston.

Rev. J. H. Dyke the Field Secretary of the National Sanitarium, gives a lecture in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening, March 21, at 8 o'clock, on the subject of Tuberculosis, it's nature, treatment and prevention, illustrated with instructive lantern views. All are welcome to this, only a collection to be taken.

Limerick Contest Closes With Next Issue

The Limerick contest is going full speed now, and interest is spreading. Last week we published verses from people in the town, district and one from a reader in Kincardine. This week two appear from Times readers in Wiarton. This gives an idea of the territory The Times covers, and shows that our subscribers read the ads. The contributors vary in ages, so that all classes are represented.

In writing your limerick don't put anything "suggestive" in it. The Times does not want that sort. Make your limerick as amusing as you like, but don't have it "suggestive" or "smart". No limerick used without the writer's name attached.

Remember, next issue is the last chance to submit a limerick. Then the limericks will be sent away to a competent judge, and the winners announced.

The Buyer's Guide you cannot hide,
For in The Times on the right hand side
The articles advertised to be,
Bring customers whom you seldom would see,
If the Buyer's Guide, could hide.

When he looked up the Buyer's Guide,
To see where he could get license to win his bride,
He was sadly put out,
And he turned away to pout,
So the guy, he was left united.

Add an 'ad' to the Buyer's Guide
Your scope for sales will be multiplied.
Bees are drawn to the flowered sweets
As 'ads' appeal to the buyers' needs
Try it and you will be satisfied.

Advertise in the Buyer's Guide,
You'll get awfully chilled if you stand outside,
Business men have come to think
That nothing pays so well as ink
And you'll think so, too, when you have tried.

It pays to advertise in the Buyer's Guide
Then your bargains will go with a slip and a slide:
You'll be glad when you've done it,
You're sure to have won it.
Just try it and see how they glide.

If in the Buyer's Guide you advertise,
The people soon will open wide their eyes,
And search the column for the articles they need,
Your business then will grow with greatest speed.
And the Guide will prove a help to him who buys.

The Buyer's Guide will always tell,
The very place you should buy and sell,
Only the names that you find there
Are the ones will be written on "pages fair"
So take fair warning, don't go to Southampton.

If you advertise in the Buyer's Guide
You'll never walk, but always ride,
Your trade will increase
Your troubles shall cease
And all your wants, will be supplied.

Put your ads. in the Buyers Guide column;
'Tis the very best place to instal 'em:
For customers will come
And business will hum
And you'll prosper like whatchamacallum.

Try an 'ad.' in the Buyer's Guide
And I am sure you'll say with pride,
It is the best I've ever used
I've had such sales, I feel amused.
From here and there, and far and wide.

No Coal Yet

Coal situation is not improved. Gib. McLaren was in Buffalo last week. At Buffalo there are thousand of cars, but the railroads are not hauling them. At present there is but little coal here and deliveries are still in 500 lb lots.

There is lots of coal at the mines, but the railways are not meeting the situation to any extent, so far as this section of the province is concerned.

Pte. Wankel of Seaforth, was visiting Mr. Wm. Wankel this week.

Rev. Dr. Scanlan, preached in Southampton Sunday.

Lots of Robins now. Miss K. MacGillivray and Miss Mann report the beautiful birds on Tuesday.

The Presbyterians cancelled their evening service Sunday, on account of Methodist anniversary.

Lieut. Gaudier, a wounded officer, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. C. Webster, last week.

Mrs. Henry Winch, of Chesley, was a visitor with her mother, Mrs. Gear, last week.

Referring to the paragraph in The Times that Rev. Mr. Brubacher might go west, it should be said that he will remain east for the present.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Haug leave this week to spend a few months with their daughter, Mrs. McLachlan in Elderslie Tp.

The Epworth League meeting at the Methodist church was well attended Monday night. An address was given by E. R. Sayles, on the "Influence of the Press in the Religious, Home and National Life." On Monday next the the young people have a social evening.

For our valiant soldiers,
And for those at sea,
Britain's bravest sailors
Lord, we pray to Thee
Thou can'st shield from dangers,
Earth, and sea, and air—
May our brave men always
Be thy special care.
When in darkness resting
Arms are laid aside
Lord, do Thou protect them,
Still with them abide,
And if they in fighting
Should not think of Thee,
Do not Thou forget them,
Still their Succor be.
Lord, when sick and and wounded,
Far perchance from care,
Let thy healing spirit,
Save them from despair
Saviour, be Thou near them
All the prayers to hear.
Strengthen, watch, and comfort,
When none else is near.
All our unknown dangers,
Lord, to Thee are known
Thou art God of Battles
Thou and Thou alone,
And, although around them
Tens of thousands lie
Thou canst keep in safety
Those for whom we cry.

Real Estate News

There were quite a number of real estate deals last week, town property figuring prominently.

Mr. Wm. McRae has purchased Mrs. Gear's residence and will move in from Saugeen shortly.

Mrs. Gear has bought the former Vandrick property near the Library, owned by Mr. L. Philips.,

Mr. Harry Blindauer has sold to Wm. Overton, his house and has purchased the property on Goderich street owned by Mr. Wismer, formerly the M. Barber residence.

Mr. Bert Nicholson has bought Wm. Hartley's property on Johnson avenue. It is understood that Mr. Hartley has purchased a farm near Elsinore, and will move on it soon.

Mr. Wm. McDonald, is moving on the Smith farm on the 6th of Bruce, now occupied by S. George, who will move to his fifty acres on the 6th.

Mr. Ed. Parfitt, has moved to town, and Mr. A. J. Osborne, has taken possession of the farm.

Mrs. Neil Cairns and, Mrs. Thos. Cairns are very ill at present.

Mrs. John Coulter and Mrs. Scouton, were in Toronto, last week.

Mr. R. J. Ranney, was in Guelph this week attending the Sheep Breeders' convention.

There were seven cases for division court. All were settled out of Court, except C. F. McPherson, vs. W. Baker verdict for defendant without costs.

The marriage was quietly solemnized Tuesday evening March 6th, by the Rev, Mr. Wooton, pastor of the Methodist church, Galt, of Lillie Jennet, daughter of Mrs. John Campbell, Goderich Road, Port Elgin, to Mr. Frank Haight, of Southampton.

R. C. Crawford druggist, and manager for the Bruce Municipal Telephone Co. here, invited the editor to go to Underwood to attend the annual meeting of the telephone Co. Mr. Crawford is quite used to running a car, and when at the top of the mountain he thought the horse could coast down as a car does. Some snow in the horse's hoofs caused it to slip and fall and that stopped the coasting. The horse being down and unable to rise, a debate ensued as to what to do. The editor thought best to sit on the horse's head until the harness was loosed, while the druggist argued that he should sit on the hind legs in order to stop it from kicking. However, the situation was relieved by George Jamieson and John Ribey who put the horse on its pins, chucked the two youths in the cutter and sent them on their way.

Stanley Harman Wounded

Mrs. Wm. Harman received word on Saturday that her only son Stanley, had been wounded in France.

No particulars were given.

Mrs Harman lives alone here. Her husband is in the 160th, and her son in the 70th.

Anniversary Services

The special anniversary services at the Methodist church Sunday were well attended, the church being crowded at night.

Rev. T. L. Kerruish, a former pastor, was the advertised preacher for the day, but illness prevented him from being present. Rev. Mr. Roadhouse, of Southampton, took the services, and he delighted the large gathering with two fine gospel sermons. He is always appreciated by Port Elgin audiences.

The musical part of the services were enjoyable and altogether a very pleasant and profitable day was had. The offerings were also very liberal.

Mr Roadhouse in his evening discourse used the healing of the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda as the basis of his remarks. He noted that Jesus selected the most hopeless case, for the man was not only a paralytic of body, but he was satisfied with his condition. Every generation has its men and women who cannot walk the Christian life. There were many who were church members who were not models of Christian life, and they were content to live that way. That was the startling thing, that was the tragic thing. He noted that the paralytic of the story was always on hand, he liked to be around, just as people to day. They like to go to church, enjoy the singing and the sermon but had no thought of getting rid of their besetting sins. Christ aroused the impotent man not by asking if he wanted improved health, but if he would be made whole. Men needed to be roused to day. Men were needed who would go the whole way in the Christian life, and walk steadfastly in the battle against sin.

Pte. Wilber Lyness

Missing since Oct. 1916

The subject of our sketch this week is Pte. Wilbur Lyness, a Saugeen young man, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lyness.

Wilbur was in Calgary when the war broke out in August 1914, and he at once offered his services to his King and Country. After being trained and going overseas rheumatism developed and he was discharged.

He came back to Canada and recovered, so that in October 1915 he was again accepted and went overseas and finally to France where he was in all the "drives" in the spring, summer and early fall of 1916.

In October last Mr. Lyness received word that his son was missing after one of the big attacks, and since that time no information has been received from headquarters.

Pte. Wilbur Lyness left Saugeen seven or eight years ago for the west, and was for a time in the farming districts, but later settled in Calgary. He was a strong man of splendid physique, and 30 years of age in October.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyness have received no official word of the whereabouts of Wilbur, they wait anxious hoping that he may yet be reported as well.

Hockey

There was a good attendance at the hockey game last Wednesday night. Paisley played the Port team and they were beaten 10 to 7. Dr. Power refereed the game, and the boys were kept right to their knitting. There were some changes in the locals. Sid Bell found himself very useful as cover point, scoring four of the goals. Eric McGillivray played forward along with Alex Mann and Edgar Ridout. There were some good rushes. Roy Wankel of the Juniors put up a great game in goal, while Kuhl at point played good defence. For the visitors their defence worked well, and they have a couple of speedy forwards. The game was clean and the spectators enjoyed it.

TOWN TOPICS

Saturday is the 17th day of old Ireland.

Mrs Charles Bricker and family, have removed to Port Colborne.

Mr. R. S. Begg was in Toronto, last week.

Mr. Ed. Forrester, of Kincardine, is on a trip to the west.

FROM MONSTER TO GOOD KING

Life of Lewanika, King of African Barotse.

A Monument to Work of One Good Man.

In the heart of the sombre African jungle there died recently one of the greatest and last of the kings of the unknown, though not undiscovered, world—a ruler of one of those spaces bright to your fancy, dim on the map, black in truth, a part of "heart of darkness." The dead king was called Lewanika, head chief of the Barotse, and he was autocrat of the lives and destinies of some millions of black men dwelling in the forbidding valley of the upper Zambesi. Excepting Abyssinia, his was the greatest native empire on the barbaric continent, and the man himself perhaps the last of those picturesque and terrible monarchs whose doings and undoings took on a frightful shadow from contrast with the encroaching light of the world outside.

Lewanika, dead at 64, saw his country emerge from the wildest, murkiest savagery to a place literally within the slow sun of civilization. Beginning life as butcher, outrager, and wholesale assassin, he closed it a constructive and beneficent old barbarian, in love with the brilliant and mysterious great lands across the seas.

In his lifetime he abolished savage punishments, brutal sacrifices and the horrors of some forms of idolatry; he built and maintained schools wrote a fixed body of law, admitted the white man and his ideas, and even established female suffrage of a kind from which his neighbors across the big tides may wish to adopt something.

To the many of us who remember "Darkest Africa" as a phrase, with a connotation of cannibalism, the story of Lewanika must be of interest. He was born in 1850 in troublous times, far from Lialui, the capital city of the Barotse (or more properly Marotse). Of name he was Lobosi, and he was the twenty-second ruler of his line, which had been established in the seventeenth century and had reigned with innumerable interruptions, fatalities and restorations.

When Lobosi was born his uncle Lepopo sat on the throne as chief of the tribes in a most truly Barotsean manner, it must be said. One of his chief diversions was to chase down some of the innumerable children of subject tribes and beat them to a ton island in the Zambesi near Lialui, where he fed them to the crocodiles for his own and his tribe's amusement. The bloody Lepopo was deposed and assassinated after eleven years of this kind of circus, and succeeded by another uncle of Lobosi, who was himself expelled after brief rule to make way for Lobosi who ascended the throne in 1874, at the tender age of 17.

In the early part of his reign Lobosi exhibited all the interest in savagery that had graced his uncle so fatally. The patient Barotse stood for this kind of rule until 1884, when Lobosi brought himself to fail by torturing and murdering his own brother. He fled into exile, but returned with an army the following year and put the new ruler to rout. He reascended his throne after changing his soiled name to Lewanika.

On his re-entry into Lialui the victorious Lewanika found among his people a strange creature, a white man with quiet, conciliatory way, who had come to take nothing, and was decidedly anxious to make friends. Lewanika long repulsed this visitor, but eventually yielded, received him and permitted his overtures.

This man was Francis Coillard, the famous Zambesi missionary. When he went to his first meal with the king, that worthy squatted on the ground in complete nudity, and devoured ducks with his hands and teeth. Toward the end of his life the king had learned even an excellent taste in European foods, wines and table fittings.

Coillard, by unshakable patience, got himself admitted to the confidence and trust of the king, who in time treated him with high honor and consulted him about the government of his tribe.

"What," he cried out one day in the face of recurring trouble, "shall I do with my people?"

Coillard's reply is preserved in his diary, left on his death at Lewanika's court in 1904:

"Take the secret spear from under your cloak and throw it away; renounce vengeance once for all, attach your people to yourself by making their welfare your first object; put a stop to theft; give them justice, quiet sleep, and good food to eat."

In 1902 Lewanika, attired in good European clothes and invariably equipped with a silk hat, attended the coronation of King Edward—Barotseland having before that time become a voluntary British protectorate. King Edward received him with great interest and British society took him up and lionized him.

Lewanika went home with his head unturned, but with several new notions piled into it. He worked on the problem for four years before he dared anything so revolutionary as freeing the slaves. Then, even two years after Coillard had died and his guiding hand had been removed, Lewanika abolished human serfdom in his country. Civilization had taken hold with him, a rare thing in a savage prince.

FACE WRINKLES.

Some Advice to Women Who Fear Their Appearance.

That wrinkles are bound to come even on the fairest face is not altogether so, for with care these telltale furrows can be prevented from making their appearence if you will take proper pains. There are, however, many women who do not know how to ward them off, and to them the following advice is recommended: Women suppose that crow's feet are the most important sign of age as far as wrinkles go, and so long as they have not these they imagine that they can hide their years. Nothing could be farther from the truth. At the base of the ear by the time you are thirty one little line will make its appearance. Every ten years after that another little tally will be marked there by the hand of time. Take good care then when smoothing your visage by massage that this little corner will not be neglected, or despite all the rest your secret will be betrayed.

Women particularly have a tendency very early in life to show lines about the mouth, which are not only a disfigurement at all times, but often become so accentuated by fatigue or illness as to completely alter the expression of the face. Most readers of these lines will probably resent the accusation that [illegible] largely due to the pernicious habit of chewing gum. If you do not chew gum, however, [illegible] surely they [illegible] occasionally in caramels or in [illegible] of a like nature which require an unusual amount of effort in mastication. It is impossible to eat these things without making faces and frequent facial distortion is sure to leave its mark. Another reason for the furrows around a woman's mouth is her nervous temperament and the consequent volubility of her speech. Actors and public speakers invariably have these wrinkles in the vicinity of the mouth as an inevitable outcome of the extra effort which the persuance of their careers brings to bear upon the facial muscles in that region.

No beneficial effect can be accomplished without the abolition of the harmful cause. If you will avoid doing the things which are detrimental to the beauty of the lower part of the face, such as making faces when you talk, you can, by the aid of careful and persistent massage with astringent lotions, prevent appearance of the marks. Apropos of astringent lotions, it should be borne in mind that in all treatments of the face three things are absolutely necessary: First, the thorough cleansing of the epiderm; secondly, the softening of the tissues, and while they are in this state the moulding takes place through massage and the application of bandages, and finally friction with astringent preparations, which cause the parts under treatment to become fixed in the desired location.

CHILDHOOD AILMENTS

The ills of childhood come swiftly and too often before a doctor can be called in or medicine obtained the mother will always safeguard her little one by keeping Baby's Own Tablets in the home. This medicine always does good—it can never do harm. Concerning it Mrs. Napoleon Lambert, St. Ignace, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are an excellent medicine for childhood ailments and I am well pleased with their use." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MILITARY HOSPITAL LANTERN SLIDES

An Ontario minister the other day borrowed from the Military Hospitals Commission a set of lantern slides. These slides show what goes on at the hospitals and sanatoria. That is, they show something of how our injured soldiers are being restored to health and to power for self-support, however serious their injuries may be. The minister exhibited the slides at three country churches under his charge. In returning the set he writes:

"My recording steward, who is also the postmaster and chairman of the local recruiting league, says they should be shown in every community. They meet the unrest in many families who have feared that the maimed who return will be forced to sell lead pencils or such like.

"What I should have done was to ask for them for a longer period and put them on in every available church in this district. A man with a well-prepared lecture and a few local slides could render a valuable service to the country, both in allaying the unrest referred to and in removing the prejudice in some families from which recruits might be secured."

The slides, with explanatory notes, may be borrowed by ministers and other responsible persons free of charge. Application should be made to the Military Hospitals Commission, 22 Victoria street, Ottawa.

Baking Bread for the Army

"Bakers, attention!"

At the front the words of command ring out in the great hall. From their position, bent double over long troughs, 200 men straighten bolt upright, head erect, eyes steady, hands rigid at their sides.

"Carry on!"

Immediately 400 hands plunge into the billowy dough and the work of kneading begins again. A man clad in a sleeveless shirt, wearing a cook's cap, passes by me, bearing a heavy load of fresh dough, which he flings down a "shoot" to the floor below.

We are interested [illegible] in the process of providing bread for an army. Here, in a former factory, the bread of the British armies in the field is being made. One hundred and twenty thousand two-pound loaves of bread are each day baked in the ovens of this bakery. I was given a slice of the bread. It was crisp, appetizing and excellent. Day and night the work is carried on by enlisted men of the army—men who wear their khaki as proudly as any of the troops in the front-line trenches. The division of labor is admirable. Every device which tends to increase the efficiency of the men has been installed. Yet it is hand-made, one might also say home-made, bread that is delivered to the men at the front.

Here in the long shed, the flour that has just come in from Canada is stacked, and, passing through the hands of skilled workmen, is turned into bread as if by magic. A steady stream of kneaded dough, fresh leavened, is being carried to the shoots; below it is gathered up and slung on flour-sprinkled tables, cut into round lumps about eight inches in diameter, each lump forming a loaf; each is carefully weighed to make all loaves of identical size. Then the loaves are shoveled into the ovens, baked to a turn, drawn out, carted into the adjoining storeroom, where they are left to cool; when cooled the fresh bread is packed into sacks, loaded into goods' vans, which wait right at the door of the building, and twelve hours from the time it has left this bakery the bread is in the hands of the quartermasters ready for distribution to the men.

Industrialism in its highest state of perfection never produced a more efficient organization. The men work at high speed. Military discipline prevails. There is no talking or chaffing. Here there is none of that atmosphere of personal irresponsibility so prevalent in industrial enterprises. I watched for a long time these men at their work, straining every nerve and muscle to do their best as efficiently as possible, and as we passed from hall to hall the command, "Bakers, attention!" brought the men instantly to the rigid position demanded by the drill regulations.

Looking over the long rows of faces I was not a little astonished to find such a variety of ages. Gray-haired men at work side by side with what seemed to be mere boys. On inquiring, I learned that fathers and sons often enlisted together for this special service, skilled men of the trade, who, before the war, had carried on their work for the most part in individual shops.

Some of us who have been taught to believe that the Englishman is a confirmed individualist, that he is incapable of organization in the German sense, must revise our notions. Those who have been led to believe that the British workman is opposed to compulsory military service and that trade union men are submitting recalcitrantly to army regulations must change their point of view. As a soldier here, a trade union man, said to me, "The finest union in the world is the army."

This great bakery is but a model of many other such establishments which I visited. Nearby are warehouses filled with stores for the troops in the field. The amount of goods handled in one consignment is stupendous; 50,000 tins of jam, 20,000 boxes of meat, cases of onions by the thousand, bags of sugar by the 10,000, boxes of tea by the ton, and the like. Brought in from all parts of the world direct by transport the goods are stored in the warehouses, stacked in piles so arranged that though hundreds of thousands of cases and sacks are here stored, yet almost at a glance the exact amount of the goods on hand can be counted. The supplies are so vast that no matter how great the requisition may be it can be instantly filled. I walked through long rows of goods stacked up in blocks as high as city houses. The different types of wares are arranged in squares resembling a city street. Here is a square all of sugar; close by, one of jam; beyond, another of marmalade and so on. All the goods bear British trade marks, with the exception of the tinned meat. We walked for half a mile through this strange and silent city of foodstuffs. "Le pays de Cocagne" (the land of plenty), as a Russian companion remarked to me, staring up at a high edifice made of bags of sugar.

It is a fact admitted by everyone that no army in the field is better cared for or fed than the British troops in France, but at the same time it is a current belief that no army is as extravagant. This latter opinion, which is widely held not merely in neutral countries, but even in England, would not seem to be borne out by the facts. During a brief sojourn, I found everywhere signs of rigid economy. On the contrary, as far as could be observed A regimental cook at a base told me that he had saved 3,000 rations during the last month. This does not mean that the men are stinted in any way, but the allowance of fresh meat, bread, butter, cheese, jam and tea is greater than needed to satisfy the appetite of the average man, and as the rations are pooled, the saving is made without anyone noticing it, while the economy to the nation in pounds, shillings and pence is enormous.

Efficiency and economy are the two dominant factors of success in modern warfare as in modern industry. The old spirit of "muddle" to which many clung so tenaciously during the first and even the second year of the war has been swept by the board. The third, and as many hope and confidently believe, the last year of the war is opening auspiciously. The signs of success are not to be read exclusively in the bulletins from the fighting front, nor estimated by the number of prisoners taken or miles of trenches captured, but rather by watching how smoothly, silently, irresistibly the great machine of the army, now perfected in every part, is gearing up the speed of efficiency, economizing and conserving its energy and resources.—London Mail.

Almost within hearing of the roar of Niagara Falls is a little village on the line of the New York Central called La Salle, and few of the thousands who daily fly through its very door-yard know that this unassuming little town was the birthplace of commerce on the Great Lakes.

In January, 1679, a French nobleman, Robert de La Salle, came to this point on the Niagara River, and at once began to build a sailing vessel, with which he hoped to carry on trade with the western Indies. On the 7th of the following August the craft was launched. She bore the name of Griffon, was of [illegible] tons burden and carried a crew of thirty-four men, all but one of whom were Frenchmen. The vessel was armed with seven small cannon and was an object of wonder and alarm to the neighboring Indians, who regarded it as a floating fort. On the day of the launching the Griffon set sail and in due time reached the mouth of Green Bay, Lake Michigan, where the return trip began. The voyage had been successful and with a load of fine furs they started on their homeward way, but disaster overtook them and in a severe storm the pioneer foundered with all on board.

FOUND BOMBS FOR MUNITION PLANTS IN U. S.

Arrest of German Chemist in Hoboken May Reveal Wide Plot.

NOT FOR WILSON

Suspect's Room Was a Laboratory—Other Arrests Expected.

Hoboken, N. J., report: With the arrest here to-day of Fritz Kolb, a German, the authorities expressed the belief that they had frustrated a well-developed plot to aid Germany by blowing up munition plants in this country engaged in turning out contracts for the Entente allies. The police said they found in Kolb's room two bombs, which, according to rumors that had reached them, were to be sent to President Wilson.

After a preliminary investigation they announced themselves as convinced that the plans of the alleged plotters had to do entirely with destroying war supplies and that no attack on the President's life was contemplated. The police also said they had come into possession of information which might help them in solving the Black Tom, N. J., explosion, and the destruction of the Kingsland, N. J., plant of the Canadian Car and Foundry Company, in which large munition supplies for Entente allies were blown up.

Four other men were questioned by the authorities to-night. Chief of Police Hayes, of this city, said they were friends of Kolb, but that he was convinced they knew nothing of the alleged plot.

MORE ARRESTS EXPECTED.

"We are following leads which may result in additional arrests at any time," declared Chief Hayes. "We are co-operating with the New York police and the neutrality squad of the collector of the port of New York. All of us have been working on this for several weeks."

Kolb was found in a small hotel, opposite the piers of the Hamburg-American Line. His room, it was asserted, bore the appearance of having been used as a laboratory. Besides the two bombs, the police said they found some tubing resembling that used in ships, part of it brass and part of it steel. The bombs were made of this material. There also were a flask of black powder, two lead cans, three bottles containing gasoline, benzine and alcohol, tools, miscellaneous materials trinitrotoluol and black disc powder. Experts from the New York Detective Bureau said the disc powder was new to them, but they believed it was similar to some used in Germany.

BOMBS OF GREAT POWER.

The bombs, the experts declared, also were of a new type and apparently of great power. They were about seven inches long, an inch and a half in diameter and filled with an explosive which was taken out by the police to be analyzed before they would express an opinion as to its nature. About the steel body of the bomb was wound a thin copper tubing, perforated at intervals. The fuses were contained in its tube, the evident purpose being to protect them, the convolutions being designed to permit a considerable length of fuse being used, so that time would be given for anyone planting the bombs to reach a safe distance before they exploded.

The workmanship of the bombs, the police said, indicated ingenuity and skill. They were wrapped up in a shirt which Kolb, they said, admitted was his.

Kolb denied that he had anything to do with making the bombs, but said, according to the police, that his room was used for that purpose by a man he knew only as "Karl," whom he met in a saloon. He added that he did not know where Karl could be found at this time.

Kolb said he was born in Cologne, Germany, and came to this country shortly after the war began on a Standard Oil steamer, working his way. He made several trips also between this country and Mexico, he said, but not recently. At various times, he said, he worked as a bar-keeper and waiter and also admitted that he was a druggist and had sought a position as a weigher in chemical houses. He gave his age as 33.

NO FAMINE IN BRITAIN YET

London cable: A party of neutral journalists who made a tour of London's docks yesterday were impressed at the sight of the tremendous cargoes of food brought in by freshly-arrived ships, the aggregate running into hundreds of thousands of tons. Fifty ships were unloading grain and chilled beef from America, South America and Canada, sugar from Bombay, and other cargoes to augment Britain's supply. The whole sight of brisk activity impressed the newspaper correspondents as a vivid reply to Germany's brag that she was going to starve Britain out within a few weeks by the submarine campaign and bring an end to the war. "We're getting all the ships we can handle," said a dock official. "The German submarine frightfulness is not felt here."

DO AUTHORITIES EXPECT THE WAR TO CARRY OVER TO YEAR OF 1918

Churchill Urges Preparation—Blockade to End It and Save Huge Sacrifices.

London cable: (New York Sun cable.)—A speech from Winston Churchill in the House of Commons yesterday, urging that preparations be made immediately for the 1918 campaign, is construed as indicating that the authorities do not expect to end the war this year.

Mr. Churchill intimated a strong belief that the blockade will force the collapse of the Central Empires and bring about the finish of the war in 1918 without such huge sacrifices of life as would be necessary in forcing a military decision. This view is widely entertained, and Mr. Churchill's wide reputation as a man who ordinarily favors action gives especial significance to such a declaration.

The Government knows that internal conditions in Germany and Austria-Hungary are very bad, that they are becoming worse rapidly, and that as the nations behind the fighting lines grow weaker than the armies, they cannot support the pressure indefinitely.

Men of the Churchill school, including the naval party, believe a continuance of the blockade of economic pressure will force Germany to send its high sea fleet out for a last desperate effort. This is keenly desired by advocates of extreme measures for the destruction of the German naval power, who urge no peace will be safe while Germany possesses its fleet.

Meanwhile, with the mobilizing of the man power resources of the whole world, and the tightening of the blockade, the Allies expect to starve the central empire into submission. This view is strengthened by the fact that in the House of Commons A. Bonar Law has refused to discuss the Salonika campaign, indicating that, despite wide-spread criticism, it will continue as part of the plan to starve the interior countries.

TRAGEDY AT SEELEY'S BAY

Blood-Stained Chips Found On Mrs. Hill's Farm.

Free, Owing Rent, Had Been Asked to Vacate.

Seeley's Bay report says: Blood stained chips, picked from the chip-strewn barnyard of the farm occupied by Mrs. Hattie Hill, the sixty-year-old widow whose mutilated remains were found in a horse stall on Saturday, will play an important part in the prosecution of the murderer of the woman.

Coroner F. M. Young on Saturday, in his investigation prior to the summoning of the jury, made a search of the barnyard for evidence. Behind a sleigh he found the chips. While in the barn he questioned Arthur Free, who occupied with his wife a portion of Mrs. Hill's house, regarding the freshly-marked post of a stall. Free is said to have replied that he had torn the post with kindling wood. The chips fit the freshly-cut post.

Free is still missing. He is believed to be in the neighborhood. A warrant has been issued for his arrest for failure to attend the coroner's inquest, which finished investigation to-night.

Crown Attorney M. M. Brown, who was present at the inquest to-night, is asking for the assistance of the Provincial police.

It was submitted to-night that Free's agreement with the murdered woman regarding the occupancy of a portion of Mrs. Hill's home and farm had expired, that he had been asked to vacate, and that he owed Mrs. Hill considerable rent.

Many neighbors told of responding to Mrs. Free's request for assistance on Saturday morning when she discovered the body.

"You must not blame me for this," one said when asked regarding Free's actions and remarks in their presence.

In a state bordering on collapse Mrs. Free was questioned regarding the murder. She told nothing which might help the jury in naming the murderer.

On Saturday night, she stated, she had taken clothes of her husband's to the home of a neighbor. She said that she had recently discovered them, and the space which they might occupy in a trunk was needed for papers. On Monday she brought the clothes back. The clothes were lying in her home to-day.

The condition of the body when they entered the stall indicated, witnesses swore, that the widow had been dragged into the stall. The clothes were over the head, which rested under the feet of the horse.

The horse stall was locked from within, but the catch was of a description that could be fastened from outside of the stall.

The doctor who performed the autopsy stated that death had been due to a blow which had injured the skull. Five ribs were broken. These were broken by the horse, and were fractured after death had taken place.

In the afternoon a friend of the daughter of the deceased came to the murdered woman's farm and shot the pigs which had chewed the murdered woman's remains. He did not consider the animals fit for human consumption after they had eaten human flesh.

DIVULGED PLOT TO BOMB PLANT

German Held at Hoboken Tells Black Tom Plans.

Two Suspects Held for Further Examination.

Hoboken, N. J., despatch: Fritz Kolb, a German in whose possession two bombs and other explosive material were found yesterday, and Hans Schwartz, arrested early to-day, were held for further examination in court to-day in connection with an alleged plot to blow up munitions ordered for the Entente allies.

Schwartz, who says he is a chemist, thirty-seven years of age, was held as a suspicious person. The police assert he has worked in hotels and cafes in Hoboken at various times. Schwartz made a long statement to Chief of Police Hayes, in which he revealed, the police allege, plans for another explosion at Black Tom, N. J., yesterday with Kolb and himself as the conspirators.

Schwartz, whose identity was at first concealed, denied, the police say, that he was connected in any way with the Black Tom explosion last summer, or the explosion at Kingsland. The failure of the plot to blow up Black Tom yesterday, the police declare Schwartz admitted, was due to faulty construction of the bombs.

Kolb was identified at police headquarters as a former employee of the Canadian Car & Foundry Company at Kingsland by Thomas Steele, a negro, also a former worker at that plant. Steele told the police he worked in the same room with Kolb, where there had been an explosion previous to the great fire, and that of twenty-eight men employed in the room Kolb was the man who disappeared.

MAN WHO POISONED SOUP?

Chicago despatch: The authorities of Hoboken, N. J., were asked by Chief of Police Schuettler to compare a description of Jean Crones with Hans Schwartz, who is held there in connection with an alleged bomb plot.

Crones a year ago poisoned the soup served at a banquet given in honor of Archbishop Mundelein at the University Club of this city. He fled the city, and thus far has eluded pursuit.

TO ARM SHIPS IF PERMITTED

U. S. President Seeks to Find His Powers

If Possible, to Act Without Congress.

Washington report: Further action by President Wilson in the German situation was postponed to-day pending a decision by his legal advisors whether he has power to arm American merchantmen in spite of the failure of Congress to pass a resolution conferring such authority.

The question was referred to Attorney-General Gregory and Secretary Lansing, and probably will be decided in time for consideration at to-morrow's Cabinet meeting—the first to be held in the new administration. The inauguration ceremonies occupied most of the time to-day, but members of the Cabinet and other officials found opportunity to discuss the subject.

A determination to arm the merchantmen if a legal way to do so can be found was generally apparent.

The President has placed squarely before the Senate the responsibility for changing its rules during the special session begun to-day, so that filibustering by a small group of Senators cannot prevent action by Congress. In the meantime he is preparing to take such steps as he can to meet the crisis and defend American rights.

While the arming of merchantmen is the step most considered, it is pointed out that the President has the right to convoy American vessels. This course has been opposed by the Navy Department, however, principally for strategical reasons.

Another step suggested is that the shipping board take over American merchantmen, arm them as naval auxiliaries, and send them abroad.

The President has been inclined to believe that certain old statutes still in force might prevent him from furnishing guns to merchantmen, but some of his advisers hold that a broader and truer interpretation of these laws will show that they have no application to the present situation.

CUBAN REVOLT ENDED.

New York, Report—Prospects of a speedy settlement of the Cuban revolution have been brought about, it was announced here to-day, by Dr. Orestes Ferrara, representative here of the Liberals who are in revolt against the Cuban Government, through a guarantee to the Liberals by the U. S. Government of fair elections in Oriente province and the recognition of R. Fernandez of the liberal party as the duly authorized military commander of the province.

SUBS. TRAPPED NEAR GERMANY?

British Said to Have Great Nets There.

Something Causes Dearth of Torpedoings.

(By F. A. Wray.)

London cable says: Have the German submarines given up their campaign, or have they been trapped in a British net?

That is the subject of an interesting discussion in naval circles here to-day. To understand the situation that has given rise to such speculation, it is necessary to consider the following figures relative to the submarine campaign, which has dwindled down to almost nothing since the close of February.

In the first five days of March the aggregate of shipping destroyed has been three ships, of 6,376 tons, or a daily average of only 1,275 tons. During the twenty-eight days of February there were sunk 208 ships, aggregating 482,070 tons, or a daily average of 17,272 tons. In ordinary words, by the terms of this comparison the daily toll of destruction has fallen off eighty-seven per cent. The abrupt decrease in submarine operations is shown even more strikingly in comparison with the results of the first five days of February, in which period there were sunk thirty-one ships, of 41,557 tons.

Naval men explain this fact in two ways. First, that the German authorities have decided the submarine campaign is not worth the candle, and consequently have recalled all or most of the raiders. Second, the submarines sent out early in February had exhausted their supplies by the end of the month, and started back to replenish them, while others came out to take their places. It is also believed that the sudden falling off in sinkings is due to the fact that both of these returning submarines were caught in a British trap laid along the shallow waters bordering the German coast. This barrier is said to be so firmly and extensively constructed that no vessels can enter or leave German North Sea ports.

FELL TO DEATH.

Detroit Hotel Guest Set Fire to His Bed.

Detroit despatch: Trapped in a fire filled room on the seventh floor of the Hotel Tuller at 6 o'clock this morning, Edward D. Voorhees, a guest, dropped from a window ledge and his brains were dashed out on the pavement in the court below.

Clad only in his pajamas, Voorhees clung coolly to the ledge nearly five minutes. Then, reaching with one hand for a sheet, lowered from the floor above, his grasp slipped and he fell. Panic prevailed all the time Voorhees was crying for help.

The cry of fire had been flashed through the hotel by telephone, and bellboys and guests, half-clad, rushed into the corridors and to the windows. Many windows looked out on the court, and scores saw Voorhees hanging from the ledge. He fell to his death while they were still shouting encouragements.

Voorhees evidently went to bed smoking, and after he fell asleep his cigarette started a fire in the bed. This smouldered and spread until the smoke awoke Voorhees. Fire cut off his escape by the door, and he rushed to the window. Smashing the glass he let air in and the smothered flames burst out furiously with a sound like an explosion. Then Voorhees climbed out the window and hung suspended two hundred feet in the air until forced to let go.

BAPAUME RIDGE.

Said to Be Limit of the German Retirement.

(By Stewart Lyon, Special Correspondent of the Canadian Press.)

London cable: "The increase in the enemy's resistance to the British pressure in the vicinity of Bapaume leads the experts here to believe that the Bapaume Ridge is the limit of his voluntary retirement, and that it is his intention to cling to the line at Arras, Bapaume and Peronne, while launching an attack elsewhere. Local opinion suggests that General Hindenburg, who knows the Russian front better than the west, still believes the war can be won in the east by shortening the front opposite the British, and obtaining a stronger line for a purely defensive warfare against General Haig's attack. When the ground becomes fit the German leader may hope to release a sufficient number of divisions and commence a fresh offensive against Russia, where internal dissensions may turn to his advantage."

This possibility is not to be lightly dismissed. In open fighting the Germans would have a better chance against the Russians than in France, where the allies would welcome a war of manoeuvre at any moment.

The official statement that, owing to a world-wide shortage, the British people may have to do without potatoes late in the spring and early summer attracts more attention than the situation on the Ancre. The result is that everyone is digging in preparation of potato plots on an unprecedented scale.

TURKS ABANDON STRONG POSITION ON THE NILE IN UPPER EGYPT

Advance of British Troops Drove Them Out—Fliers Did Them Much Damage.

London cable: An official report from Egypt says that the Turks have abandoned a strong position in the neighborhood of Sheikh Nuran, west of Shelial. The statement follows:

"Turkish forces abandoned, in the face of our advancing troops, a very strong position in the neighborhood of Sheikh Nuran, west of Shelial, after having spent two months in the construction of a formidable system of defences.

"Yesterday our aircraft carried out a series of bombing attacks on enemy troops, railway trains, rolling stocks and the permanent way. About ten high explosive bombs were dropped. Much damage was caused to personnel and material."

Shelial is in Upper Egypt, on the Nile, about four hundred miles south of Cairo.

There have been no recent reports of fighting in this region. In various parts of the country uprisings have occurred during the war, usually on the part of tribesmen led by Turkish officers. So far as the reports have shown, little headway has been made by these forces.

NEW GROUND INTERESTING

Territory Taken Over by British On the Somme.

Shows Different Characteristics to Old.

British Headquarters in France, via London cable: The characteristically laconic reference in an official communication regarding enemy artillery activity south of the Somme has been the British method of publicly announcing the fact that they had taken over still more of the western line, and that the meeting point of the British and French troops had now been established well below that small but famous river. As a matter of fact, the Somme is a most disappointing stream to have had such a large share in the world's history. It wanders rather aimlessly from pool to pool in the flat lowlands, is occasionally directed into canals, turning hundreds of mill-wheels, and then slips idly along into the sea.

The new territory defended by the British troops just north of the river, however, is extremely interesting. It is deeply shell-scarred, but there is not the same chaos as was found about Pozieres, Beaumont-Hamel, Mametz and other villages which have been absolutely obliterated by the war. Such places as Faucourt, Dompiere, Assevillers and Estrees behind the new section of the British line, still show evidence of having once been habitations. Such large farm buildings and factories form most picturesque ruins.

Dompiere cemetery is a remarkable reminder of the ravages of war. Graves and strong underground vaults have been blown open by the relentless and remorseless shell-fire to such an extent that the aspect of the cemetery resembles some fantastic idea of the physical resurrection of the dead. The upheaval was so great that vaults appear to have burst from within.

CHINA TO JOIN ALLIES AT ONCE

President Said to Have Yielded to Cabinet

Which Declared for Break With Germany.

Pekin cable says: The immediate breaking off of relations with Germany is expected here, and it is generally predicted that China will join the Entente.

This belief is due to the fact that despatches from Tien-Tsin say that Tuan-Chi-Jui, who resigned March 4th and left for Tien-Tsin, has decided to return to the capital immediately and resume the Premiership. It is said that President Li Yuan-Hung has agreed to give the Cabinet full power to frame the foreign policy.

The Cabinet is known to favor the severing of relations with Germany, and Parliament is showing a disposition to follow the leadership of Tuan-Chi-Jui rather than that of the President.

A despatch from Pekin March 4th said the Cabinet had decided to join the United States in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, but that the President refused to approve of such action. Thereupon the Premier resigned and left for Tien-Tsin, accompanied by several other members of the Cabinet.

NO SHIP SUNK BY THE U-BOATS

Three Consecutive Days Without Any Victims Being Reported.

Submarine Threat Holds Many Boats in United States Ports.

London cable: Another day has passed without any record of U-boat outrages. This is the third consecutive day in which sinkings appear to have been suspended, and in which no German submarines have been in evidence.

CARMANIA REACHES NEW YORK.

New York despatch: The Associated Press says the British passenger liner Carmania, with sixty-one cabin passengers, from Liverpool, passed safely through the submarine zone and arrived here late to-day. Passengers said the vessel departed at night, escorted by war craft.

The Carmania was convoyed through the submarine danger zone with nine other ships bound for North and South American ports, passengers reported.

The Cunard liner Orduna, which left here Feb. 24 for Liverpool, has arrived safely, according to cable advices received here to-day by officials of the line. The Orduna had 119 passengers.

CAMPAIGN'S EFFECT ON SAILINGS.

The Associated Press to-night carries the following: "As a direct result of the German blockade decree of January 31, which also closed to neutral shipping the British ports of Kirkwall and Falmouth, 53 steamers of American, Swedish, Danish, Dutch and Norwegian registry have been prevented from sailing from the port of New York, or having sailed are now tied up for an indefinite time at Halifax for examination. According to figures compiled here to-day by shipping authorities these ships, had they sailed as scheduled, would have taken from this port approximately 250,000 tons of cargo. Fourteen of the vessels would have carried passengers and United States mails.

"The heaviest sufferer has been Holland. Agents here of lines flying the Dutch flag reported to-day that 25 vessels which would have sailed under conditions prevailing prior to February 1 are tied up at their docks or have been detained at Halifax for examination. Ten freight ships of neutral nations, classed as tramps, also are held here, awaiting orders to sail.

"The American line, which now has its entire fleet of six passenger ships in port, has missed eight sailing dates and all passenger traffic to Europe, other than that carried by vessels of the Entente allies and Spain, has been suspended, the same conditions prevailing for west-bound passenger traffic.

"The number of ships of the Entente allies departing from New York during the period from February 1 to March 5 is shown by port records to be 20 ships less than sailed between December 29 and January 31. The sailings were as follows:

RUNNING FIGHT WITH U-BOAT

Boston despatch: A running fight in the English Channel on January 31 between a German submarine and the British steamer Foyle, in which 30 shots were exchanged, two of which struck the Foyle, was described by Captain James Evans, of the steamer, upon her arrival to-day from Liverpool. The engagement took place while the Foyle was on a voyage from Liverpool, where she had discharged a cargo from Portland, Maine.

Captain Evans said his vessel was just turned into the channel when he sighted a vessel afire a couple of miles ahead. Upon hearing shots fired at the burning vessel, Captain Evans changed the Foyle's course, and increased her speed. The submarine sighted her, however, and began a shell-fire attack at long range.

One shot from the submarine tore a hole through the upper deck of the Foyle, and another struck on the port side, grazing the bridge and scattering fragments at the captain's feet. The Foyle, which carries a 4.7 gun mounted aft, returned the fire, and the chase continued for more than two hours. The submarine finally withdrew.

It won't be for us to say whether U. S. should go to war, but it does look like wilful waste to see a perfectly good navy such as the U. S. has, knocking its heels together while American shipping is practically tied up.

The Liberals of East Middlesex held a convention last week, and women were there to become acquainted with the workings of these wonderful political machines. One thing, both parties will have to make their conventions last a couple of days. There will be so many more things to discuss and so many more people to take part, with so much more to say.

A report of the inauguration ceremonies of President Wilson says "there was no fuss, no feathers, and no inaugural ball." Well, that's one on Ontario politicians When the splendor of the entertainment given at Government House, on the opening of the Ontario Legislature, is taken in consideration, it does look as if the Yankees had a better idea of the eternal fitness of things.

No doubt the Ontario government means well, and its plans are well formed to settle returned soldiers in New Ontario. But we are disposed to believe as The Times interview with a returned soldier showed, in a recent issue, that these men do not want to be isolated in new parts of the country With no greater expense the government could place these men on land in Old Ontario. Here they would be right alongside practical farmers, and they would be more likely to remain on the land.

The bar will soon be gone in Quebec Constant efforts are being made to abolish the booze there. A new law coming in force May 1st provides for the abolition of the treating system. A liquor seller permitting treating on his premises can be prepared to pay a heavy fine. The closing hour is fixed for 9 o'clock every night except Saturday, when doors will shut at 7 o'clock. It has long been held that if the treating system were abolished the license system would lose the bulk of its evils. This may be so, but province after province of Canada can be heard saying that the bar is a bane under any and all circumstances.

Some weekly publishers, relicts of a system tolerated years ago, still permit their papers to be used as mediums by the shifty individual who wants "to take a crack" at someone else, or perhaps contributes some "personal" intended to injure the social standing of young people. These contributions are usually made by persons who want to operate in the dark, and do not want their names known. The publishers who will give publicity to this sort of stuff are few now a days, and it is all for the best. But the editor is not the only one who is tried by frequent unsigned articles, which may look good at first sight. The preacher is often perplexed to know what to do with complaints. A story is vouched for concerning one eminent divine, who, whenever a member came with a complaint he took a blank book and his pen and said, "Now I shall write down what you say and you can sign it and then I shall know just what your complaint is." And he carried it for forty years and opened it perhaps a thousand times, but he never wrote a word in it. When people have to sign their complaints they usually prefer not to make them.

There is one thing sure, The Times is read by all classes of all ages, and they read inquiringly, too, The Limerick contest has proven it. The contest is all to the advantage of Times advertisers. This is a day of keen competition, and the small town merchant must if he wants to win, study the desires and wishes of the buying public intensively The opportunity to trade at the big city stores increases yearly, and the past few years has found the people able to get cash for anything they can produce. This has created an inclination to buy wherever they believe they can do most with their money. The small town merchant has but one means to reach these people—the local paper and its job department. If being in business is going to be worth while the merchant will have to put thought and consideration into his advertisements. The goods the people want can be found in our local stores, but the people have to be convinced. Back your advertising with good salesmanship, business-like treatment of customers, and the big city store has nothing on the town store.

It would seem that those who desire conscription are using very poor tactics. Last week a Winnipeg minister said that he had been authorized to announce that conscription would be in force in a few days. The Minister of Militia immediately took exception to the statement, announcing to the people of Canada that there were several suggestions now being considered by the government but that compulsion would not be a part of their scheme. A lot of fault finding with the government has been indulged in by over-anxious people. Surely the government has much to contend with when ministers stand in their pulpits and make declarations about what is to be law in Canada, those same declarations found later to be wholly-unauthorized. This sort of preacher will weaken the respect of men for the pulpit.

Lack of Leadership

Truly things in Canada have come to a very peculiar stage. There was an awful howl by the political press last week because Mr. R. B. Bennett, director of National Service, was reported to have said at Regina, that farm produce was the chief need of the allies just now. Many hard things were hurled at Mr Bennett, and there was an occasional veiled hint that the west may keep its men back to work the land. Most of these disagreeable situations get their impetus from the political newspapers

It would be extremely regrettable indeed, if another situation were created between the west and the east, such as was created by the "politics first" newspapers of the city when they howled at Quebec so much last summer for not enlisting, that Quebec retaliated by refusing to buy from Ontario, and began a campaign to buy and sell within themselves. The newspapers which yelped loudest against Quebec, when trade began to fall off, were soon driven to cover, and the Bon Entente was organized, for the purpose of telling our Quebec brethren that nothing was meant and the Frenchmen were invited to shake hands and make up.

Now, another situation will likely be created, because Mr. Bennett is reported to have told the west to produce

Should Mr. Bennett recast his statements in Regina? We think not. Lloyd George in his momentous speech for production and conservation of supplies has said plainly that in many counties in England too many men had gone from the land, but the military service act had remedied that matter. Men were being detained on the farms.

Canada can do one or two things well It can produce foodstuffs, if it has the men; it can make munitions, or it can send its men to the front, but it cannot do all of these things in the measure the hobbyists of each of the necessaries demand.

In our own community, The Times and its readers have pride in the number of men who have gone from the county to represent it at the front, but the people here also note with a good deal of disgust the constant shouting of politicians and the partisan press to produce, produce, when there are few producers

Another thing, Ontario should be given some consideration. Can this province produce what it ought to? Bruce County farmers simply smile when asked "if they will produce more this year than last." The fact of the matter is, while these farmers say they will do all they can to back the men at the front and endeavor to produce to the utmost, there will be less production this year because there are fewer men to do it. On the other hand, there will be greater demands because of the great allied armies to feed. Perhaps Stephen Leacock is not so far astray when he prophesies that we are treading toward a world famine.

The great calamity is that the Grit press sees no good in the director of National Service, because he is a Tory, and the Tory press is ready to snap at the Grit. Meanwhile the country suffers through lack of leadership and unity of purpose Men are needed, munitions and foodstuffs are needed, but with all the turmoil and strife of political partisans we are wasting much time and opportunity.

A Vegetable Garden for Every Home

IN this year of supreme effort Britain and her armies must have ample supplies of food, and Canada is the great source upon which they rely. Everyone with a few square feet of ground can contribute to victory by growing vegetables.

Four Patriotic Reasons for Growing Vegetables

1. It saves money that you would otherwise spend for vegetables.
2. It helps to lower the "High cost of living."
3. It helps to enlarge the urgently needed surplus of produce for export.
4. Growing your own vegetables saves labor of others whose effort is needed for other vital war work.

The Department of Agriculture will help you

The Ontario Department of Agriculture appeals to Horticultural Societies to devote at least one evening meeting to the subject of vegetable growing; manufacturers, labor unions, lodges, school boards, etc., are invited to actively encourage home gardening. Let the slogan for 1917 be, "A vegetable garden for every home."

Organizations are requested to arrange for instructive talks by practical gardeners on the subject of vegetable growing. In cases where it is impossible to secure suitable local speakers, the Department of Agriculture will, on request, send a suitable man.

The demand for speakers will be great. The number of available experts being limited, the Department urgently requests that arrangements for meetings be made at once; if local speakers cannot be secured, send applications promptly.

The Department suggests the formation of local organizations to stimulate the work by offering prizes for best vegetable gardens. It is prepared to assist in any possible way any organization that may be conducting a campaign for vegetable production on vacant lots. It will do so by sending speakers, or by supplying expert advice in the field.

To any one interested, the Department of Agriculture will send literature giving instructions about implements necessary and methods of preparing the ground and cultivating the crop. A plan of a vegetable garden indicating suitable crops to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free of charge to any address.

WAR LOAN

DOMINION OF CANADA

Issue of $150,000,000 5% Bonds Maturing 1st March, 1937

Payable at par at Ottawa, Halifax, St John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Victoria, and at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

INTEREST PAYABLE HALF-YEARLY, 1st MARCH, 1st SEPTEMBER.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD.

ISSUE PRICE 96.

A FULL HALF-YEAR'S INTEREST WILL BE PAID ON 1st SEPTEMBER, 1917.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE LOAN WILL BE USED FOR WAR PURPOSES ONLY.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE offers herewith, on behalf of the Government, the above-named Bonds for Subscription at 96, payable as follows:—

10	per cent	on application;
30	"	16th April, 1917;
30	"	15th May, 1917;
26	"	15th June, 1917.

The total allotment of bonds of this issue will be limited to one hundred and fifty million dollars, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds as the equivalent of cash under the terms of the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915.

The instalments may be paid in full on the 16th day of April, 1917, or on any instalment due date thereafter, under discount at the rate of four per cent per annum. All payments are to be made to a chartered bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture and the allotment to cancellation.

Subscriptions, accompanied by a deposit of ten per cent of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a chartered bank. Any branch in Canada of any chartered bank will receive subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

This loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest will be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any chartered bank and at the office of any Assistant Receiver General in Canada.

Subscriptions must be for even hundreds of dollars.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied towards payment of the amount due on the April instalment.

Scrip certificates, non-negotiable or payable to bearer in accordance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued, after allotment, in exchange for the provisional receipts.

When the scrip certificates have been paid in full and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money, they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds, when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of scrip certificates and of bonds will be made through the chartered banks.

The issue will be exempt from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

The bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000. Fully registered bonds without coupons will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000 or any authorized multiple of $5,000.

The bonds will be paid at maturity at par at the office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary or Victoria, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

The interest on the fully registered bonds will be paid by cheque, which will be remitted by post. Interest on bonds with coupons will be paid on surrender of coupons. Both cheques and coupons, at the option of the holder, will be payable free of exchange at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

Subject to the payment of twenty-five cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons at any time on application to the Minister of Finance.

The books of the loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Recognized bond and stock brokers having offices and carrying on business in Canada will be allowed a commission of three-eighths of one per cent on allotments made in respect of applications bearing their stamp, provided, however, that no commission will be allowed in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by the surrender of bonds issued under the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915, or in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by surrender of five per cent debenture stock maturing 1st October, 1919. No commission will be allowed in respect of applications on forms which have not been printed by the King's Printer.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS WILL CLOSE ON OR BEFORE THE 23rd OF MARCH, 1917.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson XI. March 18, 1917.

Jesus Saves from Sin—Temperance Lesson.—John 8: 12, 28-37, 56-59.

Commentary.—I. The Light of the World (v. 12.) 12. Then spake Jesus again unto them—He was speaking to the Pharisees (v. 13.) He was resuming his discourse after several interruptions. The connection is natural between what he says here and v. 52 of the preceding chapter. I am the light of the world—Many writers think that Jesus had in mind one of the ceremonies connected with the feast of Tabernacles when he spoke these words. It was the custom on one or more nights of the feast to make a brilliant light, high up in the court of the women in the temple. This was in commemoration of the light which the Lord gave to the Israelites to guide them by night in their journey from Egypt to Canaan. This ceremony was an occasion of great rejoicing. The Jews understood the expression, "The light of the world," to have direct reference to the Messiah, and the Pharisees criticised him for claiming to be Christ. He is the Light of the world to illuminate darkened human hearts and show the way to heaven. He that followeth me—The way is open for all who will follow Jesus. Only those who deny themselves and take up their cross daily can be his followers. Shall not walk in darkness—He shall be saved from ignorance, infidelity and sin. If he follows me, becomes my disciple, and believes on my name, he shall have my Spirit to bear witness with his, that he is a child of God.—Clarke. Shall have the light of life—The true followers of Jesus have not only divine illumination, but they also have divine life. They have him who is the source of all light and life.

II. The Son lifted up (vs. 28-30.) 30. Then said Jesus—Jesus had just spoken of his relation to the Father. He had told the people that unless they believed in him, they would die in their sins. They did not comprehend the message he brought to them, for their hearts were set against him, hence he spoke the words that follow. When ye have lifted up the Son of man—These words refer to Christ's death by crucifixion. He would be lifted up on the cross and the Jews would accomplish his death. He thus prophesied his own death and who his murderers would be. Ye shall know that I am he—Even on his cross the shuddering Jews, amidst the signs from heaven, felt a guilty consciousness that they were crucifying the Holy One, but the words from this extend into a broader meaning. It is the crucifixion by which the world knows the power of Christ, the Redeemer and Judge.—Whedon. At the crucifixion were the darkness and the earthquake in token of the Messiahship of Jesus. The crowning proof, however, that he was the Son of God was his resurrection. I do nothing of myself—Jesus insistently declared his Sonship with the Father. He spoke the words of the Father. 29. He that sent me is with me. This was a true assertion, yet those who were opposing Jesus would not accept it. From Christ's statement here we may realize how we may be comforted and upheld by the divine presence with us. 30. Many believed on him—Such was the convincing nature and force of the truths which he presented, that they believed he was the Messiah, and received the doctrine.—Barnes.

III. Slavery and Freedom (vs. 31-37). 31. Jews which believed on Him—They were not in the majority, but they were a choice and honorable company. They had courage to take their position in spite of prejudice and in the face of unpopularity and persecution. My disciples indeed—For believers to continue in Christ's word involved much. They were not only to believe that Jesus was the Messiah, but they were to obey His word, accept His instruction and follow His example. A disciple indeed is a true Christian. 32. Ye shall know the truth—The truth includes the principles of vital godliness and the practice of the same. It includes Christ Himself, who said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (John 14. 6). The truth shall make you free—Jesus prayed for His followers, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth" (John 17. 17). The truth has power of sin is to be broken and the heart is to be fully cleansed. 33. We be Abraham's seed—The Jews boasted of their descent from Abraham and thought they were, by virtue of their ancestry, God's people, and no others could rise to the high religious plane they occupied. Were never in bondage—How false their claim was appears from a consideration of their history. They were slaves in Egypt, were captives in Babylon, were oppressed by the Syrians and were at that very time under the dominion of the Romans. It is vain for the sinner to boast of his freedom. He is the bond-slave of sin. Multitudes who are habitually using intoxicating liquors declare they are not slaves to drink, but they are bound by chains that are hard to break.

34. Verily, verily—This repetition intimates a strong affirmation. The servant of sin—The original expression is strong. Whoever commits sin is a bond-servant of sin. He is bound by chains from which he can not free himself. Jesus alone can set him free. 35. The bondservant abideth not in the house for ever (R. V.)—The bond-servant is not vitally related to the household. There is no natural connection. The Jews were sinners and hence were bond-servants. They could not, therefore, presume to enjoy the divine favor. They could not inherit the promises of Abraham. The contrast is drawn between the position of a servant and that of a son. 36. Ye shall be free indeed—True freedom can be obtained only through Jesus Christ. If the Jews would accept Him and through faith receive the freedom that He could give, they would not only have the freedom belonging to Abraham's descendants, but they would have what was of infinitely greater importance, freedom from sin. 37. Ye are Abraham's seed—Jews, Ye seek to kill Me—Thus hostile were they to Jesus. My word hath no place in you—They had not inherited

Abraham's character. They would not receive the truth. "The original word conveys the notion that there was no room for this doctrine in their minds. It met with obstructions, and did not penetrate into their hearts."—Barnes.

IV. Abraham's faith (vs. 56-59). 56. Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day—Abraham believed God's promise that the Messiah would come and rejoice over it. His faith caught sight of the blessedness of the reign of Christ. Was glad—A stronger expression that "rejoiced." 57. Not yet fifty years old—Jesus was only thirty-three. The Jews used the number fifty as a round number to be compared with the two thousand years since Abraham's time. Hast thou seen Abraham—They offered an objection to Christ's statement, but it simply called forth a declaration of his divinity. 58. Before Abraham was, I am—"I am," as used here, stands for eternity of existence (Exod. 3: 14). Compare this with John 1: 1. 59. Then took they up stones to cast at him—Their hatred toward Jesus and their failure to disprove his statements regarding himself led them to resort to the argument of stones. Passed by—He either made himself invisible, or, mingling with the crowd, became hidden to his enemies.

Questions.—Where was Jesus at the time of this lesson? What feast was in progress? What did it commemorate? In what sense is Jesus the light of the world? In what sense was he to be lifted up? How are we to be made free? Of what did the Jews boast? Who are in bondage? In what way did Jesus declare his divinity? How may individuals and nations become free from the drink evil?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Redemption Proclaimed.

I. Through the mediation of Christ.

II. From the curse and slavery of sin.

I. Through the mediation of Christ. As Jesus had applied to himself, in his discourse on the bread of life, one of the typical miracles of the wilderness, so here he represented himself as the antitype of the fiery pillar that led the Israelites during the long pilgrimage. This similitude exhibited the glory and power of Christ in his own nature and the blessings which he brought to the world. None but the divine Lord and Saviour of mankind could justly claim to be the light of the world. His bearing record of himself was a necessity. He was his own great theme. Peerless as the sun in the firmament above, shone the character of Jesus Christ, unspeakably great and glorious in himself. He shed full light upon every subject which pertains to the highest well-being of the human race. It was the chief mission of Christ to explain and establish the spiritual relationship between man and God on the basis of faith, obedience and love. His knowledge of the Father was absolute and most intimate. His advent dispersed darkness and brought new truths into view. He asserted himself to be the only source of illumination for the whole world, and that following him brought sure deliverance from error and sin, and brought light which is life. Darkness is the name for the whole condition of the soul averted from God. Referring to his death, his words revealed his sublime heroism. They expressed his unshaken faith in the triumph of his cause. They indicated a consciousness of his peculiar relation to the eternal Father. His death was to establish the absolute unity of purpose and action that exists between himself and his Father. The Jews interrupted the discourse which Jesus was giving to those who believed on him, by their vain boast of a relationship which was disproved by their spirit, language and entire conduct. They claimed political freedom, while in reality they were subjects of Rome. They claimed religious freedom, while in reality they were slaves to the letter of the law. They claimed moral freedom, while in reality they were bondsmen of sin. The whole history of their nation was the record of one bondage following another. The evidence of foreign rule met their eyes everywhere. They bought and sold with Roman money. They paid tribute to a Roman emperor. A Roman governor sat in their judgment hall. A Roman garrison occupied the fortress of their city. With all that they treated Jesus' promise of freedom as an insult. They seemed unable to recognize the inner bondage of the soul. From the declaration of superiority to Abraham Jesus passed to the declaration of his equality with God. Abraham had seen the day of Messiah by the light of the prophecy and accordingly the statement of Jesus was a claim to be the true Messiah. The title "I am" proclaimed the pre-existence of Christ, his unchangeableness, his all-sufficiency. The Jews understood this as a divine claim and took up stones against him as a blasphemer.

II. From the curse and slavery of sin. The weak and imperfect faith of the believing Jews called forth the discourse on freedom. The greatness of Christ's aim was to make all men free. He sought to show that sin is not natural to man, as God meant him to be, and that there is no such relation between a sinner and his sin as makes deliverance impossible. Perfect freedom is only to be enjoyed in perfect harmony with the divine will. Inasmuch as slavery to sin implies a false relationship to God. Jesus adhered to the lines of ancient history so as to mark the distinction between Jews who failed to recognize the privilege of sons and those who were as sons introduced into the true spiritual freedom of Abraham's seed. His declaration was leveled against the traditional faith and old maxims which the Jews in general were holding in their birthright blessing. The freedom effected by Christ is that of sonship. He only can place the slave on a new footing in the household. He proclaims liberty to the soul. He is the Source and Medium of spiritual knowledge. He is the Revealer of the relationship between God and man. Without union with Christ there can be no discipleship. Without abiding in his word there can be no true union with him.

T. R. A.

FARM AND GARDEN

THERE'S PROFIT IN MANURE.

There is no more prosperous sign on a farm than a well-kept manure heap. It shows thrift and success.

It is important to know the amount and value of manure which will be produced in a given time by animals of different kinds, and various methods of calculating these approximately have been proposed.

Some authorities calculate according to the quantity of straw used as litter, figuring that for one ton of straw, used as bedding, four tons of manure will be produced. Armsby claims that where straw is used economically each horse will need 2,500 pounds of straw per year for bedding. Taking this as a basis, he concludes that a ton of wheat straw, economically handled, may result in six tons of fresh manure, but ordinarily it will not give more than five tons.

CALCULATIONS ON QUALITY.

The method advocated by Heiden, and some other authorities, is probably a more accurate one. This method bases all calculations upon the amount of food consumed and litter used. The dried excrement of horses, cows and other neat cattle and sheep is almost one-half of the dry food consumed.

Heiden says 100 pounds of dry matter in food consumed by a horse yields 210 pounds of manure. To this the weight of bedding must be added, which will be about six and a half pounds per day, in order to get the total product of manure. Allowing for dung and urine dropped outside the stable, Heiden calculated that a well-fed working horse will produce 50 pounds of manure per day.

The New Jersey Experiment Station claims the average milch cow, weighing 1,000 pounds, will produce daily manure (dung and urine), unmixed with litter, 70 pounds per cow.

Experiments tried by the Pennsylvania Station give an average of about 46 pounds of dung, 27 pounds of urine, or 73 pounds of total manure daily.

It is estimated that sheep give 183 pounds of manure for each 100 pounds of dry matter in food consumed. A 60-pound sheep, consuming two pounds of dry matter and receiving three-fifths pound of bedding, would produce about four pounds of manure daily.

A hog, it is estimated, produces from six to ten pounds of manure per day.

The quantity of manure, as well as quality, produced by farm animals is governed considerably by the character of the food.

Foods rich in protein increase the consumption of water, and the excretion of urine, consequently increasing the bulk of manure produced without improving the quality.

The Massachusetts Experiment Station has shown that hens produce from one-fifth to one-fourth pound of manure per head daily.

THE QUALITY OF FARM MANURES

Sheep manure contains a small amount of water is, weight for weight, the richest manure produced by any of the common farm animals. It is what is called a hot manure, fermenting rapidly with the development of heat. Like horse manure, it is especially likely to lose ammonia.

Horse manure is very dry, and is, therefore, difficult to thoroughly mix with litter. It is a hot manure, undergoing fermentation rapidly and generating a high heat on account of its loose texture. It is likely to lose ammonia even more rapidly than sheep manure, and requires careful management from the moment it is voided. The composition of horse manure is more uniform than that of any other farm animal, chiefly because the food of horses is more uniform. The urine is especially rich.

Hog manure is very variable in composition, owing to the variable nature of the food supplied to the animal, but is generally rich, although containing a high percentage of water. It generates little heat in decomposing.

The manure of neat cattle, like that of hogs and for the same reason, is variable in character, but is generally poorer than that of other farm animals on account of its large percentage of water. It decomposes slowly and develops little heat.

Poultry manure is very rich in all the fertilizing elements, but especially so in nitrogen, owing to the fact that the urinary secretions, which contain large amounts of nitrogen as well as potash in readily available form, are voided with the solid excrement. It quickly loses nitrogen, however, by fermentation, if not properly mixed with absorbents or preservatives. In no case should alkaline substances like lime, wood ashes, etc., be mixed with poultry manure.

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

Corn is planted thicker when grown for silage than for grain, and a larger proportion of nutrients are as a result obtained in the stalks in the former case. The closeness of planting varies somewhat in different sections according to soil and climate. The common practice of growing corn for grain is to plant in hills three and one-half feet apart both ways; when intended for silage it is generally planted in drills three and one-half feet apart, with stalks eight to ten inches apart in the row. This will secure a fair proportion of ears and a maximum yield of feed materials in the crop taken off the land.

Root crops and rape help out the sheep ration.

The best medicine for the young lambs is sunshine. Let them out into the open air on sunny days.

If you cannot provide a high, well-drained yard and shelter for your sheep, better sell your flock to some one whose sheep barn and enclosure are on dry ground.

Profit is what we keep sheep for. Begin to seek and expect a profit not by stocking up heavy with sheep, but by getting a few good ones and keeping them right.

Fish meal, made from the waste of fisheries on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, is being used quite extensively as a feed for poultry, sheep and cattle. The use of this waste as feed was suggested many years ago, but the development of the industry is quite recent. Good results are reported from the use of the meal.

Salt has been tried in Pennsylvania this year as a substitute for potash as a fertilizer for potatoes. The vine attained a healthy growth, but the development of the tubers was disappointing.

SUNDAY AT HOME

THE BARREN DAY.

Never a cheery word voiced to-day—
Never a caroling roundelay—
Never a blossom set on the shrine
Where an untrimmed lamp doth dimly shine—
Nothing to show at the set of the sun,
Of "something attempted," of "something done."
Barren and bare, the hours trooped by
Into the deeps of eternity!

—Philip I. Roberts.

GOLD TRIED IN THE FIRE.

There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions, and in the world to come eternal life.

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you.—Now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations; that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

The God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.—In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.

SPRINGS.

My life is a mountain side. I am refreshed by the upper and nether springs. I need both, for they complete my equipment. I go down to feed the natural spirit of mercy. I put coal in the furnace of a widespread pity, and sometimes make a large demand on the surplus stock of sympathy.

Somewhat exhausted, I climb to the upper ranges to recruit, refit and lay in a stock of fresh fuel for noble fires. Only the most perfect workers can remain in the perpetual presence of squalor. I wish to commune with the great and good, keep in touch with their thought and witness their career. I see the clouds gather round the lights, and soon I drink delicious draughts. Good and holy ones are the appointed means used by the Most High to lift by their perpetual attraction.

O, these mediators between earth and heaven, between realities and divine possibilities, between the severities of duty and the rest of God, compelling us to own how glorious when done are the things most difficult to do!

I dwell between these springs: below I hear the murmur and the dirge and the requiem; these sad tones I transfuse into hymns of thanksgiving, as I catch the inspiration and see the crown of noble deeds. Here I call into my presence the lofty and the devoted, quench my thirst as I drink from golden cups, clasp the hands of sanctity, and weep my tears of gladness, with the choice ones whom angels study and admire.

What wise woman can afford to be ignorant of Sarah Martin, of Great Yarmouth, the humble seamstress who worked from house to house for thirty cents a day, then gave one day in the week for rescue work, then two, then all? The prison visitor, the prison chaplain, who worked out the principles of criminal jurisprudence which the authorities afterwards adopted. And now a magnificent memorial window in the parish church tells of her undying fame.

What man wishes to be ignorant of John Howard, who penetrated the dungeons of Europe, pleaded with crowned heads, travelled fifty thousand British miles to investigate and relieve the sufferings of humanity? "His plan," said Burke, "is original; it is as full of genius as it is of humanity. It was a voyage of discovery, a circumnavigation of charity." He died at the age of 65 in Cherson, in Persia, after having visited a girl with the plague. He said to the British Consul, "Put a sun dial on my grave, and let me be forgotten." But that cannot be, for "the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance."

AN INVITATION TO SICKNESS

Impure Blood Means a Breakdown in Your Health.

Impure blood is an invitation to sickness. The blood is at work day and night to maintain the health, and any lack of strength or purity in the blood is a weakness in the defense against disease. Anaemia is the doctor's name for lack of blood. There may be an actual loss in the quantity of the blood, or one or more of its constituents may be lacking. Its surest symptom is pallor. Anaemia is particularly common in young girls. It is not, however, confined to them alone, for it is this same lack of blood that prevents full recovery after la grippe, fevers, malaria and operations. It is also present in old age and in persons who have been under unusual mental or physical strain. If you are suffering from this trouble take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. They make pure, new blood with every dose and this new blood means health and strength. Thousands have proved the truth of these statements, among them Mrs. John Hyatt, Metiskow, Alta., who says: "About a year ago I was in a badly run down condition, my blood was watery, I was very nervous, slept badly at night; suffered from frequent headaches and found my housework an almost intolerable burden, my appetite was poor, and I did not seem to assimilate the food I took, altogether my condition seemed serious. As there was no doctor in our neighborhood I decided to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, and I have much cause to be thankful that I did so, as in a few weeks I could feel a great change for the better. I continued the use of the pills for some time longer, and found a complete cure. I feel better than I have for years and can therefore cheerfully recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all who are weak and run down."

You can get these pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Stropping Himself.

When the train stopped at an inland Virginia station the Northern tourist sauntered out on the platform. Beneath a tall pine stood a lean animal with scraggy bristles. The tourist was interested.

"What do you call that?" he queried of a lanky "cracker."

"Razorback hawg."

"Well, what is he doing rubbing against that tree?"

"He's stropping himself, mister; stropping himself."—Harper's Magazine.

ADANA IRRIGATION.

Cilicia of Antiquity to Be Made Wonderfully Productive.

A project of irrigation of the Adana Plain (the Cilicia of antiquity), at a cost of £4,000,000 ($17,600,000), and requiring eight to ten years for completion, has been undertaken by the Ottoman Government. This project contemplates the regulation of the three rivers which water the plain—the Jihun, the Shihan and the Berdan Shah—and will open up to agriculture 200,000 hectares (494,200 acres) of land, much of which is at present arid. It is estimated that the completion of this irrigation project and the introduction of fertilizers and agricultural machinery will increase many fold the Turkish production of cotton, sugar cane, lemons, oranges and olives. A part of the irrigation works will be put in operation within the next 18 months.

When these irrigation works are completed the Adana Plain will be the most favored portion of the Ottoman Empire, for it already possesses excellent transportation facilities. The plain is traversed by the Bagdad Railway and, in addition, Adana is connected with Mersina by rail. Further, the port of Alexandretta lies at a distance of only 30 miles from the mouth of the Shihan, which river, as well as the Saihun and the Berdan Shah, will, after the completion of the contemplated regulation projects, be navigable and offer a cheap means of transporting the products of the plain to the sea. The regulation of these rivers will also render available abundant water power for industrial purposes, such as the generating of electricity.—U. S. Consul-General Ravndal at Constantinople, under date of Sept. 6, in Commerce Reports.

A PUZZLING CASE

At last I heard the door open and knew that the visitor was leaving the house; so, true to my new profession as a detective, I rushed at once to the window of the smoking room, which fortunately afforded a view of the street. A few moments afterwards, I saw a tall, dark woman, dressed in a bizarre red costume, dart out of the house with a frown on her face, and walk rapidly away down the street. Just as she was turning the corner, I heard Gilbert's footsteps, so, unwilling to be caught in such an undignified situation, I came back to my chair and resumed the perusal of the paper.

Tressinger entered the room, and greeted me in an agitated manner, rendered still more emphatic by the haggard look on his young face.

"What is the matter, Gilbert?" I said, as he took a seat, "you seem to be worried over something."

"I am worried," he replied, with a frown, "I have just had a very unpleasant quarter of an hour."

"So it would seem, judging from the row you were making next door."

He looked up quickly.

"Did you hear what we were saying?"

"No, saving some reference to the Black Carnation."

"Always that infernal flower," answered Gilbert, gloomily; "it is becoming a perfect nightmare."

"Well, and what did this woman wish to see you about?"

"How do you know it was a woman?"

"I heard her voice, and I saw her leave the house."

"You are progressing in the detective business, major," said Tressinger, smiling bitterly. "Yes, you are right; my interview was with a woman, and it concerned Mazzucata's death."

"In what way?"

Tressinger made no reply, so I sought for information in another way.

"What is this woman's name, Gilbert?"

Still no answer, upon which, feeling somewhat nettled at being thus shut out from his confidence, I took up my hat and moved towards the door.

"Where are you going, major," he asked quickly, seeing my movement.

"I am going away, sir," I replied, in a dignified manner, for I own I was angry; "you promised to let me assist you in this matter, but as you now refuse to tell me anything, there is no use my staying here."

"Sit down, major, and don't be angry about nothing. I do not refuse to tell you what you wish to know, I was only thinking."

"About what?" I asked, resuming my seat.

"About my future movements. Shall I go abroad or stay here?"

I stared at him in some surprise.

"Why should you go abroad?"

"I have been warned that I may be arrested."

"Arrested!" I cried, jumping to my feet with an astonished look, "and for what?"

"The murder of Mazzucata."

"Nonsense."

"It is true, I assure you. This woman came here to warn me."

"But who is this woman?"

"Ilma Celinski."

"Humph! I am as wise as I was before."

"You don't know her name?" he said, curiously. "No, of course not. It is not yet in the papers. Well, I may say Celinski is a Pole."

"I can tell that much myself."

"And she is—or rather was—the maid of Mazzucata."

"The maid of Mazzucata—well?"

"Well!" he repeated, impatiently, "can't you see the connection."

"Between this woman and the murder? No, I'm sure I can't."

"I'm afraid you are not such a good detective as I thought, major."

"Oh, by the way," I said, with a sudden flash of memory, "both you and Dallas referred to some woman in connection with the crime; is this the woman?"

"No. Oh, you are quite wrong."

"How can I help being wrong when I am in the dark. For heaven's sake, Gilbert, stop this choppy conversation, and tell me what you mean."

"Willingly. Olma Celinski is, or was the maid of Mazzucata, and was more of a companion than a servant. She knew more than anyone else about Mazzucata, and among other things she knew of the warning of the Black Carnation. Well, it appears that after the murder of her mistress she went on to the stage to view the scene of the tragedy, and while they picked up the remains of a flower which was—"

"A Black Carnation?"

"Precisely. So in that bouquet which contained the dynamite cartridge, there must have been a black carnation and that was the reason Mazzucata cried out just before she was killed. The first flower was a warning to her that death was coming, the second that death had come—and speedily, as you saw."

"I understand. But what has all this to do with you?"

"Simply this. That the police think I threw the bouquet which contained the black carnation."

"Ridiculous. Do you mean to say the police think you killed the woman you love?"

"So Ilma says, and she came here this morning to warn me to fly."

"And by doing so thus acknowledge your guilt."

"Well, I am not going to acknowledge my guilt either by word or deed. I am innocent of the crime."

"My dear Tressinger," I said, grasping his hand, "you need not tell me that. I know you are innocent."

"Thank you, major," he said, warmly, much affected, "I am glad to hear you say so, as I shall need all the friends I can get when I am arrested."

"Will you be arrested?"

"Assuredly; and I am going to remain here. Flight would acknowledge guilt; and I am innocent, so I will remain."

"Why is this woman so anxious for you to fly?"

"She wants to save my life."

"But why?"

Gilbert looked down at the carpet with a flush on his face.

"I don't think me conceited, major, but I believe she loves me."

"Well, she is certainly doing you a good turn in thus warning you," I replied, grimly; "but tell me, Gilbert, if you are arrested what defence will you make?"

"What defence can I make except declare that I am innocent. I loved Mazzucata. I threw a bouquet to her, but I swear that there was nothing harmful in the bouquet."

"Not even a black carnation?"

"No, it was a bouquet of white flowers with a black rose in the centre, but a rose is not a carnation."

"Certainly not. Where was the bouquet made up?"

"At the shop of Phillis & Co., in Jermyn street."

"Then the flower girls there can give evidence that the bouquet contained nothing but white flowers and a black rose?"

"Most certainly."

"Phillis & Co. are not likely to go in for black carnations?"

"I should think not. It is a unique flower and worth its weight in gold. For the bouquet I bought I only paid a guinea, but if there had been a black carnation in it the price would have been treble."

"You say you have seen a Black Carnation?"

"I have seen the one which Mazzucata received as a warning that she was to die. A perfect flower and as black as ink."

"I suppose there are others in existence?"

"I don't know; I never heard of any."

"It could not possibly have been your bouquet that contained a black carnation?"

"No, I'm certain of that."

"Well, the bouquet concealing the cartridge had a black carnation, so it could not have been yours; and, as it was not yours, your are not guilty."

"My dear major," cried Gilbert, impatiently, "you are arguing in a circle. I tell you the centre flower of my bouquet was a black rose, and I had no more intention of killing Mazzucata than yourself."

"I know that, but why should the police suspect you?"

"I am quite in the dark."

"Someone must have seen a black carnation, or thought they saw one in your bouquet."

"What nonsense. How could they see what wasn't there? Besides, no one saw the bouquet but myself."

I thought over the matter for a few moments, and then asked Gilbert a leading question.

"Tell me all you did on that night from the time you bought the flowers."

"I had promised Mazzucata some flowers to carry in the opera, and during the day went to Phillis & Co., where I ordered a bouquet of white blossoms and a black rose in the centre. It did not come to my house in time, so on my way to Mazzucata I called at the shop and took it from there. I held it in my hand all the way to the Hotel Europa, where Mazzucata was staying, and went upstairs to her room. Ilma, who was there, making ready to go to the theatre, told me Mazzucata had already gone, so I left the rooms at once and went on to Covent Garden."

"Did you lay down the bouquet when you were in Mazzucata's rooms?"

"Yes, for a few minutes; but no one was in the room but Ilma, and you surely don't suspect her?"

"No, certainly not. But in the theatre?"

"Well, I put the bouquet under my stall, and then threw it to her on the stage as you saw."

"By the way, you left it there when you went out after the second act to have a smoke."

"Of course, but what of that?"

"Simply this, that the bouquet might have been changed while you were away."

"Impossible. In a crowded theatre?"

"I don't know why it should be impossible. Look here; it is quite improbable that Phillis & Co. would make up a bouquet with a dynamite cartridge in it."

"Yes; the idea is absurd."

"Well, from the time you left the shop till the time you went out to smoke in the theatre after the second act, you never lost sight of the bouquet?"

"No, I didn't."

"Then it must have been changed in the theatre," I finished, triumphantly.

"But who would do such a thing?"

"The person who killed Mazzucata."

"My dear major," said Gilbert, ironically, "if the person who killed Mazzucata had a bouquet of white flowers with a black carnation, and a dynamite cartridge in the handle, why couldn't he throw it himself? Why run the risk of changing it for mine?"

"To lessen the risk," I answered, quietly. "You were well known to be the lover of Mazzucata, and probably that circumstance gained you the enmity of someone. Well, supposing out of jealousy—or say, as the emissary of a secret society—that 'someone' went to the theatre with the black carnation bouquet. He sat directly behind you—at least we will suppose for the sake of argument that he did—and saw you there—a man on intimate relations with the woman he desired to kill. Well, in order to save himself the risk and make you the innocent instrument of his vengeance, what was easier for him than when you were away, to bend down in the stall and change the bouquets? Thus when you threw your bouquet it was not yours, but his with the black carnation."

Gilbert turned pale as if he saw an abyss open before him. "Great heavens!" he groaned, covering his face with his hands. "If this is so; I am lost. But, no, it is impossible. Granted, that all took place as you have so ingeniously described, who would know that the bouquet I threw had a Black Carnation?"

"Everyone round you."

"Pardon me, that cannot be so. For no one seeing a dark flower in the centre of a bouquet would believe it to be such a monstrosity of nature as the Black Carnation. No, if things are as you say, the person who changed the bouquets and made me the instrument of his vengeance, must also have denounced me to the police, thus at one blow destroying both Mazzucata and myself."

"That is my theory also," I answered, delighted to see how the case was unfolding itself; "but the question is, who changed the bouquets?"

"Ah, if we could find that out we could lay our hands on the assassin. But, after all, this is mere theorizing."

"I daresay the police have not much more to go on."

"They must have more evidence against me, or no magistrate would grant the warrant for arrest."

"But is there a warrant of arrest against you?"

"I don't think there is at the present time, but Ilma tells me the police are going to issue one shortly."

"How does she know?"

Gilbert shrugged his shoulders.

"I'm sure I do not know."

A sudden thought struck me and I rose to my feet.

"Gilbert, I know who denounced you to the police."

"Who?"

"Ilma Celinski!"

"Impossible! She loves me."

"But how does she know of this Black Carnation business? If the bouquets were changed in the theatre, as I suspect, she must have had information that they were going to be so changed."

"I tell you it's impossible," cried Gilbert, much agitated, walking up and down. "Ilma loves me—she came to warn me to fly—she would not do that if she had denounced me. Good heavens!" he added, stopping short, with a gesture of despair, "when will all this end? Against my will I am being brought into the affair—on all sides there is perplexity and peril, which I know not how to escape. Major, what am I to do? You are my friend, tell me what to do."

"Yes, I will tell you," I answered, taking his hand. "I am your friend, so leave the matter in my hands and leave England for the present."

"What, fly! That would be tantamount to a confession of guilt."

"If you are in prison you will be suspected all the same, and you can do more to aid yourself while free. Leave England, and I will see if I can discover who it was who changed the bouquets. I will see this Ilma and find out her attitude towards you—I will go to Phillis & Co.—I will find out where these accursed flowers came from—I will."

"Major," cried Gilbert, with a shudder, "hark, what is that?"

There was a sharp knock at the door, and immediately afterwards it was thrown open. A man in plain clothes and two policemen stood on the threshold.

"Too late!" cried Tressinger, reeling back against the wall. "It is too late."

"Gilbert Tressinger, I arrest you in the Queen's name," said the man in plain clothes, advancing.

"And for what?" he asked, with pale lips. "For what crime?"

"For the murder of Marietta Mazzucata."

CHAPTER V.

Needless to say there was great excitement in London over the arrest of Gilbert Tressinger. The Opera House tragedy was one of those romantic crimes such as the world loves to read about. A famous singer, a handsome, rich and titled young man, and a terrible death—it contained all the elements of a romance, and you may be sure that this romance lost nothing in the telling. Things had been rather quiet lately, and the big papers were at a loss for material to fill their columns and attract their readers, when, lo, this fantastic tragedy took place and became the sensation of the day. Reporters sharpened their pencils and their wits, editors heaved sighs of relief at the prospect of inserting attractive matter in their empty columns, and all the world of Whitechapel, Belgravia, and respectable Brixton gaped hungrily for news concerning the guilt of this—as they thought—past lover, present murderer, and future felon.

For myself, the arrest of my poor young friend had taken me completely by surprise, but I never for a moment thought him guilty of the monstrous crime laid to his charge. He had laid bare his heart before me, he had described the occurrence of the tragedy, therefore, in my own mind I was quite positive that whosoever was guilty, Gilbert at least was innocent. The committal of a crime presupposes a motive; but from all I knew, saw and heard, Tressinger had absolutely no motive which could make him kill the woman he loved, and bring himself within the grasp of the long arm of the law.

The young baronet was a great favorite in the world of society, and both in clubs and drawing-rooms his friends and acquaintances declined to believe in his guilt. All the sympathies of the upper ten thousand were with this representative of their order who was accused of committing a foul crime; but the radical section of the public, the middle class, the religious multitude, and the mob of the slums, all believed the poor fellow guilty, even before he had been tried. He was a gentleman, a baronet, a wealthy man, and that was quite enough reason for those who hated the upper classes to rejoice over the downfall of a prominent member of the same. As to the religious folks, they roundly asserted that the committal of the crime was only the logical outcome of the iniquitous life which Tressinger had been leading—for iniquitous they said it was, simply because his name had been coupled with that of Mazzucata. No good could come out of Nazareth, according to these bigots, and the junction of a singing woman and a fast young man was quite enough to account for all kinds of enormities.

Thus did the one half of the world defend Gilbert, while the other condemned him, and between these two great divisions many violent arguments took place both in favor and against the accused. Naturally enough as the man had not been tried, and the public at large were ignorant of the evidence in the hands of the police, neither party was able to settle the argument in a satisfactory manner, therefore, the preliminary inquiry before the magistrate was looked forward to with the utmost impatience by everyone.

I foolishly thought that when Dallas heard of the arrest of his rival he would at once come back to town, but as day after day passed and he did not return, I began to have a very bad opinion of the young man for such ungenerous conduct. From his remarks about the black carnation which had led me to invite the confidence of Tressinger, it was evident that he knew something of the affair, and if his evidence in any way tended to exculpate Gilbert, it was a shameful thing of him to hold back, when such evidence might free the unfortunate young man from this terrible charge.

As it was, however, I did my best to enlist sympathy on all sides for my young friend, and also visited him frequently in prison, much to his comfort. Owing to the strong expressions of public opinion, particularly that of the lower classes, the magistrates refused bail, so poor Tressinger had to remain in prison, a prey to a hundred fears while waiting for his preliminary trial.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Numerous crows make it sound like Spring. A little more mild weather and lucky farmers will be opening up gold mines in the shape of potato pits. It will be unsafe for the editor to stand within throwing distance if frost or rot has got into these valuable pits.

Miss Beulah Stewart has gone to take a position near Toronto.

The Literary society had a splendid time at their social gathering Thursday evening which by the way was free. The box social at the school house Friday was also a big success. The program talent was chiefly from outside the district and everything passed off nicely under the management of chairman McCannel.

There are a few cases of measles reported yet, and numerous spring colds.

The Patriotic League are having a towel shower at their meeting this week.

Saugeen bugles are sounding this week calling the faithful to prayer. We are in the right and our hands are clean, will never bring peace. Dust and ashes is the only remedy. Get down, says Admiral Beatty.

The time has come around again when the paper farmers are giving all sorts of advice to old farmer Hay Seed. He must get up earlier, work later, sweat and puff, wet or dry in a mighty effort to put every acre into seed. Produce, produce, to fill our mouths is the cry. The fact that necessary help has been stolen from him is no excuse. Thousands of high school boys, retired farmers and all the rest will be sent out from towns and cities to give their "valuable" assistance. Every spare lot in these towns and cities is to be turned over and seeded with potatoes and other vegetables. A little hennery of ten hens is to be attached to one corner in each town lot and so on. What a hub bub! Practical man, Hay Seed, takes it all in, winks with one eye, and with a pitying smile goes about his usual duties as if no flies bothered him, just waiting for spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Cushman Smith and baby Arthur, of North Bruce, visited with the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Smith, on Sunday.

Bruce Telephone Rates May Be Raised to $14

About 125 subscribers of the Bruce Municipal Telephone assembled at the township hall at Underwood, Friday afternoon to transact annual business. All the township were represented.

The chairman, D. McNaughton, presided. Around the table were commissioners McLean and Hunter, Treasurer Mackay, Secy. Struthers and Supt. Norman Jones.

The financial statement was explained to the meeting by the commissioners. Mr. Maclean used a large canvas sheet to explain to the gathering the debenture plan, and also to show that the rate would have to be raised to avoid overdrafts. The sheet proved a good feature.

In discussing the proposed rate Messrs Arch McLean, M. Avis, P. J. Brown, H. Roppel W. J. Blair, J. Kippen, J. Haug, W. Mackay, A. MacArthur, spoke favorably, pointing to the splendid service.

A motion was unanimously passed authorizing the commissioners to fix the rate to meet requirements.

The price for 1917 may be $14.

The commissioners, officers and the superintendent came in for some compliments for their good work.

The commissioners were re-elected amid applause. The gathering dispersed after singing the National Anthem.

The record receipts of $300 taken by Ribey's school box social is quite the item of interest among Red Cross workers. It is understood that the young people will give the play in Port Elgin, the proceeds going to the Port Elgin Red Cross.

At the recent threshermen's convention held at Sarnia, it was decided to petition the Legislature to amend the "planking law" so as to compel municipalities to provide planks at each bridge in order to obviate the necessity of threshermen carrying them on their outfits.

Mr. Ed. Parfitt's sale last Thursday was well attended. Auctioneer Cavin had no trouble getting high prices for everything. Stock went well, a cow bringing $84, 3-weeks-old calf $23, 3-months-old calves $13, potatoes $2.40 a bushel and oats $1.25. Hens sold for $1.15.

Corp. Amor Howe, in a letter home yesterday, says the 160th have been inspected by General Hughes. Corp. Howe was one of four men picked for a course at Aldershot in sniping and scouting. It will be remembered that Amor took honors in marksmanship at Aldershot. The 160th has been ranked as the first battalion in the first brigade of the 5th division.

Mrs. Jas. Underwood, of Arkwright, is 94 years of age, and the Tara Leader says she is probably the oldest inhabitant of Bruce county. Paisley has, however, a citizen who has seen a few more years. Mrs. Devine, of Ross street, according to the best available information, is in her 100th year. She is still able to take care of herself pretty well. Since her grandson, who lived with her, went off to war with 160th, she is left alone, but neighbors look in frequently and see that she is all right.—Advocate.

Darch & Hunter Seed Co., Limited, LONDON CANADA

On Thursday afternoon, March 1st, a quiet wedding was solemnized in St. John's church St. Thomas, by the Rev. W. F. Brownlee. The contracting parties were Mrs. M. G. Jacques and Mr. A. P. Bowman, of Southampton. After the signing of the register, Mr. and Mrs. Bowman left immediately for London, going from there by C. P. R. to Chicago, en route for California where they will spend the next two months motoring through the South. Many friends in Port Elgin join in extending congratulations.

Mr. A. E. Jones of 10th Bruce, is one of the most extensive and successful bee-keepers in this section. Last season he had a bumper crop from 140 colonies. Mr. Jones told The Advocate that he and four other beekeepers of Bruce and Saugeen—Messrs. Jos. Seiffert, H. McCulloch and John Schrank—had in all 34 tons of honey from 1916 yield, and every can of this has been disposed of at good prices. The season was exceptionally favorable, both as to profusion of bloom and weather conditions under which the nectar-gathering insects could carry on their work. The result is that the intelligent and experienced apiarist received a rich return for his labours.

At the manse Paisley, on February 27th by the Rev. J. Little, Mr. William Kelly of Keppel Sask., was married to Miss Isabel McArthur, daughter of Mrs. Charles McArthur, Townline, Bruce and Saugeen. Immediately after the ceremony the young couple took the afternoon train to Guelph and other points. After their return they were given a reception at the home of the bride's mother, where about seventy guests had assembled to welcome them back. A pleasant evening was spent and a dainty lunch partaken of. The bride and groom received many handsome and useful presents including some substantial cheques. After enjoying a couple of weeks visiting among friends and neighbors they will leave for the west, followed by the good wishes of all.

The Montreal Daily Star noted last week that Lieut. J. R. Geddes, had been gazetted as an officer observer in the Flying Corps. John is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Geddes, Arran, and many friends rejoice in his promotion.

In a report of officers for Dunblane patriotic society, it should have been noted that Mrs. McNeill was elected as the honorary president. Mrs. McNeill, although 84, and painfully crippled with rheumatism, still endeavors to do "her bit" for the Empire.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hartley, moved Saturday to their new home, on their farm near Elsinore. They have many town friends who regret their removal, Mr. Hartley has been an employee of the Stevens Hepner works for years, and many friends wish them well in their new undertaking.

Henry Reiber returned to Didsbury, last week. Mr. Reiber is a prosperous hardware merchant in the fine town of Didsbury, Alberta. When the editor was through the West, Didsbury was one of the little towns which attracted much attention for its fine red brick business blocks.

Mr. J. J. Corbett, the genial blacksmith from Arkwright, was in town Friday renewing old friendships. Although Mr. Corbett is nearing the 60 mark he felt his Irish enough, to offer to go to the front, and says he can yet "do a lot of the young gaffirs who were taken in the army."

Mr. R M. Lowry is authority for information given regarding ice in the harbor. Last week it was 26 inches thick. Thirteen years ago it was 27 inches thick. Ice men cut three times in the same hole and each time took out blocks 13 inches thick. He says navigation this way will be late.

There were many farmers at Paisley last week, attending the stock judging classes. N. C. MacKay, District Agricultural Representative arranged the classes under the auspices of the Centre Bruce Board of Agriculture. Perhaps the West Bruce Board might profitably arrange something like this for this section.

Many people attended the St. Patrick's dinner given in the Library on Saturday evening, by Mrs. Falconer and Mrs. Eaton. The auditorium was very nicely decorated with green, and Irish emblems, while the tables were invitingly spread in white and green. Home-made candy, baking, etc., were also sold. Music was provided, also a very fine dinner, for 25 cents. The proceeds were given by the ladies to the Red Cross and amounted to over $67. Warden Izzard was the highest tenderer for the potatoes donated by Mr. J. H. Johnston, paying $5 for them.

You want to see "The Village Doctor" town hall Port Elgin, Friday night, March 23rd. Admission 25 cents. Proceeds go to Port Elgin Red Cross.

The United Prayermeeting

Hundreds of people from the townships and the town crowded the Presbyterian church on Thursday to attend the prayer service, when the united prayers of the people were offered for the success of the allied cause, and for a permanent peace.

Work was laid aside in most homes in the country while the business places and the workshops were closed for the occasion.

At 3.30 many had gathored at the church to hear the sacred recital given by the organist Miss Sutherland, and at 4 o'clock Reeve Christie of Saugeen opened the service. The choir of the church assisted by several singers from other choirs, rendered "Oh King of Kings" which concludes with the National Anthem, when the gathering rose and sang.

The program of song was well chosen including such fine old hymns as "Rock of Ages", "Nearer My God to Thee", "From Every Stormy Wind that Blows", "Lead Kindly Light". With the subdued tones of the great organ, and the skillful lead of the choir, the praise was most impressive. The presentations to Almighty God to lead and direct the nations, and to hasten the coming of peace were made by Revs. Messrs. J. R. Mann, I. Brubacher, M. D. Hallman, W. S. Buckberrough. An address was given by Rev. Mr. Watt on "Getting in Line with God's Will", in which he implored the men to come nearer to the Giver of all good. We are the children of God, and He wanted to bless men, but we were wandering from Him. Feelingly the speaker pleaded for all to return to the Father.

Dr. Scanlan dwelt upon the "Need of Prayer". He pointed out that the people were too much engrossed in pleasures, and that there were many occasions where pleasure had reigned supreme, where prayer should have been made. "Prayers are answered" said the doctor, "and it is promised and proven. This day our boys on the firing line may be sustained and strengthened if we will pray often." The speaker pointed out that God was ever willing to hear and answer, and he implored all from this day hence to pray without ceasing.

"God's Dealing with the Nations" was the subject ably dealt with by Rev. Mr. Gischler. He referred to the nations of history that had been scourged because of neglect for God. "Canada can never be the great nation we want it to be unless men were willing to serve God and be honest about it" said Mr. Gischler. "There is too much graft in political life for God to bless this nation, and unless we turned from these ways we dare not expect the peace of God." Mr. Gischler feelingly referred to the death of the Duchess of Connaught.

Mr. E. R. Sayles spoke briefly on "Obedience."

The program concluded with that beautiful old hymn "Rock of Ages". The service lasted for over two and a half hours and through it all there was an impressive spirit of fellowship prevailing.

A thoughtful suggestion was the request of Reeve Christie that the program of the service might be enclosed in letters to the boys overseas.

"England and the English"

Written especially for The Times by Lieut. J. Ewart Munro

West Sandling camp, Feb. 17, 1917.

This is to say a few kind words about England and the English. Next time you hear an Englishman reviewing the glorious work of the navy cheer him at every pause. No matter how thick he lays it on he doesn't say enough. But if the same gentleman starts praising the English climate point a finger at him and exclaim distinctly and without fear; "Whoa, Percival. There ain't no such animal as glorious English climate." Then you can inform him that the sun hasn't shone in England since '74 The sun never sets on the British Empire but it never rises in England. Despite its climate England is the greatest country in the world and you're not here two hours until you know it.

The first chunk of land we saw after leaving Canada was the north coast of Ireland. Somebody once called it the Emerald Isle, but that gentleman didn't see the northern coast from a liner in the month of November. It was a mighty gloomy looking spectacle that morning I saw it with the heavy surf pounding on its cliffs. We got introduced to an English fog going up the Mersey and it hasn't left us yet. It insists on following you all over England and makes its most savage attack in London. When you can see London it is a tremendous collection of chimneys and roofs with occasional roads and streets. Streets out three or four miles appear as busy as those in the centre of the city. Then there are historic spots and places frequented by great men past and present. I had dinner in the same hash foundry in which Charles Dickens used to eat his egg sandwich and get outside two cups of coffee. I made a mistake. If Dickens was English he had tea not coffee. Tea is the national beverage and enormous quantities are put away between the hours of 3 and 5 in the afternoon. It is usually accompanied by some bread or toast and jam. It doesn't count as a meal. They have three regular meals besides.

Canadians are much amused at the English trains. They look like a string of cigar boxes and are drawn by an engine which could be placed comfortably in The Times window. I laughed until we hit the first curve. That string of buses took it at about 70 miles an hour so I just hung on and hoped we would hit the hole of the next tunnel.

Riding on an English bus is also exciting. The drivers seem to try to see how close they can come to everything without hitting it. I found out that these busses sometimes turned over, so I quit riding on them. The London bus is an institution and so is its conductor. They are mostly women now. In fact women are doing pretty nearly everything in England and the winning of the war will be largely due to their efforts.

Soldiering is more strict over here. The book calls for rations and rations you get in England. We all live in huts which are "heated" by small stoves. The person who said they were heated had a better imagination than Dante. An English hut stove is a delusion and a snare. It burns coal and has a pipe going outside like any other stove but it doesn't throw off enough heat to coax a fly in from outside. Then rules and regulations known in the army as K. R. and O. won't let you interfere with it So you sit on the top of the stove and keep passing in coal.

We "carry on" much the same as we did at Camp Borden. The training is different in that we meet all kinds of troops. England is speeded up all right. With the last great effort Kaiser Bill will wish he had never been born. Despite all this the Englishman outwardly remains cool and collected. He never gets fussy. In fact he is so stolid that a Canadian feels a little like prodding him along. Such a thing as defeat never enters his head. How can Britain be defeated? The thing is absurd. Then when you find out what is being done you get the same confident feeling. It is more than confidence. It is surety.

We see all the wounded and wrecked men coming back from the front and we know that Sherman said a mouthful. Canadians are well received in England. No Englishman suffers from spontaneous combustion in his enthusiasm but he tells you the Canadians are "frightfully jolly chaps, yes frightfully jolly." Canada never got better advertising than it is getting now. When you get away from home you learn to appreciate it. Stories of the wonders of Canada lose nothing in the telling when a Canadian Tommy starts in.

But the most welcome sight will be that dark line on the horizon when the boat sails westward on the Alantic. The land where the sun shines and where there are real stoves will be better appreciated after Fritz has been made a sadder but wiser man.

Yours Sincerely,
J. Ewart Munro.

P. S. I get The Times occasionally and it is mighty welcome. I read the ads., quack advertisements and look at the ladies' pattern hints.

CARD OF THANKS

Mrs. Falconer and Mrs. Eaton desire through The Times to thank all those from town and country who contributed, also the ladies who assisted in serving and helping at the St. Patrick's dinner, and making it the big success it was, not forgetting the two ladies who gave their services in washing dishes.

Tenders Wanted

Tenders are wanted by Saugeen Township Council for operating the grader in the township for the season. Apply stating wages up to 1.10 p. m., on Saturday, March 24th, to Fred W. Elliott, Clerk.

BORN—To Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Scott, Port Elgin, on March 19th, a son.

A Saugeen Pioneer Passes

Mr. Andrew Sutherland passed away Friday March 16th, at the advanced age of 85 years, 9 months. For a long time Mr. Sutherland has been ailing, but a sturdy constitution aided him even in old age, to be out occasionally in the warm weather of last fall. He was the last of nine children born to the late John Sutherland of Aberdeenshire.

Andrew Sutherland was born in old Scotland in 1831. At the age of 21 he came to Canada, and for awhile he worked near Whitby. About 1860 he bought a farm on the 2nd of Saugeen. The farm had to be cleared, and deceased entered into the work of home building. Along with these duties he found time to serve St. Andrew's Presbyterian church in various offices, and also to serve his community as a school trustee. He was well read in all the affairs of his county and province, and as a Liberal he took keen interest and was well posted in political affairs.

For a number of years he has been living retired in Port Elgin, and it was the privilege of many of the older ones to pay frequent visits to his home, where a generous welcome awaited. Besides a wife, who will have the sympathy of all, there are left to mourn the following family: Mrs. McArthur, Alberta; William, Port Elgin; Mrs. Bain, Greenock; Mrs. G. S. Webb, Saugeen; Andrew, Saugeen; Mrs. Hammond, Perth; Mrs. Coaker, Chatham. A son and a daughter, (Mrs. James McEwing) predeceased their father.

The funeral on Monday afternoon to Port Elgin cemetery, was largely attended, a great many of the residents of Saugeen, attending to pay a last tribute to the memory of a good man.

Two Popular Young People Married

The marriage was quietly solemnized at noon today at the Evangelical parsonage, by the the Rev. Mr Gischler, of one of Port Elgin's most popular young ladies, Miss Pearl Thede daughter of Mr and Mrs. J. [illegible] Thede, to Melvin Reinhart, formerly of Port Elgin, but now of Stratford. The wedding was a very quiet one, only immediate friends and relatives attending. A buffet lunch was served at the home of the bride's parents, where the congratulations were extended, after which the happy young couple left on the [illegible] train for Buffalo and other points, followed by happy wishes of hosts of friends. They will reside in Stratford.

The W. C. T. U. met at Mrs. R. S. Begg's, on Tuesday last. Report of the medal contest department was given, all the proceeds were donated to Red Cross and Patriotic purposes. The local union extended an invitation to County Convention to meet here in June. After business was disposed of a program was given. Duets by Mrs. Muir and Miss McIntosh, also Mesdames Scanlan and Whittemore and an address by Rev. Mr. Buckberrough on "Woman's Influence in the Home". The meeting closed by an enjoyable social half hour. The union meet at Mrs. M. E. Robertson's on Thursday afternoon for Red Cross sewing.

The Last of The Limericks

This week the last of the limericks appear and they will be sent to the Manager of the Canadian Press Association at Toronto, who has consented to judge them. The winners and their limericks will be printed as soon as the awards are made.

The contest has created considerabe interest and amusement.

Limericks appear this week from Toronto and Manitoba, as well as locally.

The written copy, and not the printed verse, will be sent to the judges, so that there will be no mistake.

Some limericks have been printed which do not conform to the rules, but these are submitted to the judges, who will deal with them.

The Buyer's Guide column is dandy,
So very instructive and handy;
It shows where to hike
To get what you'd like,
From shoestrings and bacon to candy.

The Buyer's Guide has made a great hit,
With the women whose men are "doing their bit",
For the high cost of living
Makes them be a bit saving,
So they think the Guide is just it.

Watch each week the Buyer's Guide,
For the bargains side by side,
Put Eaton's on the shelf,
To Port take your pelf,
And for home trade then decide.

Horrah! hurrah! for the Buyer's Guide,
Let the sweeping and dusting slide,
While we break the foes lines
Give three cheers for The Times
And the 'Ads' in the Buyer's Guide.

The Buyer's Guide is a column,
But more like a mighty volume.
It tells you where to buy postum
And the newest fabric for your costume.

In Port Elgin town lives a wise old scribe,
Who prints what he calls the Buyer's Guide,
And about a big store
With goods galore
And genial Frank Barber presides.

With The Times as a Buyer's Guide
You may safely send a child,
To buy at Port Elgin,
And don't go too seldom
For the goods that the merchants provide

Through the Buyer's Guide in The Times we find,
Bargains offered to suit each purse and mind,
So those are the stores to which we'll sure go
When the merchants take pains to let us know
Of the goods with which they're counters are lined.

If you advertise in the Buyer's Guide,
You soon in a Ford sedan will ride.
Give her the feed,
She'll give you the speed.
And sure a fair maiden you'll have by your side.

The Buyer's Guide by day and night
Will be a source of great delight
If you advertise true
It will bring to you
A name that is yours by right.

If you would advertise in Buyer's Guide
I'm sure you'd cast all care aside,
For anyone who is wise
Will use their eyes
And good luck is nothing to hide.

He wouldn't put an "Ad" in the "Times Buyer's Guide",
So in business he failed and in poverty died.
"If you would be wise
You will sure advertise
And take warning from me", were the last words he sighed.

If you would advertise in the Buyer's Guide.
In a Chevrolet car you soon may ride,
And the Editor in-chief
May enjoy a piece of beef
With his wife and her poodle by her side.

Who established the Buyer's Guide?
It was E. Roy, with vision wide.
Now one may see at a glance,
If there is the slightest chance
High cost of living to divide.

Why advertise in the Buyer's Guide?
Well! The Times will spread it far and wide,
And don't you think that you'd feel sore
To see cash rolling in next door,
And you have to walk while they can ride!

There was a young man named Sayles
And another who came over from Wales
And whene'er the two meet
Be it sunshine or sleet,
They spring some remarkable tales.

The Buyers Guide is here to show
What to buy and where to go.
It always tells us what to take
So we won't make a big mistake
And if we read it we should know.

Try advertising in the Buyer's Guide
Throughout the world so wide
It will give the store keepers lots of pride
To see their ads in the Buyers' Guide.

When I advertise in the Buyers Guide
I see the editor scratch his hide
He oft has used the big stick,
But this is the best to make money quick,
For in a gas car he takes a joy ride

The "Buyers Guide" is the place to try,
And Port Elgin stores can soon defy,
The city's big department store,
With catalogues and ads. galore,
Come! Help to boost the old town high.

The "Buyers Guide" is the people's friend,
So advertise and you may depend,
That Port Elgin will grow,
And the stores will show,
There is profit for them in the end.

The Two Claimants

(By Louise B. Cummings.)

Howard Prower and Ralph Cunningham, two young Englishmen, met in the gold country of Colorado and became fast friends.

These young men, having compared notes, learned that they came from eminent British families. Prower was a younger son of a nobleman, and Cunningham claimed to be a graduate of Oxford. Besides the fact of their being fellow countrymen, there was a strong resemblance between them. They were nearly the same height and build and both light complexioned. There was one difference between them, though it was scarcely noticeable. Prower's right eye was of a slightly different shade of blue from his left eye.

But there was a great difference in the character of the two men. Howard Prower was a kind-hearted, noble man; Cunningham was a devil. They prospected together for a time, agreeing that if one struck paying dirt he would share it with the other. Finally Cunningham dug a hole in the ground for which he was offered a hundred thousand dollars. He had no intention of sharing it with Prower, and was deliberating how he could beat him out of his portion when a letter came addressed to Howard Prower, Earl of Brokefield.

Prower was away on a prospecting tour when the letter came. Both men had been away from England for ten years. If Prower were out of the way Cunningham might return, pass himself off for the new Earl, and thus appropriate the title and estates. While he was deliberating on this plan word was received that Prower had been attacked by claim jumpers and murdered.

Cunningham went to the place where the fight had occurred and tried to find his friend's body. He was told that a number of persons had been killed in the fight and they had all been buried side by side. He was shown the graves, but saw no reason why he should exhume his friends body. Returning to his cabin, he opened the letters that had been received and learned that Prower's father and two older brothers had been taken ill and all had died within a period of a few weeks.

A month from that time Cunningham appeared in England and claimed to be Howard Prower, now Earl of Brokefield. There was no one of the family to receive him except a sister of the late earl, who did not doubt that he was her nephew.

No one disputed the identity of the claimant except Lady Gladys Pembroke, the daughter of a neighboring nobleman who would have been Howard Prower's wife except for his poverty. She had not married and when the heir returned expected a happy meeting. To play the part of her lover was more than Cunningham could accomplish, and she at once pronounced him an imposter.

But notwithstanding this assertion, which was not very largely accepted, Cunningham established himself as the Earl of Brokefield. He had played the part of a peer for four months, when who should appear but the real Earl. Prower had been left for dead by those who had attacked him and those who had joined in his defence. Before they had returned to bury the dead he had crawled away. When he had recovered he looked for his chum, but did not find him. Later he had heard of his father's and brothers' death, and at once started for England.

When one day Howard Prower walked into his home and met his old friend face to face the latter turned pale. There was one of two courses which he might choose—step down and out or claim that the newcomer was an impostor. He chose the latter course. He ignored his visitor, saying that he had come to personate the real Howard Prower, but that he would be unable to substantiate his claim.

Prower, aghast at such treatment, withdrew and entered suit against the man who had usurped his title and his property. His aunt unfortunately adhered to the opinion that Cunningham was her nephew. This left Lady Gladys Pembroke the only witness in Prower's favor, and her evidence was not counted so valuable as that of a member of the claimant's family. Nevertheless, Lady Gladys warmly espoused Howard's cause, and the relations of lovers that had existed before he left for America were resumed.

One witness was found in an old woman who had nursed Howard when he was a baby. But she had never seen him since that time, and her evidence was not considered of much value, especially since in her old age she had lost her eyesight. However, at the trial she was called to the witness stand and testified as follows:

"I have not seen Howard Prower since he was a baby, when I used to give him his bath and wheel him in his perambulator, but if I could see plainly now as then I would know him, for I noticed on him a defect I have never seen in any one else. His eyes were of a different shade of blue."

The two claimants were at once examined carefully. Nearly all the examiners pronounced that the blue of Howard's right eye was slightly lighter than that of his left.

This settled the case definitely, and he was adjudged to be the Earl of Brokefield. Cunningham was sent to prison for a term of years for making false pretensions.

Siberia's Boom Town.

What the great Trans Siberian Railway has done to develop the remote districts which it penetrates is strikingly shown in the story of the town of Novo Nikolaievsk, Siberia. When the rails of the Trans Siberian reached the Ob River, the site of the town was a tangle of underbrush, with no signs of human habitation; now it is a modern city of 10,000 inhabitants, with electric lighting, large stone buildings, schools, a large town hall and a cathedral in the Byzantine style of architecture.

The reason for this rapid development is that Novo Nikolaievsk is situated at the intersection of the Trans-Siberian Railway and the River Ob, the great artery of communication for Western Siberia. Now that the Altai Railway has reached Blisk, Barnaul and Semipalatinsk, much freight will go beyond Novo Nikolaievsk, but it is expected that the new city will make up for this loss by the cargoes that will be transhipped into vessels on the Ob for conveyance down the river to the projected railway from the Ob to the White Sea. Novo Nikolaievsk will thus become a "window into Europe," not only for the Altai region, but also for all Siberia tapped by the railway from the eastern boundary of the Tomsk government almost to Omsk.—New York Times.

Minard's Liniment Used by Physicians

IN DAMP WEATHER.

Precautions to Be Taken by the Housewife.

A little while ago two young housewives were condoling with each other over the prolonged season of humidity and dampness.

"We can't get a single bureau drawer closed," said one, "and last night when I wanted to get out the very best table linen I own for an unexpected guest, we couldn't get the linen drawer open, and instead of showing off my best, we had to use paper napkins."

"We're in a worse state," said the other. "Finally after much pulling I got a bureau drawer all the way out, and now I keep it propped up on two chairs because I can't get it in again."

Summer dampness is really hard to guard against. It is sure to come every year. The weather is too warm to permit fires which might restore the house to a comfortable dryness, and as the dampness is only temporary not very much can be done to furniture or inside fixtures. It is a temptation to have the spreading draws and doors planed off a little, but to do so is a mistake for the return of heat and dry weather will cause them to shrink back to their normal proportions. If the are planed off now they will let in most unpleasant draughts and dust later.

Perhaps no one thing about damp weather is more distressing than the condition it inflicts on the salt cellar. If the salt cellar or shakers are emptied after each meal and thoroughly dried in a warming oven, and refilled just before the next meal, the salt will still be moist and sticky when it is used. One of the hotels at the seashore where dampness is inevitable keeps inverted water glasses over the salt dishes. Of course it is a little bit inconvenient to lift up a glass whenever you wish to get a spoonful of salt, but the results do make for dryness. Grains of uncooked rice can be mixed with salt used in shakers with rather satisfactory results.

Probably the fact that there is much greater humidity in England than in this country in part accounts for the fact that open cellars are always used there and that "salt shakers" are regarded as a decided Americanism. The obvious advantage of shakers is that in them the salt is kept free from dust and contact with the air, but in times of dampness one is tempted to use the English cellars, from which salt may be taken by means of a salt spoon so much more easily than it can be shaken out when it has absorbed a good share of moisture.

DOING COLONIZATION WORK

Western Canada is not the land of the romancer, but "happily ending stories" frequently owe origin to the west. For example, here is what Albert V. Laidlaw, of North Dakota, at the Royal Alexandra Hotel told a newspaper representative the other day:

"I am on my way as a home-visitor to my former home. I have ended my work for the season in harvesting grain. I have seen the last of it threshed, drawn, loaded and shipped for sale.

"I have worked early and late through the entire season with the idea of 'making good' on the season and assuring myself a holiday. I have been successful. Everything is snug at my farm buildings. There is nothing for the hired man to do but to feed the stock. I am away on a three-months' leave, and I am going back to my former home and tell the folks about Western Canada."

Canadian Pacific Railway officials assert that a superior class of settlers from the United States arrived in Western Canada last year. The settlers have made good, it was asserted. Many of the settlers are now home-visitors to their former homes.

Officials asserted that in addition to the pleasures to the home-visitors in taking a holiday and the revenue to railways in the west, the home visitors are doing a great colonization work for Canada. The holidays of the home-visitors invariably lead to new settlers and the breaking of new soil, which means increased crops and additional prosperity to the west, passenger officials assert.

Every brave man is a man of his word.—Corneille.

The Seal Ring.

The seal ring dates back to the days of the Old Testament and products of the glyptic art, as gem engraving was called, were known in the most remote times. In Exodus xxviii., 17-20, mention is made of the following stones, upon which the names of the twelve children of Israel were engraved: The sardius, the topaz, the carbuncle, the emerald, the sapphire, the diamond, the ligure, the agate, the amethyst, beryl, onyx and jasper. In verse 2 of the same chapter we find mention of the engraving of signets upon the hardest stones. It is believed that the Egyptians instructed the Israelites in the art of stone engraving. The Egyptians used the lapidary's wheel and emery powder and knew the use of the diamond in engraving other hard stones. Among the Assyrian and Babylonians ruins were found fine specimens of signets on gems, many of them set in rings.

THE VOICES CALLING ME.

I walk alone on the beach to-night
And the stars throw down their gentle light.
I'm catching the lure of the old church bells,
They sweep me on where memory dwells,
And bring in those visions bright—bring in those visions bright
Of many I loved, who from o'er the sea
Are stretching out hands of love to me;
Oh, their voices are calling me, so tenderly calling me.

I'm pacing alone on the shore to-night
Where the sea gulls roam in rapid flight;
And the waters are lapping their rocky bound
While silence and gloom reign all around.
My visions to-night are in the past
Where the pale horse rider his shadows cast
And carried a loved one home—carried a loved one home.
My spirit hastes across the sea,
Where hands of love are stretched out to me,
And their voices are calling me, O, tenderly calling me.

I'm keeping my vigil alone to-night,
And the waves are still, no foam is in sight;
The great ships pass on their outward way,
On their journey speed both night and day,
With the mariner 'fore the mast—the mariner 'fore the mast.
How like to life, my heart doth say,
From cradle's rock till the hair is grey;
O, it's coming to me and thee!
Hark, the voices are calling me, so tenderly calling me.

My watch I'm keeping alone to-night
And the rippling waves show a breeze in sight
That presently turns to a gale.
And the mad caps foam in their giant might.
Leaving many a bark in direst plight
Great peril for those who sail—great peril for those who sail.
How like to life, my heart doth say,
Great billows o'erwhelm us day by day,
Take loved ones over the sea,
Where their voices are calling me,
O, tenderly calling me.

I've come to the end of my watch to-night
And the storm is o'er—has spent its might;
Great wreckage on shore is piled,
For some have gone to their last long sleep,
A grave have found in the ocean deep
Laid low by the waters wild—laid low by the waters wild.
How like to life, my heart doth say,
We sail for a port that's far away,
O, far across the sea we're sailing, me and thee;
Hark, sweet voices are calling me, so tenderly calling me.

Graphic Description.

Zach had been introduced to a new circular saw. The foreman of the sawmills performed the introduction, and after giving Zach a few necessary extra instructions he left him to his work. Zach was really interested in the buzzing blade, and his curiosity getting the better of his discretion, he soon found himself minus a finger. Despite his excitability he was something of a stoic, so he bound up his wound without seeking assistance. While he was thus engaged the foreman reappeared. To him Zach described the accident.

"But how on earth did you manage it?" the foreman exclaimed, angrily, for the prospects of damages ahead were not exactly pleasant.

Zach shook his head.

"Sure, an' I don't know," he said. "I just touched the thing like this with my finger when—I'm blessed if there ain't another one gone!"—New York Times.

CONSTIPATED CHILDREN

Constipation is one of the most common ailments of childhood and the child suffering from it cannot thrive. To keep the little one well the bowels must be kept regular and the stomach sweet. To do this nothing can equal Baby's Own Tablets. Concerning them Mrs. Romaine Poirier, Mizonette, N. B., says:—"My baby suffered from constipation, but thanks to Baby's Own Tablets he is perfectly well again." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Remarkable Reptiles.

During the time of deposition of the clays constituting the Morrison shale in southern Colorado there existed a great variety of remarkable reptiles of huge size. Their bones, which are in places abundant, are the remains of animals that were mired in the soft clay of which Morrison formation largely consists. Some of these creatures, such as the brontosaurus, were sixty feet long. Many of them had remarkably small heads, notably the stegosaurus, which had so diminutive a brain that it must have been very stupid. This animal was undoubtedly very clumsy also, but its huge size and protective armor aided in its preservation.—Geological Survey Bulletin.

Montreal Man Tells Wonderful Story

BAD CASE OF BRIGHT'S DISEASE CURED BY DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

George Sullivan, Who Suffered From the Dread Disease for Two Years, Gives Credit for His Recovery to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Montreal, Que., March 22.—(Special)—Completely cured of that most dreaded of all diseases, Bright's Disease of the Kidneys, Mr. George Sullivan, 284 de St Valliers street, this city, is spreading the good news that he found his cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I suffered from Bright's Disease for two years," Mr. Sullivan states in an interview. "I was unable to work for weeks at a time. I spent hundreds of dollars on doctors without receiving any real benefit and received outdoor treatment at the Toronto General Hospital.

"I was feeling very badly discouraged when a friend advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. After using three boxes I was much better. I kept on till I had used nine boxes, when I was completely cured.

"Naturally I consider Dodd's Kidney Pills a wonderful remedy."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are no cure-all. They cure kidney diseases of all kinds from backache to Bright's Disease. The proof of this is their growing popularity in Canada for over a quarter of a century. If you haven't used them ask your neighbor about them.

TWO NEW V. C. S.

Heroic Officers Win Highest Award for Bravery.

According to the London Gazette the King has been pleased to confer the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officers:

CAPTAIN WILLIAM ANDERSON BLOOMFIELD, Scouts Corps, S. African Mtd. Bde.

For most conspicuous bravery. Finding that, after being heavily attacked in an advanced and isolated position, the enemy were working round his flanks, Captain Bloomfield evacuated his wounded, and subsequently withdrew his command to a new position, he himself being amongst the last to retire.

On arrival at the new position he found that one of the wounded—No. 2475, Corporal D. M. P. Bowker—had been left behind. Owing to very heavy fire he experienced difficulties in having the wounded corporal brought in.

Rescue meant passing over some 400 yards of open ground, swept by heavy fire, in full view of the enemy. This task Captain Bloomfield determined to face himself, and, unmindful of personal danger, he succeeded in reaching Corporal Bowker and carrying him back, subjected throughout the double journey to heavy machine-gun and rifle fire.

This act showed the highest degree of valor and endurance.

TEMP. LIEUT. EUGENE PAUL BENNETT, Worcester Regiment.

For most conspicuous bravery in action when in command of the second wave of the attack. Finding that the first wave had suffered heavy casualties, its commander killed and the line wavering, Lieut. Bennett advanced at the head of the second wave, and by his personal example of valor and resolution reached his objective with but sixty men.

Isolated with his small party, he at once took steps to consolidate his position under heavy rifle and machine-gun fire from both flanks, and although wounded he remained in command directing and controlling.

He set an example of cheerfulness and resolution beyond all praise, and there is little doubt that but for his personal example of courage, the attack would have been checked at the outset.

CORAL REEFS.

Nature's Methods in Building Those Seashell Monuments.

Coral reefs surrounded many of the islands in the Pacific. They protect the lowlands from the washing of the waves, and the still waters inclosed by them are the only harbors of refuge for ships. The reefs themselves furnish the greatest peril to navigation, and if there were no inlet through which a vessel could enter their protected circle they would be a danger and nothing else.

But almost every reef has such an inlet. It is a necessary result of the laws under which the forces of nature work. To understand this we must see how these reefs are formed.

Chemically the reef corals are almost pure carbonate of lime, the substance of ordinary limestone and marble. The reef grows as the shell of the oyster or any other shellfish grows. It is itself the common and undivided shell of innumerable polyps or minute insects, which are being produced and are dying in successive generations.

These tiny beings get all their living from the waters of the sea. It is from this source also that they derive the salts of lime from which they secret the bony structure that remains after the animal is dead.

The coral polyp cannot live in fresh water. Their food supply is brought to them by the waves and currents of the sea. As a result it is found that directly opposite the mouth of the rivers from the island the reef does not grow. There will be the inlet to the inclosed waters.

HUN RETREAT PLAYS INTO BRITISH HANDS

Military Expert of London Times On the Ancre Retirement.

HINDENBURG'S LINE

Where He Has Prepared to Make Fight Against the British.

London special cable.—The Turks must often have cause to remember Tallyrand's saying that in every alliance there is a man and a horse. The German master has shown not the slightest regard for Turkish interests. He uses Turkish troops at Dvina, in Galicia, and in Roumania with callous indifference to the fact that great provinces are taken from Turkey by the Allies and other provinces are much threatened. Germany has displayed complete indifference to the fact that Armenia, Mesopotamia, Arabia, and possibly Syria have or are being torn from its unfortunate dupe.

The victorious armies of General Maude are in energetic pursuit of the enemy.

The entry into Bagdad produced a great impression both in the East and the West. The pursuit for 10 miles by the cavalry is enough to make our horsemen expire with envy. We feel that the operations of the Russians under Yudenitch and Baratoff, and of the British under Maude and Murray may be in some sort connected, and if proper use can be made where needed of the great army at Saloniki, the downfall of Turkish military power may be accomplished.

We must not suppose, however, that this is going to be easy. There is still a large Turkish army in Asia Minor which may make Yudenitch's task hard unless he is reinforced. The operations in Mesopotamia will become more difficult with the rising of the waters, and owing to the marshes and floods, while even on the side of Syria the summer is not the most favorable campaigning season.

If we ask why the Germans do not throw a larger force of Turks against General Maude, the answer may be that operations in the Sinai deserts began months before the force in Mesopotamia stirred. The Turks may have sent to Syria against Murray all the reserves at their disposal.

THE RETREAT ON THE ANCRE.

The main interest centres in the west on the retreat of the Germans on the Ancre. The trifling German success in the Champagne sector has since been retrieved. There are some signs of a renewal of the contest at Verdun. In the German retreat on the Ancre we gather more fruits of the Somme victories. It is clear the Germans could not retain the positions, because they were shot out of them.

The retreat is, of course, hailed as a German victory by the submissive German press. The Somme was a German victory, though the enemy lost position after position and suffered [illegible] casualties and the loss of immense war material. Verdun was the same sort of a victory. Let it be taken for granted whether the Germans win or lose they are always victors on paper.

How far the enemy proposes to go back on the Ancre front does not seem at present determined, but evidently he wants to fight on clean ground, where we shall have the worst deal. He seems to have prepared such a position on what is known as "The Hindenburg Line," which appears to run near Lens through St. Quentin toward Laon. Far from incommoding us this retreat is precisely what we desire. There is no difficulty in retreating under cover of night. Thousands of armies have done so thousands of times. It is not by any means a German discovery.

A PATHETIC BELIEF.

To what extent the whole German strategy is dominated by the pathetic belief that England will be compelled to make peace by the unrestricted submarine warfare is a question to which [illegible] we cannot give a [illegible]. The German people [illegible] that the [illegible] [illegible]. They are asked to hold out a few months more, when England apparently [illegible] for peace, but the star [illegible] of a country like the British Isles by a country situated geographically as is Germany [illegible] [illegible] difficult proposition. We wonder whether German leaders who gull the people are themselves also gulled by this hallucination.

Let us be charitable to the Germans, suppose this is not the main operation. What else are the Germans going to do?

GERMANS' GREAT STRATEGIC RESERVE.

We cannot describe the question usually until we know the destination of Hindenburg's great strategic reserve which still remains in the interior of Germany. We cannot draw firm conclusions from a postponement of the offensive by Germany, because the winter has been severe and must immensely have impeded transport of all kinds. A hard winter in Germany is no joke. All waterways became frozen hard. This year various substitutes to grease railway axle boxes are said to have been frozen. Therefore the postponement of the offensive act on Germany's part is not necessarily proof that none is coming. With at least 700,000 more men in the field than he had a year ago, the enemy is capable of holding hard, provided he retains the necessary physical and moral momentum; provided also the Allies have not placed in the field equivalent reinforcements. If German leaders really believe in the effects they promise the people from the submarine warfare, then Hindenburg's strategic reserve may be retained in the interior and used mainly as a threat of a counter-offensive against the Allies. The absence of such a reserve in 1916 gravely prejudiced German operations. But if German leaders' belief or evidence of the fact shows that the hope placed in the submarine warfare is extravagant, then it will develop upon the German armies to seek a decision which only an offensive can give them.

NEXT STROKE ON THE WEST.

Though the new German reserves have apparently not been moved out nothing definite can be said until their destination is ascertained. Evidence continues to point to the western front as the most probable theatre of the next German effort.

Now that the navy is under Hindenburg, this effort may have both services for combat. An attack upon us at home, or a return to the old scheme of an attack on the French channel ports is included among the possibilities. We must also regard operations in Italy, with an extensive front. But necessarily all hypothesis concerning the action of the enemy are subordinate to the initiative we may assume. On this matter nothing can be said.

RESIGNATION OF LYAUTEY

French War Minister Ignorant of Chamber Methods.

Stands by Decision—House Blocked Statement.

Paris Special Cable.—Gen. Louis Lyautey who resigned yesterday as Minister of War, apparently was the victim of his ignorance of Parliamentary methods. Like most other generals who have been Ministers of War in the past, he soon found himself ill at ease in his position, being unable to adapt himself to political life. He wished to resign a few weeks ago on account of the opposition which developed in Parliament to his bill requiring that men rejected as soldiers on account of physical defects be again examined, and providing for the incorporation of priests in fighting units.

In handing his resignation to Premier Briand, General Lyautey said his decision was irrevocable. After he left the Chamber he went directly to the War Ministry, despatched pending business, and announced his resignation to his staff.

The Premier called on President Poincare at midnight and informed him of the general's resignation. It is understood the Cabinet will meet to-day to deliberate what steps must be taken on account of the situation which has developed.

The words which aroused anger in the Chamber of Deputies formed the first part of a written statement prepared in advance by the general, the whole of which he was unable to read on account of the tumult. What he read was as follows:

"I must admit that I at first thought it would be preferable if this debate did not take place. It really did not seem opportune at a moment when I had just established an organization which answers, in principle, at least, to most of your requirements. To begin such a discussion, I thought, and still think, is dangerous, but if I agreed to it, it was because it was most distasteful to me to give the appearance of shunning it. I believe there are things which must not be spoken. You will permit me not to follow you into technical questions, because even in secret session my responsible opinion is that it would expose the national defence to risks."

At this point the General was interrupted by a tumultuous outbreak. During a brief lull Paul Deschanel, President of the Chamber, said: "It must not be inferred, from certain words spoken here that the Chamber has not the right to discuss in secret session everything concerning the national defence."

General Lyautey did not seem to understand what the trouble was about. He wished to continue the reading of his speech, but the uproar began again, louder than ever. He finally gave up and left the tribune.

STRANGERS WED

To Save a Vast Estate to the Wife

Chicago Report.—According to a story told by Dr. Gilbert H. Willis, of Bombay, India, Miss Phillippa Hartley, of New York, was married yesterday to John Colfax, a Chicagoan, whom she never before had met, in order to ensure title to the estate of Carleton Hannan, of Bombay, who is said to be worth several million dollars. Dr. Willis said he induced Colfax to wed Miss Hartley and accept a specified amount, with the understanding that he would never again see his wife.

A marriage license issued to the couple gave the bride's age was 25 and the bridegroom's as 22. Dr. Willis said the marriage ceremony was performed by a minister whose name he refused to divulge. He also refused to give the address of the bridegroom.

Dr. Willis said that Hannan had requested that his niece, Miss Hartley, marry before his death or within three months thereafter, in order to satisfy a trust agreement which he drew up in order to make sure that the bulk of his estate would go to Miss Hartley without danger of a legal contest by other relatives. A trust agreement, in accordance with this arrangement, was filed for record in Chicago yesterday.

THE WEST NEEDS 12,500 LABORERS

R. B. Bennett Reports On the Plans to Get Them.

Outsiders Are Guaranteed Against Military Service.

Ottawa Cable.—R. B. Bennett, M. P., Director-General of National Service, has just returned from an extended trip through the prairie Provinces. The main purpose of his trip was to complete arrangements for much-needed additional farm labor, in order that full effect might be given to the increased production policy of the Government.

The man power inventory recently taken by the National Service Board also makes it abundantly clear that there is no surplus of agricultural labor available in Canada, with the possible exception of Prince Edward Island. This situation renders it imperative to look elsewhere for additional help in the present emergency. The only available field would appear to be the middle and western States.

A brief survey of the situation indicated that 5,000 men were required in Manitoba, and a similar number in Saskatchewan. The minimum number needed for Alberta was 2,500. The immediate problem, therefore, resolved itself into inducing some 12,500 agricultural laborers in the United States to come to Canada to help us with the spring work on our farms.

An arrangement was completed by Mr. Bennett with the provincial Governments of the prairie section whereby from $150,000 to $2,000,000 will be appropriated jointly by the Dominion Government and the provinces in order to make a whirlwind campaign for labor in the western states.

The provinces will forthwith send twenty-two men south and the Dominion Government an equal number, which will render available forty-four special agents, who will work in conjunction with the regular officers of the Immigration branch of the Department of the Interior, in order to bring to the attention of prospective settlers the attractions of the western provinces, with special reference to the present farm labor situation.

It was decided to advance a portion of the railway fare of experienced farm hands from certain points in the United States to the boundary line, where the cent-a-mile rate of the Canadian lines commences to apply. This phase of the work will be handled by the Dominion immigration officers. The cost involved will be borne equally by the prairie provinces and the Dominion Government.

Each farm laborer entering Canada under this arrangement will be furnished with a certificate to the effect that as long as he remains a citizen of an alien country he cannot be called upon for any military service during the present war, nor will any obstacle be placed in the way of his departure from Canada at any time on account of the war situation. This was done to overcome the fear of conscription in the minds of many.

The administration of the distribution of these men will be left in the hands of the provincial authorities.

The Provincial Governments are dealing with the matter of increased production in an energetic and systematic manner. The Province of Manitoba has appropriated half a million dollars to assist those who require additional seed, and similar action has also been taken by the Government of Saskatchewan.

NOW 30 MILES BEYOND BAGDAD

British Forces Rushing to Join With Russ Troops.

Townshend's Guns Recovered From Fleeing Turks.

London Special Cable.—3 important announcements were made to-day of the operations in Mesopotamia. The first was the official statement from Constantinople that the Turks had taken up a new position between Bagdad and Samara, about 30 miles northwest of the fallen city, and along the line of the Bagdad railway. The second was the unofficial although altogether probable news that the Russian forces advancing from [illegible], Persia, had occupied the Persian town of Kirmanshah. The third was the official statement received this afternoon from General Maude, that the British advanced detachments are now 30 miles above Bagdad.

Kirmanshah is about 10 miles southwest of Hamadan, which the Russians captured soon after the opening of the new offensive undertaken in connection with the British advance up the Tigris. It is about 30 miles from the Mesopotamian border, and is almost due east of Samara. If the Turks decide to make a stand at Samara they must effectively block the progress of the Russians, or suffer their flank to be turned.

Telegraphing on Tuesday General Maude reports: "Our advance detachments reached a point thirty miles upstream from Bagdad, and that steps had been taken to prevent the flooding of Bagdad city during the coming rise in the river.

"The Bagdad Turkish small arms factory is in good repair. The railway workshops contain good, serviceable machinery, which is uninjured; also five locomotives and some rolling stock. A large quantity of obsolete ordnance, including antique bronze guns and masses of all kinds of ammunition, have been found in the citadel.

"The guns which were captured from us at the surrender of Kut also have been recovered in Bagdad."

SOLID BEHIND THEIR LEADERS

Is Claim of Ry. Brotherhood Chief Officers

Now Conferring With Eastern Local Heads.

New York Report.—The chiefs of the four great brotherhoods of railroad employees came here to-day from Washington, for a final conference with the local chairman of unions in eastern territory, before meeting the members of the National Conference Committee of the railroads tomorrow to present their demands for an eight-hour day. It was expected that the eastern representatives would follow the example of the employees' conferences, held yesterday at Washington and St. Louis, and ratify plans for a general strike if the railroads refuse to grant their demands.

Strike orders, to take effect first in the east on Saturday night, already have been issued, and the organized employees await directions to be issued here after Thursday's conference. The managers' committee, which is handling the situation for the railroads, will meet here to-night. The managers maintain that there cannot be any compromise at this time, pending a decision by the Supreme Court on the Adamson law.

There is no expectation on the part of the railroad leaders here that President Wilson will take action prior to the announcement of the results of Thursday's meeting. W. J. Lee, head of the trainmen's organization, declared that he and his associates would go before the railroads' representatives with their entire membership united behind their demands.

AMERICAN BOAT SUNK UNWARNED

Torpedoed by German Sub.—The Crew Safe.

U-Boat Refused to Render Aid.

London Special Cable.—American steamship Algonquin has been torpedoed by a German submarine. The crew was saved.

The Algonquin, owned by the American Star Line, of New York, was recently transferred from British registry. She sailed from New York for London on Feb. 20th, and was reported to have about eight Americans in her crew.

The Algonquin was torpedoed without warning, according to a report made by the American Consul at Plymouth. The Consul states that all on board were saved.

The vessel was torpedoed at 6 o'clock on the morning of March 12. The submarine refused assistance, according to the report of the Consul at Plymouth. Twenty-seven men have been landed.

There are two American steamships Algonquin. The one sunk was recently transferred from British registry. She was a vessel of 1,806 tons gross, 275 feet long and 40 feet beam. She was a single screw steamer and was built at Glasgow in 1888.

Later advices from Plymouth say the German submarine opened fire upon the Algonquin from a distance of 4,000 yards, firing about twenty shells. These were not sufficient to sink the steamer, so she was boarded by men from the submarine, who placed four bombs, and the Algonquin was blown up. The crew was given plenty of time to leave the vessel.

AMERICA MUST HELP BELGIUM

Even War Will Not Absolve Her, Says Hoover,

Who Points to Britain's Noble Course.

New York Report.—No war into which America may be plunged can absolve her from the duty of continuing to give relief to the starving and destitute people of Belgium, Herbert C. Hoover, head of the commission for relief in Belgium, said to-day before his departure for Europe to take up with renewed determination the task in which he has been engaged for many months. Mr. Hoover sailed on a neutral ship for a Spanish port, and will go to Paris, London, Rotterdam, and, if conditions permit, will enter Belgium to confer with the American members of the commission now there.

Meanwhile the campaign to raise relief funds will be continued in America.

If there is no war between the United States and Germany this money will be distributed in Belgium by the Americans and in northern France by Hollanders. If Mr. Hoover is able to make satisfactory arrangements with the Dutch Government. If war comes, arrangements have been completed, it was announced, for Dutch and Spanish agents in Belgium to take over the work of the Americans.

"No war or other difficulty into which America may be plunged can absolve her from this duty, and least of all from following the example of France and Great Britain. The temptation to cease giving should not be yielded to each time a ship is lost or the rumors of war become alarming. I cannot believe that our people will succumb to such impulses."

Mr. Hoover points to the Belgian charity administered by Great Britain and France, although at war, declaring it "will be one of the marvels of history, for they have handed to the commission more than 90 per cent. of all the money spent by the commission for the feeding of Belgium."

Of the commission's 10,000,000 wards, Mr. Hoover said, 2,500,000 are totally destitute—"dependents upon the conscience and goodwill of the world."

Of 220,000 Belgian refugees in England, Mr. Hoover declared, all except 15,000, mostly women and children, are employed, and they are contributing, from their earnings in British industries, $200,000 monthly. "I want particularly to emphasize this point," he said, "because the Belgians have a right to impress upon the world that they are not hanging back without a struggle and permitting themselves or their friends to become dependents."

Mr. Hoover spoke of the situation as affecting the Belgian children, declaring the commission is caring for 160,000 who are debilitated. These, he said, are under special feeding, and another 1,250,000 children require an extra meal a day "to avert a great tragedy," and to save these children $1,250,000 monthly is needed. "Europe is looking to us," he said. "Our measure is being taken."

MUST HOLD OUT FOR 120 DAYS

Germany Has to Bear Ruthless Measures in Vogue.

Even If Peace Came, Food Would Be Unobtainable.

The Hague, Cable.—After the debate in the Prussian House of Deputies March 6, on the food crisis, Dr. Heim, leader of the Bavarian peasant party published an article concerning the situation from which the Vorwaerts prints the following extracts:

"It is high time that the facts, which up to the present are known to but few of the uninitiated, should be published. It is better to tell the people the truth squarely than to continue to work on a system which has hopelessly broken down through its own faults. We must hold out one hundred and twenty days longer until the new crops; but even if to-morrow brought 'hunger peace,' we would be unable for months to get a pound more of bread grain owing to lack of tonnage and the world's crop failure.

"This must be told the people squarely, and the ruthless measures must be borne, whether they affect peasants and town dwellers not only in Bavaria and South Germany, but also the Prussian agrarians."

Dr. Heim then attacks the shortcomings of the Prussian agrarians, denouncing their failure to observe the ordinance to surrender the barley crop of 1916, which, he says, has not yet been done.

CAUSE OF ALL GREECE'S WOES

Entente Proposal re Eastern Macedonia Blamed

By Former Premier Venizelos, for King's Course.

Paris Cable.—Former Premier Venizelos, of Greece traces all the troubles of his country to the proposal of the Entente that Eastern Macedonia should be ceded to Bulgaria. In the course of a long statement given to the Havas correspondent at Saloniki, M. Venizelos reviews the events in Greece from the beginning of 1916, and explains and justifies his conduct.

"I am not exaggerating," he says, "when I say that without the Entente's proposal in regard to Eastern Macedonia the King would never have dared to refuse to fulfil our treaty obligations towards Serbia."

The former Premier further declared that he only raised the standard of revolt when it became evident that King Constantine would never join the Entente. He said that he refrained from giving the movement an anti-dynastic character because the Allies made that an express condition of their support, and because the object he had in view was to carry out as far as possible the duties of Greece in respect to Serbia. He concluded:

"Our sole aim at present is to win the war. The outstanding grave internal questions can be solved after victory, and national unity easily reestablished. In the impossible event of Germany being victorious, King Constantine would set up an unbridled autocracy. But if Germany, as I am certain, is finally vanquished, King Constantine would step down from a constitutional throne to become a mere party leader; will have to submit to the consequences of the defeat of his policy, just as any other party leader when beaten."

RETURNED SOLDIER APPOINTED.

St. Thomas, Report.—William T. Collins, a returned soldier of St. Thomas, has been appointed by the Dominion Government as sub-collector of Inland Revenue here succeeding Arthur A. Luton who has been appointed inspector of Weights and Measures for London district. Mr. Collins has lost two sons in action, and two other sons are still on the firing line.

60 HUN SUBS. TAKEN

In Six Weeks, U. S. Hears—Experts See Entente Winning.

London Cable.—The Norwegian steamer Lars Fostenaes, bound from America to Rotterdam, with grain for the American Relief Commission, has been sunk without warning outside the blockade zone, according to the Norwegian Mercantile Shipping Gazette.

FOLIA IS TORPEDOED.

Washington Report.—Seven lives were lost and one American placed in jeopardy in the sinking without warning by a submarine of the Cunard freighter Folia, off the Irish coast, on Sunday. Consul Frost at Queenstown cabled the State Department to-day this report:

"Seven lives were lost in the sinking of the Cunarder Folia out of a crew of 75. The Folia was bound from New York to Avonmouth. She was torpedoed without warning, five miles off Ram Head, County Waterford, in a heavy fog, on Sunday, at 7.30 a. m. Dr. Core and the officers reached Bristol this morning."

SIXTY U-BOATS CAPTURED.

About sixty German submarines were captured and destroyed between Jan. 1 and Feb. 15, according to reports reaching here to-day.

This was the first authoritative word of the Entente success in coping with the undersea boats.

At this rate—an average of one and one half submarines a day—the success of the German submarines in the long run is doubtful, it is believed here. No information is available as to the number of U-boats Germany has available, though unofficial reports stated that she has 700 to 800.

Experts here think, however, that if the Entente can continue at the rate shown between Jan. 1 and Feb. 15, and can improve thereon, Germany will soon feel the strain upon this weapon and that ultimately she will be forced to give up its use.

ARMED GUARDS INSTRUCTED.

Complete and definite instructions to the "armed guards" to be placed aboard American merchant craft bound through the German submarine zones have been completed by the Navy Department, and approved by Secretary of State Lansing. They will be forwarded to the navy personnel aboard the merchant craft whenever the ships which are to be armed are ready to sail.

The nature of the instructions will not be made public. They were carefully prepared by navy officials and then submitted to Secretary Lansing, at whose suggestion some amendment was made. It is planned not to broadcast the orders generally through the naval service, but to furnish the officer in command of the armed guard on each ship with a copy when his vessel is ready to sail.

U-BOAT IS STRANDED

London, Cable.—The report that a German submarine has been stranded near Hellevoetsluis, on the Dutch coast, is confirmed by the Helvolka, says a Reuter despatch from Amsterdam. Fifteen members of the crew, says the newspaper, have disembarked.

WILL MAKE TEST CASE.

The experience of the defensively armed British steamer Princess Melita, which was forced by the Dutch Government to leave the Hook of Holland because of her armament, has raised an issue which it is believed will assume the nature of a test case.

It is stated the British Government will insist upon defensively armed ships being permitted to enter Dutch ports.

Negotiations between Great Britain and Holland regarding the detention of ships in Dutch waters is still proceeding. The British Government is unbending in its determination not to acquiesce in the policy of the Dutch in keeping their ships in their harbors because of the German threat. It is hoped that a compromise may be reached under which Holland can procure guarantees from both belligerents for a safe route for her vessels.

WHAT WILL CAUSE WAR.

In the course of an interview granted to the Copenhagen correspondent of the Berlin Tageblatt, says an Exchange Telegraph despatch, Count von Bernstorff, interrogated as to whether he thought there would be war between Germany and the United States, replied: "That depends on our U-boat warfare. If we sink an American ship we shall go to war. Nobody, I say, [illegible] can avoid it."

"And if," asked the correspondent, "Germany sinks British ships with American citizens aboard?"

To this Count von Bernstorff replied: "That is not the same."

N. Y. POLITICIAN DEAD.

New York, Report says.—Wm. F. Sheehan, former Lieutenant-Governor of New York, and a lawyer who was prominent in state and city politics in former years, died to-day at his home here.

Mr. Sheehan was taken suddenly ill last night on a train returning from Florida. Death was due to heart trouble. He was born in Buffalo 58 years ago.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

To those who have been unable to secure potatoes, and those who have not had the cash even if they were obtainable, the report of the government that there is a surplus of two million bushels in Canada will make them feel so much better. But perhaps the potato surplus is somewhat like the cash surpluses—merely a matter of figures.

Up in Bruce County, according to the Port Elgin Times they intend holding a big prayer meeting, to pray for the boys of that section who have gone to the front. The movement has been taken hold of by all the local clergy, and laymen will co operate in the programme. The idea is one that should commend itself to other municipalities. Who will be the leading spirit in Winchester.—The Press, Winchester.

The Detroit Daily News remarks: "It is founded on a rational belief, cogitated for many years, that the peoples of the world can get along with each other, in the long run, without hunting human beings with machine guns and submarines." To this the Toronto Telegram replies: "Indeed it is, and it can be done with the utmost safety if you are protected on the east by the British fleet, on the south by Mexico, and on the west by the Japanese fleet and on the north by Canada But how about it if you happen to live in a less secluded spot—Belgium for instance?"

Now that this winter, according to the calendar, is ended, it surely would not be viewed in the light of fault-finding if Port Elgin council were asked to provide and enforce a by law that the walks in the business section be kept clear of snow. The past two weeks has shown not only a very sloppy condition but a dangerous one. Vacant lots or vacant stores should relieve no one in the business section of the responsibility of cleaning off the walk.

Since the women are assured of the vote, local ladies are apparently preparing to take more active part in public affairs in this community. At the lecture given by Peter McArthur, Mrs D McTavish, made a very efficient presiding officer. It is understood that at the conventions of both the Conservatives and Liberals of the ridings of Bruce the women are to be invited and will take their share of the offices. And just here it won't be out of place for us to mention that the Grits have a strong advocate, and a good debater in Mrs. McTavish.

The increased value of sheep is giving some township councils in Ontario cause for serious thought. It works out this way. The law says that dogs must be assessed and that sheep claims must be paid. The assessors are able to get a line on only a small portion of the dogs, but when sheep are killed by dogs and the claim is made on the council the sheep are appraised at their highest value, which at the present time soon wipes out the revenue from the dog tax and makes serious inroads on the general finances of the municipality. Any person can see the injustice which is done to a certain class of the community, but the securing of a remedy is no easy matter Some municipalities have tried out the system of publishing the names of those who pay dog taxes, and the result has been fairly successful.

To conform to recent Government legislation, looking to greater security for those who put in their money, the Canadian Order of Foresters are facing an increase of rates for their fraternal insurance. The matter will come up for settlement at this summer's High Court meeting. As in the cases of the other similar organization which have had to raise their rates, the older members are somewhat harshly affected by the proposed change. Like many other people who are seized of a new idea which in the main is good, the organizers of most of these fraternal concerns forgot to take into account the unexpected contingencies, and so fixed too low a figure at the outset. And though when the change which has to come, to keep them solvent, does come, it seems to be an injustice, in the main it is not,—because those who have been in the societies have had low insurance in the days when their families were young, and protection has been afforded them cheaply. It has been like fire insurance. They have had good value each year. The real hardship comes to those who have taken out all their insurance in these associations; and now when they are old, find that they have to pay very heavy rates.

One of the most impressive occasions ever in Port Elgin was the united prayer service last Thursday. It was the culmination of a good suggestion made by Reeve Christie at the inaugural meeting of his council in January, that the town and townships might join in a service of prayer and praise for the allied cause. It showed a reverential spirit, when work, in the home, the business place, and the shop was laid aside to obey the call to prayer. It was a great privilege to enjoy the fellowship, and with one accord to humbly present the heart's sincere desire.

Many petitions have been sent to the Ontario government by municipal councils asking that the auto licenses be returned to the municipalities in which they are collected. Would this scheme make for better roads? In Bruce county $4,500 would be returned, while in York County they get about $275 000. Under the present good roads scheme, if Bruce were to enter she would have some of the York County funds spent here. As long as we stay out our money helps the other counties.

Last night the firemen met around the festive board to pay tribute to the work of their retiring secretary Mr. J. D. Falconer. "Done" has given his service for many years, and his retirement will be felt. One of his prominent qualifications was that of regularity of attendance at meetings. A little thing which means much in every undertaking.

A fine of $25 may be imposed on those who listen to conversations over the telephone. Of course, this is a special blow at rural phone users, but it applies to telephone operators as well. We fancy that most of the complaint of listeners is made by people who are just a little suspicious anyway. Usually, a person who eavesdrops hears something occasionally which usually cures him of the habit.

GETTING NEARER

We cannot think that the stalwart lads of the 160th will, as a rumor had it a short time ago, go to France as a pioneer, or building corps. We believe our people will hear that they will become part of the 5th division, and as such may be in the big things planned for shortly. Of course the plans of the leaders are not known by even the officers of any battalion, but we submit the 160th men are getting nearer the great fight, and they will be heard from soon in the midst of attack.

Every citizen of Bruce county should be prepared. Let every young man ask himself where his first duty is. Let every man, every woman, every boy and girl be found doing worthy things. Yes, the men in the 160th are getting nearer their supreme task. Are we at home ready for ours?

SOCKS—MORE SOCKS

This is the cry from the soldiers to the Red Cross women, and the women are answering that call heroically. The army is twice as big this year as last, and one wonders how the women will be able to knit two pairs where they knitted one last year. But they'll do it by enlisting more knitters. Women don't be afraid to learn to knit. Don't be afraid to say you can't knit but will sew. All are needed. Yes, the women are helping to win this war. Join with your local Red Cross. Join anywhere. This is the year. Save, serve and sew. The need was never greater.

Recruits Wanted for Production

Just as surely as lack of food is strangling Germany day by day, so plenty of food is winning the victory for the allies. The French armies, for instance, were never better fed than now, for France cannot forget the awful lesson of 1870—the failure of her food supply. To this she attributed the loss of that war.

To feed the French soldiers around Verdun, more than 25,500,000 pounds of food a week were required. This gives a faint idea of the colossal task of feeding an army. Canada and Britain have a huge army of fighting heroes on the line; every man MUST have plenty of food, in spite of a world shortage. Upon Canada's food production all principally rely.

The Farmers of Ontario Urgently Need Help

The Department of Agriculture appeals to men and boys to enlist in the farm help campaign. The Department appeals to men unfit for military service, or who find it impossible to enlist in the army. Do your "bit" by helping to increase production of foodstuffs. This is your hour of opportunity.

The farmers of Ontario need the help of retired farmers, of men following no occupation (retired), of business men who can spare a portion of their time. We appeal to all who can so arrange their ordinary affairs to plan to help some farmer friend, particularly in seed time and harvest.

JAS. GEORGE & SON

From the Vicar of Bramshott

Rev. Mr. Hawke has sent to The Times a copy of the letter sent by the Rev. A. F. Titherington of Bramshott rectory, in reply to a letter asking as to the burial place of the late Pte. Wesley Haug, who was killed by a motor truck shortly after arriving in England. The Vicar says:

"You can assure Mr and Mrs Haug that our "Soldier's Corner" in our churchyard will always receive reverent care. Some 40 lie there already, of whom 35 are Canadians. Pte. Haug's grave is marked by a little oak cross, with his name inscribed which is erected by the government. Later on we hope to have a permanent memorial, and a tablet in the church with all names. I am having a photograph taken and will send a copy. Meanwhile I am sending you a copy of the parish magazine which contains a notice of the burial. He was buried with full military honors by his comrades, and there is nothing more impressive than a military funeral. We are proud of our old church, and the churchyard is a beautiful spot. My sympathy goes out to Mr. and Mrs. Haug."

Bramshott Camp

Sure, a little drop of water fell from out the sky one day,
And nested on the surface of a lump of mud and clay
When the Government found it, it looked so wet and rare
They said "Suppose we leave it, and put a camp right there."
So they dotted it with "Canucks" just to make the mud pies grow,
It's the only place you'll find them no matter where you go.
Then they sprinkled it with rain-drops, just to make it nice and damp,
And when they had it finished sure, they called it Bramshott Camp.

Have You Written Home to Mother?

Say, may I ask you, worthy lad,
Whose smile no care can smother,
Though busy life throbs round about
Have you written home to mother.

You are forgetting, aren't you quite,
How fast the weeks went flying
And that a little blotted sheet
Unanswered still is lying.

Don't you remember how she stood,
With wistful glance at parting?
Don't you remember how the tears
Were in her soft eyes starting?

Have you forgotten how her arm,
Stole round you to caress you?
Have you forgotten those low words,
"Good-bye, my son, God bless you."

Oh! do not wrong her patient love,
Save God's there is no other,
So faithful through all mists of sin
Fear not to write to mother.

Tell her how hard it is to walk,
As walked the Master lowly;
Tell her how hard it is to keep
A man's life pure and holy.

Tell her to keep the lamp of prayer
A light a beacon burning:
Whose beams shall reach you far away
Shall lure your soul returning.

Tell her you love her dearly still,
For fear some sad to morrow
Shall bear away the listening soul,
And leave you lost in sorrow.

And then though bitter falling tears,
And sighs you may not smother,
Will you remember when too late,
You did not write to mother.

WILLOW CREEK

The Bruce Telephone meeting March 9th was opposed to listeners on the line and the subscribers are glad the bill to prohibit that sort of thing has been passed.

March 9th the Bruce Y. P. A. met at Mr. Fred Schnittker's, where a most enjoyable time was spent in games and music and song. Pte. Herb Fenton was an honored guest. Milton Dahmer tendered the thanks of the gathering to Mr. and Mrs. Schnittker for their kindness.

We hear the question asked "what has happened to the township S S organization?" We hope the same thing don't happen to it as happen to it as happened to Count Zeppelin. There are many prominent Bruce township men connected with the organization, and they should endeavor to revive the interest.

Messrs W. Schnittker and James Schmidt are engaged hauling gravel.

Miss S. Schwalm is with Mrs. J. Hyde.

Walkerton in 1867

The Walkerton Herald in perusing an old directory, published in 1867 at Montreal, says, "Walkerton at that time was a place of 700, the jail and court house were just being finished. There were five lawyers. One of the lawyers, R. Sutherland, was a negro, and as he was elected mayor, Walkerton, held the distinction during that time of having the only colored man at the head of municipal affairs in Canada

There were then three churches, one newspaper. In 1860 there were 35,000 white settlers in Bruce, being settled with rapidity not equalled by any other County. By 1881 it numbered over 68,000."

Helping Patriotic Fund

One of the energetic organizations for patriotic work is the Dunblane society. A short time ago the ladies arranged an evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Scott, where a happy time was spent and $25 realized. Rev. Watt was chairman, and a good program including Miss Hazel Webb, Miss Alma Fraser, Jas. Scott, Willie and John Scott, Miss Ewing, M. McKechnie, Flora McLean and Reeve Christie was carried out. A feature was a letter sent to Mrs. A. Rowand from a French soldier, which had been interpreted by Rev. Watt and read to the gathering. The letter was prompted by Mrs. Rowand having enclosed a note with a shirt which she had made for the Red Cross. A very amusing feature was the "fish pond". Refreshments were served and an hour spent in social intercourse.

Another section doing good work for patriotic funds is the McGillivray school 12th of Bruce. This is due very largely to the very competent and enthusiastic teacher of the school, Miss Nellie McGillivray, who taught every one of her pupils to knit Boys as well as girls. They, together with the sections, organized a society, which has made regular shipments of large bales to Red Cross and patriotic headquarters. Miss McGillivray has three brothers in khaki, one of whom, Sergt Neil McGillivray, has been wounded twice

The British Government is sending women from England to work for the army in France. They will be cooks, waitresses, motor drivers, storehouse keepers, etc. All women between 20 and 40 are acceptable. They work eight hours a day for good wages.

Not Premeditated

The following letter from J. W. Chittick, a former Burgoyne resident appeared last week in The Calgary News-Telegram, and is self explanatory:

Sir,—In your issue of the 26th you published an account of the death of our dear boy Ronald.

The account was to a large extent erroneous and we feel that it leaves a wrong impression and that it was not your intention to do so, but the account was from the reports you were able to obtain at the time.

Knowing our boy and the circumstances as we do, we are quite confident that the shooting was purely accidental. The little will which he had in his pocket must have been written in school along with other boys, as he used no ink here that night, when he had not the slightest intention of anything except fun.

In rummaging through my desk in search of a book-mark Saturday evening he must have run across the revolver.

Ronald was a boy who loved to make believe with toy guns and swords, and was not fully conscious of the dangerous weapon he was now playing with. On the other hand, imagining that he heard his mother coming, who was the only one in the house at the time, he might have tried to hide it in his blouse when it exploded. He was not upstairs in the dark at the time, but was in the living room down stairs with lights burning.

We are confident that he was not brooding over anything as he was a light-hearted cheerful boy.

We feel sure that you will be only too glad to rectify the false impression that has gone abroad from the publication.

J. W. CHITTICK.

Peter McArthur

The town hall was filled Wednesday night with a fine gathering of people anxious to see and hear Peter McArthur, the man who writes so entertainingly on many topics, and especially of the rural problems.

Mrs. McTavish occupied the chair in her usual capable manner. Warden Izzard was invited by the ladies to take part in the program and he made a neat speech on the growing influence of women in the political life. There was a short musical program taken part in by Misses Webb, Avis, Stephenson, Mrs D. Lamont and, Mr. R. E. O. Smith. At the conclusion of the lecture the thanks of the Women's Institute, under whose auspices the lecture was given, was tendered by Mrs. R. M. Lowry and Mrs Wismer.

Mr. McArthur in opening his address told some very happy stories, and noted that as he was not billed for any particular subject, he thought he would do as his old red cow, and if the audience were not satisfied with one class of pasture, he would try another. His reading from "The Red Cow" was the very best humor, and the audience was most appreciative. Still more amusing was the reading in which Mr and Mrs. Sommersocks try country life.

There was a splendid stream of humor all through Mr McArthur's address, and it was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

The more serious parts of Mr. McArthur's lecture centred around the story of how Neil McAlpine saved the settlement, the pioneers of Canada and the re-settlement problem. Touching, indeed, was his tribute to Canadian soldiers, who were privileged to go back to the land of their fathers to fight for the liberties which past generations had won for them. His tribute to the work of the Red Cross was also impressive.

Mr. McArthur dwelt particularly on the noble work of Canada, in the war against wilderness. Here he displayed a keen sense of appreciation of those who had fought and conquered the forest and gave to the Empire acre by acre the land which makes this country so valuable an asset to the British Empire.

Regarding the re-settlement of land he had doubts as to whether this could be done thoroughly in any given time by any particular organization. His study of the question had shown that it takes two generations at least to convince people that the land provided them the best opportunity for getting the most of the best out of life.

Mr. McArthur gave lectures in Allenford, Tara, Underwood and Tiverton and in each of the places there were large attendances The Red Cross has profited much in these lectures from a monetary standpoint, for Mr. McArthur personally paid his own expenses and charged nothing, while the community generally is enriched by having had the opportunity of seeing and hearing in person a man whose ideas are making the people think.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON XII. March 25, 1917

Jesus the Way, the Truth and the Life—Review.—John 14: 6.

(A reading lesson only.)

SUMMARY.—Lesson I. Topic: God revealed to humanity. Place: Christ was born in Bethlehem. John's opening statement is that Jesus, the Word, was in the beginning with God and that He created all things. John the Baptist came to prepare the way for Christ's coming. Jesus came as the Light of the world, but most of the Jews, to whom He came, rejected Him. However, some received Him and became the sons of God. The Word came in the form of man. Jesus came clothed in the weakness of flesh, and was subject to death.

II. Topic: Witness-bearing. Place: Bethabara, on the east bank of the Jordan. While John the Baptist was preaching and baptizing in the wilderness, the chief priests and Levites from Jerusalem came to him that they might learn who he was. He declared that he was the voice crying in the wilderness to prepare the way for the Messiah. He was not the Christ. Jesus came where he was and he told the people to "behold the Lamb of God."

III. Topic: Finding the Christ. Place: Bethabara. John the Baptist said to two of his disciples, "Behold the Lamb of God." One of the two was Andrew and the other was probably John. They became Christ's first disciples. Andrew brought his brother Peter to Jesus, and probably John brought his brother James. The next day Jesus started for Galilee. He called Philip to be His disciple and he followed Jesus. Philip found Nathanael and brought him to Jesus. He also became His disciple. He had been a [illegible] and he became a faithful follower of Jesus of Nazareth.

IV. Topic: Christ's defence. Place: Jerusalem. A few months after Jesus began His public ministry, he attended the feast of the Passover in Jerusalem. He saw the traders in the temple and drove them out, for it was wrong to make the house of God a house of merchandise. The Jews asked for a sign of his authority. He said: "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." He referred to the temple of his body, prophesying his death and resurrection.

V. Topic: The great Teacher. Place: Jerusalem. A prominent Jew, Nicodemus, came to Jesus, to talk with him. Jesus told him that one must be born again in order to enter the kingdom of heaven. He could not grasp the thought, and Jesus illustrated the birth by the Spirit by the wind. He told Nicodemus that the Son of man must be lifted up for the salvation of the world. All who believe in Jesus will have everlasting life. The truth that was mysterious to Nicodemus still endures and has been the comfort of untold thousands.

VI. Topic: A spiritual awakening. Place: Jacob's well, near Sychar. Jesus was passing from Judea to Galilee and passed through Samaria. He rested by Jacob's well while his disciples went to buy food. A woman of Samaria came for water and Jesus preached to her about the water of life. She wondered that a Jew should talk with her, but He said that salvation was of the Jews. He told her about her past life. She believed He was the Messiah and many of her people heard His words and believed.

VII. Topic: Living faith. Place: Cana. As Jesus came into Galilee, the people received Him. While He was in Cana, a high official came to Him from Capernaum, asking Him to go to his home to heal his son, who was at the point of death. Jesus answered his earnest request by saying, "Go thy way; thy son liveth." The nobleman believed Jesus and went home. On the way he met his servants, who told him that the boy became better at the exact time that Jesus spoke the words to the father.

VIII. Topic: A miracle of mercy. Place: Jerusalem. Some time after the healing of the nobleman's son, Jesus was at Jerusalem to attend a feast. He went to the pool of Bethesda, where there were many sick people waiting to go into the water to be cured, for there was curative power in the water at times. Jesus saw a man who had been sick for thirty-eight years and He healed him. It was the Sabbath. Jesus told him to take up his bed. The Jews found fault with Him for carrying his bed on the Sabbath. They looked upon this as a flagrant violation of the fourth commandment.

IX. Topic: Food in the desert. Place: Bethsaida, on the northeast shore of the Sea of Galilee. Jesus and His disciples went across the sea for a period of retirement, but the multitudes knew [illegible] and followed Him. He fed five thousand men besides women and children by multiplying five loaves and two fishes. Twelve baskets of fragments were taken up after all were satisfied. Jesus retired for prayer. In the night He walked on the sea in a storm to where His disciples were in great fear, and stilled the tempest.

X. Topic: Imperishable food. Place: Capernaum. After the feeding of the multitude, crowds of people followed Jesus, and in Capernaum he spoke to them, saying that they were following him for the loaves and fishes. He told them he was the Bread of Life. The Jews asked for a sign, but he told them that if they would partake of the bread of life, they would never hunger. The Lord would turn none away who came to him. Jesus brought himself within the reach of all who would receive him. He would become the life and salvation of the world, and no one would be lost.

XI. Topic: Redemption proclaimed. Place: Jerusalem. Jesus was at the feast of Tabernacles. He told the Jews that he was the Light of the world. He showed them that though they were the children of Abraham, they could be saved only through the Son of God. They could be made perfectly free through him. There is deliverance through him from every evil habit. The drunkard can be set free from the bondage of drink.

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—The world's Redeemer.

I. His presentation by John.

II. His claim as the Messiah.

III. His teaching and miracles.

I. His presentation by John. God's great prophet, John the Baptist, is known to the world only as the herald of Jesus Christ. His one great mission was to "prepare the way of the Lord." His one great message was to declare the fulfilment of prophecy in the coming of Jesus as the Messiah. He was faithful in pointing his disciples to the One greater than himself, in whom they might find redemption from sin. The consciousness of his divine commission made him earnest in his work. His clear insight into the corrupt condition of the people made him fearless in calling them to repentance. His full belief in Jesus, as the promised Messiah, made him confident in persuading his hearers to follow him and accept his teachings. In so doing he was the connecting link between the two dispensations. All that was foretold, all that was typified in the old dispensation relating to the Messiah, he declared to be embodied in Christ and his work for mankind. Clear, unmistakable words prevented any attachment to himself. Forceful, commanding words directed attention to Jesus as the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." His work was completed in making Christ known.

II. His claim as the Messiah. In matters of religious life the Jewish nation was so corrupt that the interpretation of their scriptures had been warped through the hypocrisy of its leaders and their beliefs were distorted by the traditions of men. It was therefore indispensable that Jesus should declare His divine mission and His equality with God His Father. In order to lead men to trust in Him as their Saviour from sin, He must first convince them of His divinity and so enlighten them as to prove that He was indeed the Messiah whom their scriptures had declared should come. He had to bring them to see that God was making Himself known to them by sending His Son in the flesh, and through His atonement for sin they might find reconciliation. To lead the nation to a right understanding of their scriptures, and to their acceptance of Him as the Deliverer, first promised after the fall of man, Jesus constantly declared His unity with the Father and the fulfilment of His will through His mission to earth.

III. His teaching and miracles. From the calling of His first disciples to the end of His ministry Jesus did everything openly. His first invitation, "Come and see," was characteristic of all His dealings with the people. That He came as the Saviour of the whole world, He made clear in His first interview with one of the nation's leaders, when Nicodemus sought a personal interview to investigate the claims of Jesus. Both to convince the people of His Messianic authority and to prove their absolute lack of piety and reverence in worship and adherence to the divine law, He openly rebuked the defiling of the temple where secular business had been established in that consecrated building. His authority was obeyed and acknowledged though the hearts of the offenders yielded no reverence nor acknowledged any sin. That all nations were to find in Him a Saviour and that salvation must be obtained by individuals, Jesus indicated in His conversation with the Samaritan woman. The hardness of the Jewish nation was frequently contrasted with believing faith among the heathen. That Jesus cherished and strengthened what He taught to be the essential in man's salvation was evident in His dealing with the nobleman who sought the healing of his son. Contrasted with the prevailing desire of the multitudes to see signs and wonders, it was indeed a great joy to discover a weak, though sincere faith. Openly He proved its genuineness and its possibility of perfection, and its influence in leading to personal and household faith in Jesus as the Redeemer. The indifference of the Jews to the real works of mercy and their strict tenacity to legal, although mistaken, observance of the law Jesus publicly brought against them in healing a man on the Sabbath day and afterward setting his soul from sin as he met his Restorer in the temple. Ambition in temporal matters with spiritual blindness showed how little the people were able to see that Jesus was the Bread of life. Jesus saw them as bondmen to sin, depending upon their relationship with Abraham. In His straightforward effort to set them right in matters of personal salvation He met their avowed rejection of Him.—T. R. A.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS.

Jesus the way. The Via Dolorosas of life are many and are filled with darkness and danger. The world's altar stairs that slope up through the darkness to God are broken and disconnected outside of Jesus Christ. Plato said, "The Father of the world is hard to discover, and when discovered can not be communicated." But Jesus Christ is the way to God, and he that hath seen the Christ hath seen the Father, and knows Him. The word "way" may mean the road along which you must go to reach a certain place or the thing that must be done to attain a certain end. Christ is both; but he is the way to God and he has done all that is necessary to make it possible for us to get there. A great ship is foundering in the sea. Land is in sight. What must the sailors do to be saved? Take the lifeboat and try to reach the shore. The ship is already breaking up. It is the only way. They take it and safely make the land. So Christ is the only way out of the storm and danger of sin. He is the lifeboat. In him is security.

Jesus the truth. The world is in darkness through sin. "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart" (Eph. 4: 18). The first temptation was a lie; and sin has been deception ever since. There are many minor truths that we accept but which do not bring peace to the soul. There is mathematical truth. But when a sinner cries for pardon we do not say to him, that two and two make four; it is truth, but it is not the truth he needs. He needs the truth "as it is in Jesus," saving truth. In Christ we have the truth about ourselves; the truth about sin, the truth about hell; and the truth about heaven; the truth that in Christ we have pardon and peace. It is this truth that makes free.

Jesus the life. Life abounds. Heaven is full of it; the earth is full of it. It is the great mystery. Science stands baffled before it. Materialism has tried to find a solution for the existence of life until many of her speculations are positively absurd. Jesus Christ is the Prince of Life (Acts 3: 15); "In him was life; and the life was the light of men" (John 1: 4.) Life alone can bring life. Christ was so intensely possessed of life that he broke up every funeral he came in contact with, and made such a gap in the domain of death that light, life and immortality have been shining through ever since. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10: 10).

A symposium. Augustine said, "I am the way, leading to the truth. I am the truth, promising life; I am the life, which I give." St. Bernard said, "The way, in which we walk by charity; the truth, to which we cling by faith; the life, to which we aspire by hope. The way in his example, the truth in his promise, the life is his reward." Leigh said, "Truth lies between way and life, as if the way to life was through truth." Thomas A'Kempis said, "Without the way there is no going, without the truth there is no knowing, without the life there is no living. I am the way which thou oughtest to follow; the truth which thou oughtest to trust; the life which thou oughtest to hope for. If thou remain in my way, thou shalt know the truth and the truth shall make thee free and thou shalt lay hold on eternal life."—G. W. G.

PRICES FOR LIVE STOCK—A REVIEW AND FORECAST

Prospects Are That Record Prices Will be Realized for Cattle, Sheep and Hogs During the Months of June and July—Don't Sell Now for Shipment During the Summer—Hold On to Your Stock.

The past year, 1916, has been a decidedly good year for live stock men, despite the high price of feed. Never before were such good prices obtained for all kinds of stock, and the prospects for the year 1917 are that prices will be even better and that all previous records will be broken. On account of the scarcity of feed and the difficulty of getting it shipped in because of lack of transportation facilities many farmers are wondering whether it will pay them better to sell now when the selling is good, or hold their cattle until the months of May, June, July and August, when prices are usually at their highest. It is the purpose of this article to try and answer this question.

Present prices for all kinds of stock on the Toronto market are record prices for this time of the year. Thus let us compare present prices for the third week in February with prices for the same week in previous years. At the present time choice steers are selling for $11, last year they were selling for only $8, while in the year 1910 they were selling for only $6.

Choice spring lambs at the present time are selling for $14.50, while during the same week in 1916 they were selling for $12.75, and in 1910 for $7.65. Hogs on the off car basis are selling for $14.65 at the present time, while last year they were bringing $10.25, and for the same week in 1910 they were selling for $8.90.

INCREASE IN EXPORTS.

On the average, prices for cattle are best during the summer months of May, June, July and August. Most men are busy with the crops during these months and receipts are light. This indicates that these months are the best to sell in. The end of July or the beginning of August is the ideal time to sell. The months of October and November are the worst months to sell, as most farmers are unloading them and prices are accordingly at their lowest ebb.

For sheep and lambs the very best months to sell are May, June and July. As with cattle the worst months to sell are October and November, but September is not a good month to sell either.

The market for hogs during the last three years has been rather erratic, but the best months on the average to sell are May, June, July and August. Chiefly on account of the war the export trade of Canada in beef, mutton and pork has increased enormously and is still going up. Thus during the year 1914 the year the war broke out, the amount of beef exported was 13,617,707 pounds, but during 1915 the amount of beef exported rose to 18,828,257 pounds. At the same time the amount of beef imported decreased. In 1914 6,284,842 pounds of beef were imported, whereas in 1915 only 2,982,433 pounds of beef were imported. On account of the high prices prevailing more cattle were sold in 1915 than in 1914. In 1914 the receipts of cattle at the Union Stock Yards were 269,124 head, but in the year 1915 there were 306,872 head shipped in.

In 1914 the amount of mutton exported was 65,167 pounds, whereas in the year 1915 the amount of mutton exported rose to 1,064,963 pounds. In 1915 moreover, the amount of mutton imported decreased by more than 2,000,000 pounds compared with that imported in 1914. On 1914 there were 177,940 head of sheep shipped into the Union Stock Yards, Toronto, whereas in the year 1915 there were 159,672 head of sheep shipped in.

The figures with regard to exports of bacon and pork are even more striking. During 1914 the exports amounted to 27,720,135 pounds, while during 1915 exports rose to 116,043,319 pounds. During 1914 imports were 19,215,273, while in 1915 they had fallen to 10,052,602. In 1914 receipts of hogs at the Union Stock Yards were 416,386, and in 1915 they were 423,976.

We have seen that prices for all kinds of live stock during 1915 and 1916 were good, but what of the future? What prices may we expect to get for our animals if we market them during the best months of the year? Of course it is impossible for anyone to say definitely what prices will be for choice steers say in July, but it is possible from a consideration of the chart to make a pretty good guess. Some farmers consider that choice steers will be selling for as high as $15 per hundredweight during the months of June and July. We believe this is within the bounds of possibility. The practice of many farmers in selling cattle in March for delivery in June or July is a poor one at any time but especially so this year. It is a safe gamble to keep them and sell them oneself at this time, as prospects point to prices being around $14 per hundredweight for the best animals.

In February, 1916, the average price for choice steers was $8, and the top price of the year, which was reached in July, was $10.75, the average for the month being $9.71. The average price for choice steers this February so far has been $11, if steers go up in the same proportion the top price around July should be $13.75, that is about $14.

In February, 1916, the average price for choice lambs was $12.09, and in July the top average price was reached at $14.56. The highest price for this month was $15. That is to say, there was a difference of $2.50 between the average February price and the highest price paid in July. The average price of lambs this February so far has been $14.30, so that if we add $2.50 to this we get $16.80, which is the price choice lambs should be around July.

If hogs go up at the same rate during this year as they went up in 1916, we may expect them to be selling around $17 in August. In February 1916 hogs were selling for $10 on the fed and watered basis. The top price was reached in August, when the highest price paid was $13. This February up to the present time the average price of hogs on the fed and watered basis has been $14.30, there was $3 difference in 1916 between the February and top August price, therefore the August price for hogs should be $17.20.

HEAVY SHIPMENTS OF CALVES.

More cattle, calves, sheep and hogs were sold on the Toronto market during the year 1915 than during the year 1914, and more animals of all classes were sold during the year 1916 than during the year 1915. The receipts of calves during 1916 were particularly heavy. This would indicate that less mature cattle will be sold during the year 1917. Moreover, during the past few months on account of the scarcity of feed and the fact that it could not in many cases be obtained at all, on account of lack of transportation facilities many farmers have sold their stock when otherwise they would have kept them until the spring or early summer.

We have seen that the tendency is for prices of all kinds of live stock to rise. There is a reason for this quite apart from the war. In 1910 in the whole Dominion of Canada there were 4,256,193 beef animals whereas in 1914 the number had dropped to about 3,263,521, that is, was a drop of about 1,000,000 during the four years. Prices in 1914 were about $2.00 better than they were in 1910, chiefly on account of the growing scarcity. In 1915 in Ontario there were only 935,606 head of beef animals as compared with 970,445 in 1914. If figures were available for 1916 we would see that there were less in this year than in 1915. What has been said about cattle regarding the growing scarcity is true also regarding the growing scarcity is true also regarding sheep and hogs. Quite regardless of the war, then, everything points to very high prices during the year.

We cannot neglect the great influence the war has had in increasing prices. From what has gone before it is certain that prices would have increased nearly as much as they have. We may expect prices to be well maintained for several years after the war. This is a war of extermination, and millions of men will be killed and more millions will be maimed for life before it is over. The best soldiers Germany and also the Allies have, are farmers and those who live in the country, and these are the first to be called upon and the ones who are given the most dangerous work, and are consequently the first to be killed. After the war, as indeed there is now, there will be a great shortage of farm help in all the warring nations including Canada. Agricultural production must therefore in the nature of things be greatly reduced after the war, to what it was before the war. This means high prices for agricultural produce and high prices for live stock. It is estimated there has been a reduction in England and France and Germany of 33 per cent. in the number of hogs and sheep in these countries, although the number of cattle has shown no reduction. We have seen, however, what a reduction there has been in Canada in the number of cattle during the past six months.—The Canadian Countryman.

SUNDAY AT HOME

HELPING HANDS.

A strong and kind hand to help the weak
And ease his load of care;
A gentle hand to soothe the pain,
It is so hard to bear.
A guiding hand to lead us safe
O'er pathway rough and steep,
A cautious hand to lead us safe
From precipice too deep.
A clapping hand to cheer him on
Who's lagging in the race;
A friendly grip if he has failed
To win the longed-for place.
The soft, sweet, baby hand that thrills
The heart at every touch,
The child's confiding hand in ours,
That always means so much.
These be the loving hands and true,
That serve and soothe and cheer,
The helping hand we give or take,
And bless it with a tear.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE.

Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.—I will bless the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth.—Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

Because thy loving kindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee. Thus will I bless thee while I live; I will lift up my hands in thy name. My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips.

My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

THE OLDEST REPORTER.

The oldest reporter in the universe was ever busy with note book and pencil seeking an interview. He did not write shorthand, but long hand. His note books are numerous, well preserved, and available to the chosen. What is marvellous, he lived in a land where they do not die.

The whole study of this active servant would be tedious; we only glance at an angle of his busy career. We take the evening hour, where notices are not numerous. In the dim and distant past we notice his interview with the Grand Porter. "Beginning to be merry, don't you hear the music and the dancing?" After four years he is at the same door again. "They began to be merry." Once he made a remark, "They are always beginning." Ages piled on ages. Again he returns to his gladsome duty, and again he writes down "They began to be merry." They never finish. They always begin, each day, each hour there is a new beginning. Century after century, cycle after cycle.

In the spirit universe it is always morning. In this world morning comes only once a day. These are all sins of the morning. When the clock strikes six God never puts the hands back to half-past five. It is ever on and on. Always beginning, beginning to be merry! What they have they hold; no back water in this stream, no undertone to neutralize the progress. The great spirit universe travels through no retarding medium. "Swifter than torrent, tempest, light, I fly to my serene abode;

A PUZZLING CASE

He was much downcast, as was only natural, as he saw himself environed on all sides by perils, and his enemies being unknown he did not know where they would strike next. His liberty was already gone, so perhaps he would lose his life next; for if it were proved that he had thrown the fatal bouquet, no denial on his part would hold good against such damnatory evidence. The worst of it was that he could do nothing but deny, as, saving Phillis & Co., he had no witnesses to prove that the bouquet he had thrown was a harmless one.

The only hope I had of saving him was in finding out who had denounced him to the police, and then, searching into that person's past life, as whoever knew that the bouquet contained a black carnation must undoubtedly know who had committed the crime—and may perhaps himself have been the person who had changed the bouquets and thus indirectly killed Mazzucata.

With Gilbert's consent, I engaged a good firm of solicitors to take up his defence, and they in their turn gave the affair into the hands of Mark Tancred, a rising young barrister, who had already distinguished himself greatly in criminal cases. Tancred heard all that was to be said on the subject and shook his head doubtfully over the matter.

"I'm afraid he'll be committed for trial," he said at length, "as he has at present no defence. Before the trial comes off, however, we must go to work and find out the real assassin."

"It seems impossible."

"At present it does. But reflect, Major Granby. Here is a Black Carnation—there is a gallows—a chain runs between these two, but after hearing all you have told me, I am sure that Sir Gilbert won't be bound by that chain. No; we will do our best now, but if Tressinger is committed for trial, then we must go to work in earnest."

"Yes, but the first step?"

"Will be to find the garden which contains the Black Carnation."

It seemed but a slender hope, still this conversation cheered my heart and also that of Gilbert, to whom I repeated it, so when the day of the preliminary examination came off, both of us were much more hopeful regarding the final outcome of the case than we had hitherto been.

Nowadays a criminal case is looked upon by the public in much the same light as a successful play, with this difference, that while the last is fictitious, the first is real, and attracts an audience for the same reason as did the gladiatorial shows of ancient Rome. What representation of the stage can compare with a drama of real life, in which the ideal villain is supplanted by an actual murderer who is being tried for his crime, and who will perchance suffer the extreme penalty of the law. In the Roman circus, the ideal Orpheus was actually torn to pieces by the bears; in the English law courts, the real murderer is fighting inch by inch for his life. You say that the thirst for blood has died out in these latter days, that the refined population of the nineteenth century shudders at the idea of gloating over the death agonies of a fellow-creature. Pshaw! I tell you it is not so. We have simply transferred the arena of blood from circus to law court, and substituted worrying lawyers for wild beasts, but the principal actor is the same now as then—a man fighting for his life.

To this realistic drama, therefore came the jaded Londoners, to see Gilbert's struggles with the octopus of the law, which would, if it could, squeeze him to death. From Belgravia came refined ladies, his intimate friends, who would not kill a fly; from St. James' street came those who had shaken hands with him a week previous, but would not do so now, despite their protestations that they believed him innocent; from the city came opulent stockbrokers, eager for a new sensation; from the Strand came actors, actresses and singers, to see the man who—they thought—had killed a sister of their craft; all these curious people crowded the narrow precincts of the court, to stare at the pale young fellow who stood in the dock with a terrible charge hanging over his head.

Outside the court thronged Whitechapel roughs; slatternly women from the purlieus of Drury Lane; drunkards torn for the nonce from their beloved tap-rooms by a stronger attraction than that of drink; and all the idle vagabond population of the town who have nothing better to do. All these discussed the case without, as the more refined portion of humanity stared at the prisoner within, and the opinions of both leaned in the direction of guilt, condemnation, of hanging.

When the principal witness for the prosecution appeared, I was astonished, for it was a woman; when she threw back her veil, I was stunned—it was Ilma Celinski. Yes, the woman who professed to love Tressinger, who had gone to Curzon street to warn him, was the chief witness against him, and on her evidence hung, the balance of his fate; liberty or prison, guilt or innocence, life or death. I was thunderstruck when she appeared, and glanced towards Gilbert, who was evidently as much amazed as myself.

"What does it mean?" I whispered to Tancred, by whom I was seated.

"I think I know," he replied, in the same tone, "but I shall be more certain when I hear her evidence."

She was a handsome woman, in a bold insolent way, with large black eyes, black hair and a voluptuous red mouth, speaking excellent English, with a slight foreign accent, which added piquancy to her speech. She gave her evidence in a cool and collected manner, but I noticed that all the time she kept her eyes on the lawyers, and never once glanced in the direction of the reproachful face of the prisoner. Tancred noticed this also, and I saw him imperceptibly smile as he wrote something on a scrap of paper and passed it on to me. I glanced at it and read as follows:

"I thought I knew, now I do know."

What did he know. I was puzzled to answer; but without doubt Tancred, learned in the subtleties of the law, had discovered some clue which had hitherto escaped my less experienced wits. I should have liked to ask for an explanation, but at this moment Ilma Celinski began to give her evidence, of which I here give a condensed report.

"My name is Ilma Celinski. I was born in Warsaw and am a Pole by nationality. For the last four years I have been lady's maid to Madame Mazzucata, and was with her on the night of her death. She was a very good mistress to me, and I was more her companion than her servant, being quite in her confidence. I know nothing about her past life before she became a singer, as she was very reticent on that point."

Here, the witness gave many unimportant details which did not apply to the case, and afterwards proceeded as follows:

"In Italy some eighteen months ago madame was much in love with a M. Dallas, who desired to marry her. As he wished her to give up the stage she refused to do so at first, but ultimately promised to marry him when he returned from the East, where he was then going. When M. Dallas left, madame went to fulfil an engagement at Vienna; afterwards, in course of time, she came to Paris, and there met with Sir Gilbert, who was much in love with her. He also wished to marry her, but madame, mindful of her promise to M. Dallas, refused to marry him."

I saw Gilbert start at this last piece of evidence, and with an indignant flush on his face would have spoken, but that Tancred made a sign to him to remain silent.

"Sir Gilbert," resumed the witness, "was so much enamoured of madame that he said he would sooner see her dead than married to M. Dallas, at which remark madame laughed, treating it as a joke. When madame came to England, just before the beginning of the opera season, she received a letter from M. Dallas saying he was returning to London to marry her, and Sir Gilbert, finding this out, had a violent scene with madame, which enraged her very much, and she forbade him to come near her."

"What falsehoods," cried the prisoner, upon which the witness shuddered.

"Silence," said the magistrate, severely, "you must not interrupt the witness."

Gilbert would have spoken again in spite of this order, when Tancred hurriedly arose from his seat and crossed over to the dock.

"Be silent," he whispered, eagerly, "let her go on. All this lying evidence means more than you think."

Ilma Celinski, at this point, without displaying any emotion, resumed her evidence.

"Madame was a very practical woman, but had one superstition, connected with a black carnation. She often told me that she would die a violent death, and that she would receive a warning in the shape of a black carnation. After Sir Gilbert had been forbidden the house, she received a black carnation." (Sensation.)

Counsel for the prosecution—From Sir Gilbert?

Witness—I do not know.

Counsel—Was Sir Gilbert aware of Madame Mazzucata's superstition regarding the black carnation?

Witness—Yes, she had often talked about it to him.

Counsel—When she received this token, did she make any remark?

Witness—She cried out "Gilbert!" (Sensation.)

Counsel—Meaning, I presume, that the prisoner had sent the flower?

Witness—That was my belief, but she refused to say anything more.

Counsel—And what did she do with the flower?

Witness—She placed it in a glass of water on the table, and said to me, "I have my death before me."

Counsel—When did all this take place?

Witness—About four days before the first night of the opera, just after ir | Homeopathic Hospital, Buffalo, on Wed

forbidden the house?

Witness—Yes; the black carnation arrived just after the quarrel between madame and Sir Gilbert about the letter of Mr. Dallas, when he went away, saying he would sooner see her dead than married to Dallas.

I was near Gilbert and overheard him murmur to himself, "My God! what falsehood. What does it mean?"

"On the first night of the opera," resumed Ilma, calmly, "which was the night upon which madame was killed, Sir Gilbert came to the hotel. After madame had forbidden him to see her, he had gone to Paris, but on the previous day he had returned, and wrote to her asking her to see him."

The letter produced and read in court was as follows:

"Curzon Street, May 15,1890.

"Dear Madame:

"I must see you. If not, it will be the worse for you. I know all about Dallas; he comes back to-morrow. What of the black carnation?

"Yours in haste,

"C. T."

The reading of this sort note produced a profound sensation, and seemed to many to confirm the guilt of the unhappy young man, as it contained a distinct threat, an allusion to the Black Carnation, and the name of Dallas. I own, my belief in Gilbert's innocence was for the moment shaken, but when I glanced at him, and saw how open was his look, how calm his demeanor, I repented of even the momentary treachery to my friend. As for Tancred, he merely smiled when the letter was read, and looked steadily at Ilma, who, catching his penetrating gaze, looked considerably discomposed. In a short time, however, she recovered her nerve, and went on calmly with her evidence.

"On receiving this note, madame was much agitated, and wrote to Sir Gilbert, saying, he could come the next night before she went to the theatre. He came just after she went, and I was left behind to look after some things which I was to take to the theatre later on. I saw Gilbert in the sitting-room—he had a large bouquet of white flowers with a dark one in the centre, and said he wished to give them to madame. I said madame had gone, but if he would give me the flowers, I would take them to the dressing-room at the theatre when I went down. He refused to let me do this, and said he would let no one but madame take the flowers, as they were meant especially for her."

A thrill of horror ran through the court at this last speech, for all present firmly believed that this was the fatal bouquet and this piece of evidence regarding Gilbert's refusal to give them to anyone but the dead woman was regarded as an additional sign of guilt.

"I had to go into the next room," continued the witness after a pause, "and as I went I heard Sir Gilbert murmur, 'I must let her know it comes from me.' The door of the next room—a bedroom—was open, and there was a mirror on the opposite wall which gave a partial view of the sitting-room. While looking in this, I saw Sir Gilbert take the Black Carnation out of the glass on the table and place it in the bouquet. When I came back to the sitting-room he was gone."

This evidence was dead against the prisoner, as all present knew that the fatal bouquet had contained a Black Carnation, and this then was the mode in which it was obtained. Ilma then took a drink of water and went on weaving the rope she desired to put round the neck of the prisoner.

"When I got to the theatre, I told madame all about Sir Gilbert's visit and the Black Carnation. She said to me that she did not care for that night at least, as he could not hurt her on the stage. During the opera I was down each act at the side wings in accordance with madame's instructions. When she was given the bouquet after the third act, by M. Ivan I heard her cry, and knew that the bouquet she held contained the Black Carnation. After that, the explosion took place, and the bouquet was blown to pieces, but afterwards, I went on to the stage and found this."

"This" proved to be a faded Black Carnation, which was handed up to the Magistrate and examined by him with considerable curiosity. Afterwards, Ilma Celinski stepped down from the witness box and left the court, having given evidence enough to have hanged a dozen men, let alone one. At least, such was my humble opinion, but not Tancred's.

"What do you think now?" I asked, bending over to him.

"I think I've got a clue to the assassin," he answered in a whisper. "Hush. I'll tell you all when the case is over."

There were several other witnesses, but their evidence was comparatively unimportant, saving that of Signor Ivan, who deposed having handed, to Mazzucata a bouquet of white flowers, with a dark one in the centre.

When all the evidence for the prosecution was ended, Tancred walked over to Gilbert, and had a short conversation with him, the upshot of which was, that the prisoner reserved his defence.

The speech of the Magistrate was dead against Gilbert, as indeed was the weight of public opinion, and he was duly committed for trial at the next Bailey sessions. After this, he was removed in custody, bail being refused, though several of his friends, myself included, offered security. The court gradually emptied of its throng, all discussing the case eagerly, and the reporters, who had been taking notes, hurried off to their different offices. I went with Tancred to see my poor friend, but only the lawyer was admitted and I was left to cool my heels outside, which treatment I resented very much, indeed.

As it was I had plenty to think about, and had just come to the conclusion that things looked very black for Gilbert, when Tancred came out again with a cheerful smile on his face. I must say that the smile rather disgusted me, considering the position of our friend; but lawyers have no hearts, and would hang their own fathers for six and eight pence. Perhaps this is a strong expression, but I have some money in Chancery which I cannot get out, so that will doubtless explain why I am so severe on the brethren of the long robe.

"Well," said I to Tancred, in an annoyed tone, "what are you rubbing your hands together for?"

"Because I see a gleam of light," he answered, gayly, as we took our seats in a hansom.

"It's more than I do."

"What, did you not hear the evidence of Ilma Celinski?"

"Yes, but that seemed to me to be bad for Tressinger."

"Not a bit of it," answered Tancred, quickly; "why, it is the best thing that could have happened. I can see through their little game."

"Whose little game?"

"Mademoiselle Celinski's and her friend."

"And her friend?" I echoed, in surprise. "Who is her friend?"

"That is exactly what I want to find out," he said, dryly, "all that evidence she gave was not her own invention, but that of a man of whose name at present I am ignorant."

"And this man is the assassin?"

"Yes, I believe he is."

"What does Tressinger say?"

"He says nothing, because he is quite bewildered by the lies of the little viper."

"I don't wonder at that," said I, sourly, "he thought she loved him."

"Bah!" cried Tancred, with derision, "she doesn't love him a bit—but she loves the other man."

"You have no idea who the other man can be?"

"No, but I'll know to-morrow after I have seen my client again."

"Tancred," I remarked, after a pause, "I think I can tell you the name of the other man."

"The deuce you can?"

"Dallas. Lawrence Dallas."

Tancred whistled thoughtfully, but made no reply.

BELGIAN RELIEF WORK

The American members of the Commission for Relief in Belgium have been asked by the Germans to remain at their posts, and the work in Belgium is therefore proceeding under exactly the same guarantees as hitherto.

The fact that the Commission for Relief in Belgium continues to receive large sums from the Allied Governments is in itself enough to prove that they, who are most interested, have no reason to believe that Germans are directly benefiting. Furthermore, the commission have effected an arrangement with the British Government on one side and the German Government on the other by which an acceptable lane for Belgian relief ships between North American ports and Rotterdam has been fixed so as to ensure the continuity of supplies.

The Commission for Relief in Belgium is facing to-day a monthly deficit of $3,000,000. Hence it is more than ever in need of the full-hearted support of the public.

To Set Colors.

The most common way to set colors is to use salt, about the proportion of a cupful to half a gallon of water, and before the goods are made up soak them in this mixture for a few hours.

It has been found by experimenting, however, that different colors respond to the different "fixers," as they are called, and that it is well for the housewife to study both her material and medium. Salt has been found most satisfactory in setting browns, blacks and pinks.

For blues use vinegar in the proportion of half a cupful of vinegar to one gallon of water. For lavender, sugar of lead is more often used, a tablespoonful of sugar to a gallon of water being the proportion.

NERVOUS CHILDREN

The Trouble is Often Really St. Vitus Dance—Do Not Neglect It.

Many a child has been called awkward, has been punished in school for not keeping still or for dropping things, when the trouble was really St. Vitus dance. This disease may appear at any age but is most common between the ages of six and fourteen years. It is caused by thin blood, which fails to carry sufficient nourishment to the nerves, and the child becomes restless and twitching of the muscles and jerking of the limbs and body follow. In severe cases the child is unable to hold anything or feed itself. St. Vitus Dance is cured by building up the blood. The most successful treatment is to remove the child from all mental excitement, stop school work and give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills renew the blood supply, strengthen the nerves, and restore the child to perfect health. Here is proof of their power to cure. Mrs. S. Sharpe, Oakville, Ont., says: "When my daughter was nine years old she was attacked with St. Vitus Dance. She was sent to a sanatorium, where she remained for nine weeks, without any benefit. Indeed, when we brought her home she was as helpless as a baby. I got a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and continued giving her half a pill after each meal for several months, when she had fully recovered and has never had a symptom of the trouble since."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"BUNCOMBE."

How a Colonel's Name Came to be a Term of Reproach.

Whenever I pick up a copy of the Congressional Record and numerous other publications and read the irrelevant speeches therein reported I sigh for the memory of Colonel Edward Buncombe, "Girard" writes in the Philadelphia Ledger.

Through no fault of the gallant gentleman himself, there clings to his name an unpleasant significance which many of our brave public men do naught to mitigate. Indeed, if there be such a thing as one shade's taking vengeance upon another in the future world Colonel Buncombe will at least pull out Felix Walker's tongue.

It was all Walker's fault that "buncombe" became a term of reproach, and the incident which made it so happened a century ago.

Walker represented in congress a district of North Carolina of which Buncombe county was a part. The county had been named away back in 1791 in honor of Colonel Buncombe.

Walker was one of those long distant orators who without half trying could empty the halls of congress and put them in a condition beside which the dead streets of Pompeii appear great white ways. When upbraided one day for talking about everything except the question at issue Walker used this immortal phrase:

"I am only talking for "Buncombe," meaning his home county.

And so "buncombe" became a new word in our language, which has been conveniently shortened into the colloquial "bunk."

DON'T GET ANGRY.

Value of Being Tough Minded About Snubs and Hurts.

Fits of temper are often a serious handicap, and the girl who is constantly "getting mad" is going to find by getting left when it comes to the attainment of success.

In the first place, anger has been proved to be a real poison. It exhausts you, and a violent fit of rage can make you really ill. "Sick with anger" is not a mere phrase—it is the truth.

But aside from its effects on yourself there is the effect on others. If you are constantly standing on your dignity and taking offense over trifles that were not meant to annoy you, you will soon be disliked in the office, and you are pretty sure to get mad at the wrong time some day and find yourself fired by some one tired out at your constant flare-ups.

It is certainly true that you find what you look for, and if you are looking for slights and insults you'll find plenty.

Suppose you do get a short answer, [illegible]. Make allowances for other people's worries as well as for your own. Don't think that the rest of the office is in league against you because some of them are laughing over a joke you have not heard. I know a girl who can't see two people whispering together without imagining they are discussing her and criticising her. This is a form of conceit that is particularly crazy and silly and capable in time of developing into monomania.

The touchy, irritable and suspicious girl is laying out a hard road for herself. If you have tendencies in these directions set to work to cure yourself. If you don't you will be pretty sure to fail in your work, and even more certain to fail in your life.

Colored Snowstorms.

Colored snowstorms were recorded as long ago as the sixth century, and a shower of red hail is said by historians to have once occurred in Palermo. In Tuscany, on March 14, 1813, there fell hail of an orange color. In 1808 red snow fell to a depth of over five feet in Carniola, Austria. The storm of colored snow was followed by one of the regulation color, and the effect produced by the separate layers of red and white, which were strictly distinct, was very peculiar. A portion of the scarlet snow was melted in a vessel and the water evaporated, when a fine, rose colored earthy sediment was found at the bottom. Snow of a brick red hue fell in Italy in 1816 and in the Tyrol in 1847. In the first volume of Kane's "Arctic Exploration" it is stated that when the ship passed the "Crimson Cliffs of Sir John Ross" the patches of red snow, from which they derived their name, could be seen at a distance of fully ten miles.

Fine Time

Owing to the fact that ex-Warden McCannel left for Montana hurriedly the Burgoyne box social did not get fully reported last week. When it is understood that the affair was purely a box social and $129 were the receipts it will be realized the school was crowded and boxes sold well. Miss Kennedy the teacher, carried out the plans and arranged the program and she deserves praise for the fine success for Red Cross work. Genial Alex McCannel presided and auctioneer Cavid sold the boxes. The program follows: chorus, the scholars; song, A. McDonald; recitation, Wilbur Byers; song, Ross Pierson; recitation, Miss Eva Cook; song, A. McDonald. Splendid numbers were given by the Pierson family and the gathering enjoyed immensely the music by the Burgoyne orchestra, and the Dunblane string band.

The following letter received by Hugh McLean, Underwood, from his son Lieut John McLean, will be read with interest. It is from the Canadian officers' Convalescent Home in England, where Lieut McLean is recuperating from his wounds of last October.

Dear Father:

Guess I'll not see you as I have just boarded out of hospital and am on convalescent leave until March 24th when I have to get another board I was awfully disappointed that they did not give me at least two, months so that I might make a try for home, but with the leave I have and the way the boats are running I thought I had better come down here and put in my leave

The other fellows down here are all homeless Canadian officers the same as myself. There were about forty of us here, and we all club together for our fun. Yesterday we were down at Windsor Castle

There isn't much doing around. The old war still carries on, and in another six weeks or so you can, I expect, again say that I am out at it again, hoping for better luck next time in getting home. Since Sam Hughes went out of office they have become stingy with their leaves.

Haven't heard from you for a long time now, but expect there's some mail on the way.

There goes the dinner bell so shall ring off until I hear from you again. With love, and hoping you are all well.

I am, your loving son,
JOHN

New President

Mrs. (Rev.) MacNab, of Underwood, is the new president of the Bruce Presbyterial of the Women's Missionary Society.

A vacancy was caused in the removal of Mrs. Hogg, and at a general gathering last week Mrs. MacNab was the choice.

The new president is a very capable woman and under her leadership there will be much activity in missionary work among the ladies.

Complimentary Banquet To Sec'y J. D. Falconer

The local firemen last night tendered a complimentary banquet to their retiring secretary Mr. J. D. Falconer.

The affair was held in the library. The meal was splendidly served and the program provided by the girls of the Soldiers Friend Club. They served the banquet for a fee the money to go to their patriotic funds, and the girls did it in fine style, too. The menu was good and heartily partaken of, while the musical program was also enjoyed.

After the dinner chief Geo. Chapman presided as toastmaster and after honoring the King a list of toasts was carried out, the speakers being: Warden Izzard, E. Roy Sayles, Duncan Falconer, G. McLaren, G. McMurray, W. McFadden, J. W. Pattison. Mr. R. E. O. Smith sang a very rousing song, and Ed. Fisher gave a very amusing reading.

Those present were: Chief Chapman N. Eidt, G. McLaren, H. Strathy, W. Falconer, H. Wells, A. E. Eaton, J. J. Busby, W. J. Campbell, W. Sparks, S. H. Langford, W. McFadden, G. McMurray, Ed. Fisher, J.D. Falconer, Warden Izzard, F. R. Barber, N. Eidt, J. D. Cottrill, J. W. Pattison, R. E. O. Smith, E. R. Sayles, C. Currier, Sol. Schrank.

A vote of thanks was tendered the girls who carried out so splendidly a full course banquet, by S. H. Langford. This was acknowledged by Mrs. Busby, after which all joined in Auld Lang Syne.

Secretary Falconer has been on the job for 25 years and he has proven a very faithful official. Just now he finds pressure of his business to great, and must let loose of some of his volunteer work. While the firemen regret his resignation, all agree that "Dunc" has truly done his share. The new secretary is Mr. F. R. Barber.

A farmer from near Rockford, brought a hog to Owen Sound last week, which brought $90.25. It weighed 690 pounds.

BURGOYNE AND DISTRICT

Quite an event took place at the Burgoyne manse, on Saturday, Mr. Robt Gowanlock and Miss Bessie McVeety, being quietly united in wedlock by Rev. W. J. Watt. The contracting couple were accompanied by the bride's sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs. McRae, of Saugeen. They are both residents of this community, and their wedded life will commence at the present home of the groom on the John Gowanlock farm. Congratulations are extended to the happy couple in their new sphere of life.

This community was sorry to hear of the death of Mr. Norman McDonald who died within a few days after an operation for appendicitis. Deceased had been in the west with his brother for a number of years and visited among his people here last winter. Although little hope was given by the hospital officials from the first, the appendix having burst, his friends were hopeful of his recovery, he being of a rugged constitution, but word came Saturday that he had passed away. The remains will be brought home to his parents' residence Arran Lake, and the interment is expected to take place the latter part of this week.

BORN—To Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Cottrill, Bruce, Tp., on March 11th, a daughter.

(Intended for last week)

On Sunday week Rev. M. D. Hallman, announced that he would speak last Sunday on when the war would end Taking for his text "Be sure your sin will find you out." He said that Germany started the war and would have much to answer for, but he believed that sin and disobidence in the allied nations were helping to prolong it. The low standard of social life in France, drink and immorality in other nations were a few of the many wrongs mentioned. He quoted Admiral Beatty as having said during the first year of the war, "Until a religious revival takes place at home so long will the war continue." Also spoke of Reeve Christie suggesting a day of prayer, and said that while many had sought refuge in prayer, there was still a spirit of indifference shown in that fifty per cent of the people in our own country, do not attend church once a year.

On March 10th, 1917, over eighty relatives and friends assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Ribey, of the 12 Con. of Bruce, to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding, and to wish them many more years of happy wedded life. The former bridesmaid Mrs. J. Nelson, and the groomsman Mr. Wm. Howe were present. A dainty dinner was served at 5.30 p. m. The table was decorated with pink and white tulips, and hyacinths. A social evening was spent in music and speeches. Rev. Mr. Hawke, of Tiverton, gave an interesting talk on wedding anniversaries, and their relations to the increasing value of the metal which they represent. Speeches were also made by Mr. John Howe, father of the bride, Mr. Wm. Howe, Mr. Wm. Jeffrey, Mr. J. McKinney, Mr. John Ribey, and Mr. Geo. Ribey. While all enjoyed a very pleasant evening, the absence of two of the bride's nephews, Mr. Amer Howe and Mr. Nelson Ribey, who are overseas, and Mr. Wesley Ribey son of the bride, who was unable to attend, was keenly felt. Those present from a distance were, Mr. and Mrs. Fallis, of Harriston, and Miss W. Blyth, Durham. Mr. and Mrs. Ribey were the recipients of many handsome pieces of silver which testified to the high esteem in which they are held.

TURNER'S

Pte. Albert Muir, of the 160th Batt., who went west a few years ago, from here, is visiting at the Muir homestead, Con. 2.

A number of Scotchmen, went to Port Elgin on Wednesday to see and hear the writing farmer Peter McArthur. Peter certainly has brought home the cows to milk alright, but as he gave us no new stunt to get them moving through the gate or doors when their thoughts are a far off, we guess he still uses the old tail twister.

The price paid for hogs here on March 13th, was $14.65.

Last Tuesday evening a large gathering of friends and neighbors assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McRae, Saugeen to bid them adieu before they left the old home to live retired in Port Elgin, and to present them with two handsome easy chairs splendidly upholstered.

Mr. and Mrs. McRae have been residents of the second con. for years, and as worthy citizens no one can speak too highly. Mr McRae is one of the boys who saw Saugeen change from the forest to wheat fields. At 16 he took a man's place and swung the cradle down the line with the rest on the farm he now lives on. Mr. McRae served for two years on the township council retiring voluntarily at the end of that time.

W. Rankin occupied the chair and John Bell read the address. Miss McRae very ably replied for her parents. Speeches were made by Alex Lamont, Peter McKinnon, John Bell, H. Dier, L. Eby, C. Nelson; songs by J. Schrank, W. Rankin, E. Christie, and violin music by Miss Leggat of Underwood and Wm. Muir. After a dainty lunch the younger ones enjoyed a good old time dance. Following is the address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. McRae.

You are about to leave our neighborhood, but we are glad to hear, you are not going out of our reach. A few of your old friends and neighbors have gathered here this evening to spend a little time with you before you go to your new home. We are glad you are going to have life easier in your declining years and hope you will often come among us. You have always been true friends and good neighbors and have spent most of your lives among us and are leaving many pleasant memories. As a small remembrance of us and for Auld Lang Syne, we ask you to accept these chairs and we hope you will be spared many years to enjoy them. Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors.

Wm. Muir.

News in General

Mrs. D. McFadyen 12th of Bruce, is very ill.

S. S. No. 10 Glenelg, near Chesley, at a box social held last week raised $325.

John Rathwell, well-known resident of Arran died last week, aged 79.

Sugar makers say that present prospects are good for a bountiful run of sap.

Miss Ferguson of Southampton, is visiting her sister, Mrs. S. George, in Bruce Tp.

R. C. Barss, a prominent Paisley resident, died at the General hospital at Toronto last week.

Mr. John Coates, druggist, of Mildmay, passed away very suddenly at his home early Tuesday morning.

Mr. Chas. Sang took a hog to Allenford last week, which brought him $85. It weighed 680 pounds.

Mrs Longe has received word that her husband, who is in the 160th. is in the hospital, having undergone an operation for appendicitis.

Mr. Reinhart has moved to his brother's property. Mr. Schwass has taken possession of the farm he purchased from Mr. Reinhart.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McCulloch, went to Appin last week, where their son, Rev. Douglas McCulloch was ordained and inducted to the pastorate of the Presbyterian church there.

Those of our readers who have neglected that little duty of paying their subscription are reminded that the present is a very trying time for all weekly newspapers. Let us have your renewal now.

The sending of soldiers' photos to The Times is proving a very interesting feature. Many friends of the boys secure extra copies to send away to other friends.

J. W. Hopper has purchased a Percheron stallion from a Beaverton firm. This horse was brought to this country from France in 1914, and since has taken a first and a second prize at Toronto fair. He is rising five years and weighs over 1800.

An Arran township farmer putting his horse in a church shed in Southampton, had it taken by some youths and driven very severely. Although the boys ware summoned, they were let off without fine. This won't be very satisfactory to farmers generally.

The prize list committee of the Agricultural society met last week, and revised the list. Prizes were increased in several departments. Present were: President Henderson, and Messrs. J. H. Webster, J. Scott, Wm. Howe, J. J. George, Fred. Elliott, W. A. Mitchell.

Harold Snyder, Weldon Smith, Edmund Rowlands, and Arthur Gilbert put on a picture show for Red Cross Saturday evening. In the selling of home-made candy and the draws for a jar of maple syrup they obtained $10.65. "Dunc" Falconer was the holder of the ticket which secured the syrup.

While John Rowland was preparing a celebration by the telephone from Palmerston to Walkerton citizens, for one of their soldier boys, he met at Palmerston, the train pulled away leaving John. The celebration took place but Mr. Rowland was not present.

Although there was no effort made by financiers to interest this community in the Canadian War Loan, the local banks were the mediums through which over $30,000 was taken up from here. Of course, there was considerable money sent to Toronto brokers, through their advertising.

Mr. John Nuttall, went to Toronto last week, and at the general hospital underwent an operation. Mr. Nuttall has been lame in his right heel for several months. Last week the X rays revealed a piece of needle over an inch long, in his heel. This was removed and Mr. Nuttall is improving rapidly.

There was a large gathering of Baptists at Paisley last Wednesday, at the Conference to discuss the proposed new standard of salaries of ministers. Addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Schutt, of Toronto and E. R. Sayles, of Port Elgin. Mr. Malcolm McNeill represented Southampton, Mr. Odell, Tiverton, and G. McLennan and J. E. McAuley, Glamis.

A scene rarely witnessed was viewed by the people of Brampton on Monday afternoon, a husband and wife borne to their last resting place at the same time. On Friday night last, Mr. Hugh Birss was in his usual health and attended the preparatory services at the Presbyterian church While there he was taken ill, but thought his trouble trifling. He retired as usual. In the morning he was found by his wife to be cold in death. The sudden and terrible shock was too great for Mrs. Birss, who had not been very strong for some time, and she too passed away a few hours later.

The illustrated lecture given in the town hall on Wednesday night, by Rev. J. H. Dyke, Field Secretary for the Muskoka Free Hospital, was a most instructive one, well calculated to educate people in regard to a disease which is one of the most ruthless destroyers of human life. Flies are the greatest carriers of this as well as other diseases. One picture was thrown upon the screen showing the stork bringing a babe to a home and a fly carrying it away. Out of 32 consumptive patients who went to the Free Hospital for treatment, 31 were cured, and of another 52 there were 34 cured and 12 others had their lives prolonged several years by the disease being arrested. Out of 245 patients now at the Free Hospital only 40 are contributing anything and these only small amounts according to their means. The attendance was small, Warden Izzard occupied the chair.

Want Retired Farmers to Help

On Monday Warden Izzard received the following telegram, from the Lt. Governor, John S. Hendrie, which is self-explanatory:

"The call of the Empire for more food is urgent, but the Ontario farmer cannot respond unless labor is available for seeding, which commences early in April. Immediate action is imperative if assistance is to be given.

Will your Patriotic Committee kindly call an emergency meeting and ascertain whether retired farmers and others in your community are willing to help."

The Bruce Preparedness League assembles at 4 p. m. Friday, and Port Elgin is asked to send representatives. A prominent member of the Resources Committee will be present to address the gathering.

OBITUARY

After a brief illness, a former resident of this locality passed away at the Homeopathic Hospital, Buffalo, on Wednesday, March 21st, in the person, of Elizabeth J. Nicholson, in her 46th year. An operation for appendicitis performed on the 18th inst. revealed the fact that complications had set in. The deceased was born and grew to young womanhood in Saugeen Township. For a number of years she had lived in Toronto, and later had resided in Buffalo. Of a bright, cheerful disposition she was always interested in the material and social life by which she was surrounded and her untimely death while at the zenith of womanhood will be deeply regretted by her relatives and friends. The remains were brought home to the residence of her brother, Albert Nicholson, and interment was made in Port Elgin cemetery on Saturday afternoon, Rev. W. S. Buckberrough conducting services.

Saugeen River Flooding

The ice jam in the Saugeen River at Dunblane broke away Monday taking with it the road, a culvert, fences, mail boxes and the telephone pole at R. McKechnie's. Phone communication to A. Rowand's is also broken. The buildings of John Scott, T. Stanton and J. Wallace are all high and dry, the flats and road getting the worst of the deal. The rural mail carriers were blocked from going through for a few days. Councillor Webster, who has that section to look after for the Saugeen council, is having things cleared up.
